CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

The following of the first party of the first party

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No.7877, entitled "An act to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll."

The beneficiary named in this bill is the widow of Jacob Karstetter, who enlisted in June, 1894, and was discharged in June, 1895, on account of a wound in his left hand received in action. He died in August, 1874, of gastritis or inflammation of the stomach and congestion of the liver. He was granted a pension for his gunshot wound, and was in receipt of such pension at the time of his death.

I was constrained to return without approval a bill identical with the one herewith returned, and which was passed by the last Congress, and stated my objection to the same in a communication addressed to the House of Representatives, dated July 6, 1886.

It seemed to me at that time that the soldier's death could not be held to be the result of his wound or any other cause chargeable to his military service.

Upon re-examination I am still of the same opinion, which leads me to again return the bill under consideration without approval.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 18, 1889.

The following message from the President was laid before the House, read, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives.

I return without approval House bill No. 9791, entitled "An act for the reltef of Charles W. Geddes."

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to include the name of the beneficiary mentioned, late assistant engineer in the United States Navy, among those who served in the Mexican war, and issue to him a land warrant for his services as assistant engineer on the United States steamer General Taylor during said war.

services as assistant engineer on the United States scamer General auring said war.

On an application made by this beneficiary for bounty land under general laws, the Secretary of the Navy reported that the vessel to which he was attached was not considered as having been engaged in the war with Mexico, and thereupon his application was rejected. Upon appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, he states that the settled doctrine of such cases to be that "service must have been in, not simply during, a war, to give title to bounty land."

The only claim made by the beneficiary is that the vessel upon which he was employed was engaged for a time in transporting seamen from New Orleans, where they were enlisted to Pensacola, and that he was informed and believed that they were enlisted to serve on board vessels composing the Gulf squadron then co-operating with the land forces in the Mexican war.

It seems to me that it is establishing a bad precedent, tending to the breaking down of all distinctions between civil and military employment and service, to hold that a man engaged on a vessel transporting recruits to a rendezvous from which they may be sent to the scene of hostilities should be allowed the same advantages which are bestowed upon those actually engaged in or more directly related to the dangers and chances of military operations.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3733) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and to provide for writs of error in capital cases, and for other pur-

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that bill is in exactly the same terms, except as to the date that it shall go into effect, with a bill that was passed by both Houses of Congress at the last session, but too late to receive the signature of the President. It has again passed the Senate, has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to the House, and is now upon the Calendar. It will perhaps take three minutes to read the bill and put it upon its passage, and inasmuch as it is in the interest of humanity to grant these writs of error throughout the Union, I ask unanimous consent that it may be put upon its passage at this

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be itenaced, etc., That there shall be, and is hereby, established a circuit court of the United States in and for the western district of Arkansas, for the northern district of Mississippi, and for the western district of South Carolina, respectively, as the said districts are now constituted by law. And terms of said circuit courts, respectively, shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for the holding of the district courts in said districts respectively, and terms of the circuit court shall be held also at Helena, in the eastern district of Arkansas, at the same times the district court is now required by law to be held; and also at the times and places in West Virginia, where the district court is now provided by law to be held.

SEC. 2. That said circuit courts, respectively, shall have and exercise, within their respective districts, the same original and appellate jurisdiction as is or may be conferred by law upon the other circuit courts of the United States; and all suits, causes, and proceedings now pending in the said several respective district courts, and also in the district court of the district of West Virginia, and also in the district court of the eastern district of Arkansas, held at Helena, in and concerning which the said district courts exercise circuit-court powers, shall be transferred to and belong to the jurisdiction of said circuit courts, respectively, and shall be proceeded with accordingly.

Sec. 3. That there shall be appointed for each of said circuit courts in this act mentioned, by the circuit-court judge of the circuit in which said districts are respectively embraced, a clerk, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law for clerks of circuit courts, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law for clerks of circuit courts, who shall discharge all the duties and be entitled to all the fees and emoluments prescribed by general law. And the marshals of the United States in and for said circuit courts ar vised Statutes of the United States, as amended by said last-mentioned act, and all provisions of law inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 5. That hereafter in all cases of conviction of crime the punishment of which provided by law is death, tried before any court of the United States, the final judgment of such court against the respondent shall, upon the application of the respondent, be re-examined, reversed, or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error, under such rules and regulations as said court may prescribe. Every such writ of error shall be allowed as of right and without the requirement of any security for the prosecution of the same or for costs. Upon the allowance of every such writ of error, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court to which the writ of error shall be directed to forthwith transmit to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States a certified transcript of the record in such case, and it shall be the duty of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States to receive, file, and docket the same. Any such writ of error may be filed and docketed in said Supreme Court at any time in a term held prior to the term named in the citation as well as at the time so named; and all such writs of error shall be advanced to a speedy hearing on motion of either party. When any such judgment shall be either reversed or affirmed the cause shall be remanded to the court from whence it came for further proceedings in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, and the court to whichsuch cause is so remanded shall have power to cause such judgment of the Supreme Court to be carried into execution. No such writ of error shall be sued out or granted unless a petition therefor shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which the trial shall have been had of record.
SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1889.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This bill seems to be much broader in its scope than was indicated by the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas. It appears not only to relate to the proceedings of the United States courts, but to create new courts. Before determining whether I desire to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman some explanation of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I can make a very brief explanation which I think will satisfy the gentleman. There are only five United States district courts which have circuit-court power. By this bill those district courts are so arranged that there shall be circuit and district courts in those five places, thus rendering uniform throughout the United States the Federal judiciary system, and compelling the present circuit judges to go to those districts to hold their courts, as they do at other places. So far as concerns the regulation of procedure, the last section of the bill provides for granting writs of error in capital cases only, and the machinery for carrying into effect this right is provided by the bill.

This explanation, I think, meets both points suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. I will state in addition that the machinery here provided is made to conform as nearly as may be to the present practice with reference to granting writs of error by the Supreme Court of the United States. The measure has been patiently and carefully prepared, mainly by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. Ed-MUNDS], and it met the full approbation of the conference committee composed of that Senator, Senator Wilson, and Senator Vest, as well as the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which subcommittee I have the honor to be chairman. I have never heard a dissenting voice in regard to this measure in either House of Congress. As I have already stated, a bill in similar terms passed both Houses in the last Congress

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, this bill proposes to give to persons condemned to death an additional chance of life.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. That appears to me not unreasonable or improper. Mr. ROGERS. It simply proposes to grant to a party who may have been condemned to death in a Federal court, the right to have the law of his case reviewed upon the record by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Which right he does not now possess.

Mr. ROGERS. A right which he does not now possess and never has possessed in this country, although in every State of the Union a corresponding right exists with reference to cases arising under the State law. It is a right which ought to exist in every civilized government on earth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not object; for the gentleman's explanation is satisfactory. I hope, however, that the Committee on the Judiciary will take into consideration the fact it would be much better for the interests of the people if they would seek not to extend, but to diminish the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The tendency of this bill appears to be in the opposite direction.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time,

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House bill on the same subject, House bill No. 11793, will be laid on the table. The Chair hears no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. McCormick, for four days, on account of important busi-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota, be printed in the RECORD for the information of members, as amended and passed by the House. there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 185) as amended by the House retains only the enacting clause of the Senate bill, the title, preamble, and body of the bill having been amended or stricken out. As passed by the House the bill is [Enabling act for Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico.] A bill to enable the people of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, to provide for the division of Dakota into two States, and to make donations of public lands to such States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: Section 1. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico, as at present described, may become the States of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico, respectively, or in lieu of the State of Dakota the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That all persons who shall have resided within the limits of said proposed States for sixty days, and are otherwise qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assemblies thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said Territories; and the qualifications for delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said Territories respectively persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assemblies thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed States, in such districts as may be established as herein provided, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionments by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable, in each of which districts three delegates shall be elected, but no elector shall vote for more than two persons for delegates to such conventions; that said apportionments shall be made by the governor, the chief-justice, and the United States attorney of said Territories; and the governors of said Territories shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in each of said Territories, to be held on the Tuesday after the second Monday in May, 1889, which proclamation shall be issued at least thirty days prior to the time of said election; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territories regulating elections therein for Delegates to Congress. The number of delegates to said conventions, respectively, shall be seventy-five, except in the Territory of Dakota, in which the number of delegates shall be one hundred and fifty; and all persons resident in said proposed States, who are qualified voters of said Territories as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates and upon the ratification or rejection of the constitutions, under such rules and regulations as said conventions may prescribe, not in conflict with this act: Provided, That in the apportionment of delegates to the convention in the Territory of Dakota the districts shall be so constituted that one-half of the delegates to be elected in said Territory shall be elected in districts north of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said Territory and one-half in districts south of said

Provided, That at the time of the election of delegates as provided in section 2 of this act, the constitution framed and adopted by the constitutional convention at the session thereof begun Monday, January 14, 1884, and concluded February 9, 1884, at Helena, Mont., shall be submitted to the people of said Territory for their ratification or rejection, and all persons entitled to vote for delegates under the provisions of this act shall be entitled to vote upon the ratification or rejection of said constitution. Each elector voting at such election for delegates shall have written or printed upon his ticket the words "For the old constitution" or "Against the old constitution;" which said vote shall be canvassed as provided herein for the canvass of votes for the election of delegates, and if, when all the votes for or against the adoption of said constitution have been canvassed in the manner aforesaid, it shall appear that the constitution has been ratified by a majority of all the votes cast, then and in that event the constitutional convention which may assemble in said Territory of Montana as provided in subsequent sections of this act shall resubmit to the people of Montana at the election provided for in this act, for ratification or rejection, the constitution so adopted as aforesaid, with such changes only as relate to defining the judicial districts, the salaries of county officers in counties organized since the adoption of said constitution, and such other changes as may be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of this act; and thereupon if said constitution so amended shall be ratified by a majority of all the votes cast at said election, the President of the United States may issue his proclamation declaring the State of Montana admitted as a State in the Union from and after the date of such proclamation.

SEC. 3. That at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in the Territory of Dakota provided for in the foregoing section of this act, each qualified elector may have written or printed on his ballot the words "For division" or the words "Against division." The returns on this question shall be made and the result ascertained in the same manner as provided in said section. And if a majority of the votes cast in that part of the Territory south of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said Territory shall be "For division," and also if a majority of the votes cast in that part of the Territory north of said parallel shall be "For division," then in both those events the following provisions in this section set forth shall take effect and be in force and all subsequent sections of this act shall be changed and modified accordingly, namely:

First. The area comprising the Territory of Dakota shall, for the purposes of this act, be divided on the line of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said Territory; and the delegates elected to the constitutional convention in districts north of said parallel shall assemble in convention, at the time prescribed in this act, at the city of Bismarck; and the delegates elected in districts south of said parallel shall, at the same time, assemble in convention at the city of Sioux Falls. The convention which shall assemble at Bismarck shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as North Dakota, or as Dakota, if said convention shall so determine, and the convention which shall assemble at Sioux Falls shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as South Dakota, or by any other name than that of Dakota which said convention may determine. Each of said conventions shall form such constitution and State government in accordance with and subject to all the provisions of this act the same as if the States of North Dakota and South Dakota had been provided for in the first section of this act, and mentioned instead of the State of Dakota in all the subsequent sections of this act.

Second. The State of North Dakota shall be entitled to one Representative in Congress and South Dakota shall be entitled to two Representatives in Congress until the apportionment under the eleventh census of the United States.

Third. The donations of public lands provided for in this act to be granted to the State of Dakota shall apply to and be granted to each of the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, as far as applicable, and Congress will, in the act or acts admitting said States into the Union, equalize and adjust the donations of public lands therein so that each of said States shall receive substantially the same amount of public lands, according to their respective areas, as are granted to the States of Washington, and New Mexico.

Fourth. The appropriation for paying the expenses of constitutional conventions and the compensation of the members thereof, authorized by section 18 of this act, shall be increased so as to appropriate the sum of $20,000 for each of the conventions in North Dakota and South

Fifth. It shall be the duty of the constitutional conventions of North Dakota and South Dakota to appoint a joint commission, to be com-posed of not less than three members of each convention, whose duty it shall be to assemble at the present seat of government of said Territory and agree on an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota, the disposition of all public records, and also adjust and agree upon the amount of the debts and liabilities of the Territory, which shall be assumed and paid by each of the proposed States; and the agreement reached respecting the Territorial debts and liabilities shall be incorporated in the respective constitutions, and each State shall obligate itself to pay its proportion of such debts and liabilities the same as if they had been created by such States respectively.

Sixth. If the constitutions formed for both North Dakota and South Dakota shall be rejected by the people at the election provided for in this act, the Territorial government of Dakota shall continue in existence the same as if this act had not been passed. But if the constitution formed for either North Dakota or South Dakota shall be rejected by the people, that part of the Territory so rejecting its proposed constitution shall continue under the Territorial government of the present Territory of Dakota, but shall, after the State adopting its constitution is admitted into the Union, be called by the name of the Territory of North Dakota or South Dakota, as the case may be.

Seventh. That at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota each elector may also have written or printed on his ballot the words "For the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885," or the words "Against the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885;" and if a majority of all votes cast on this question shall be "For the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885," and if a division of the Territory is authorized as provided in this section, then it shall be the duty of the convention which may assemble at Sioux Falls, as herein provided, to resubmit to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at the election provided for in this act the constitution framed at Sioux Falls and adopted November 3, 1885, and also the articles and propositions separately submitted, at that election, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government, with such changes only as relate to the name and boundary of the proposed State, to the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as may be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of this act; and if a majority of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall be for the constitution irrespective of the articles separately submitted, then the President of the United States may issue his proclamation declaring the State of South Dakota admitted as a State in the Union from and after the date of such proclamation.

And the Territorial government of the Territory of Dakota shall continue in existence thereafter and apply to that portion of the Territory not embraced in the State of South Dakota until the State of North Dakota is admitted into the Union; but the archives, records, and books of the Territory of Dakota shall remain at the capitol of North Dakota until an agreement in reference thereto is reached by said

SEC. 4. That the delegates to the conventions elected as provided in this act shall meet at the seat of government of each of said Territories on the 4th day of July, 1889, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed States, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby, authorized to form constitutions and State governments for said proposed States, respectively. The constitutions shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said conventions shall provide, by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States:

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said States shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed States do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said States shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the States on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territories shall be assumed and paid by the said States, respectively.

Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said States, and free from sectarian control.

SEC. 5. That in case constitutions and State governments shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, said conventions forming the same shall provide by ordinances for submitting said constitutions to the people of said States for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held in each of said Territories on the Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1889, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said Territories, who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate propositions, and a copy of said declaration, constitution, and ordinances

SEC. 6. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said States shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, except Dakota, which, if admitted as one State, shall be entitled to two, but if admitted as two States such number as may be provided in the third section of this act; and such Representatives, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the election for the adoption of the constitution; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution, respectively, and the States, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories.

SEC. 7. That sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township of said proposed States, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter-section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said States for the support of common schools: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for na-tional purposes shall not, at any time, be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character, be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reserva-tion shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to, and become a part of, the public domain.

Provided, That the rights of all settlers on unsurveyed lands under the general land laws, upon lands found upon survey to be within either the sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, where their settlements were made before survey or the approval of this act, shall be preserved, and where payment shall be required it shall be at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 8. That when either or any of the proposed States shall be admitted into the Union in accordance with the provisions of this act, 50 sections of the unappropriated public lands within said State, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions by direction of the Legislature thereof, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, on or before the 1st day of January, 1892, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said State for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

The penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Mont., and all lands connected therewith and set apart and reserved therefor, are hereby granted to the State of Montana. granted to the State of Montana.

Sec. 12. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $10 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. The appraisement of such lands shall be made in the manner following:

The actual settler shall, within one year after the admission of such State into the Union, apply to the court in the county or district where the land is situated, having general common law and chancery jurisdiction, setting forth the facts of settlement and cultivation in good faith and praying for appraisement and sale of such land, making the county superintendent of schools of the county in which the land is situated, or if there be no such officer, the county treasurer, the party defendant. The court shall thereupon appoint three commissioners, who shall be freeholders and wholly disinterested, whose duty it shall be to appraise such land at the actual cash value at the time of such appraisement and the improvements thereon, separately, under oath, and make report thereof to the court. The court shall thereupon make an order for the sale of such land either to the settler at the appraised value thereof or at public sale to the highest bidder, in such manner as the court may deem just to the public and the settler.

PROTECTION OF GIRLS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to present a privileged report. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Strike out, before the word "District," in line 4, the words "any Territory," and insert the word "the:" in line 5, after the word "place," insert "except the Territories;" in line 11, before the word "years," strike out "five" and insert "fifteen;" in same line, after the word "and," strike out the words "second or other" and insert "each subsequent," and in line 13, before the word "years," strike out "the words "second or other" and insert "thirty; "so as to read:

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee further recommend that the title of the bill be amended so as to read: "A bill to punish as a felony the carnal and unlawful knowledge of any female under the age of sixteen years."

JOHN S. HEMPHILL,

JOHN S. HEMPHILL, BARNES COMPTON,
WILLIAM W. GROUT,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives. CHARLES J. FAULKNER, JOHN C. SPOONER, C. B. FARWELL, Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape, respectfully submit the following statement:

The Senate amendments raised the age of consent to sixteen years from fourteen, as fixed by the House. This amendment the conferees agreed to recommend to the House.

The Senate amendments extended the operation of this act to the Territories and other places over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. The effect of the conference report is to exclude the Territories from the operation of this act.

The effect of the conference report is to change to some extent the punishment fixed by the House for the violation of this law. The conference report changes the title of the bill to conform to the changes made in the bill.

The conference report contains the bill as amended in conference in full, and for this reason a more extended explanation of the changes agreed in conference seems unnecessary.

ence seems unnecessary.

JNO. J. HEMPHILL, For Managers.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, it was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

C. F. HOLBROOK.

Mr. FLOOD. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 16, 1888.

Mr. Henderson, of Illinois, submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:
"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, to C. F. Holbrook the sum of $76, being the sum due him for services rendered as laborer of the House of Representatives from December 5, 1887, to January II, 1888."

The Committee on Account A.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution for the relief of C. F. Holbrook, have examined the same, and respectfully report:

The beneficiary in this case has been engaged as laborer in the Press Gallery since the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress. For his services during the sessions of that Congress he was provided for in the deficiency bills. Upon the assembling of the Ffitieth Congress he resumed his duties, but was not put upon the roll until January 12, 1888, and your committee find that he is entitled to pay for thirty-seven days labor at $2 per day, his usual compensation, making $74 instead of $76, as called for in the resolution. Your committee would therefore recommend that "$74" be substituted for "$76," in line 5, and as so amended the resolution be adopted.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Accounts, it was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. FLOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Select Committee to Inquire into the Importation of Contract Laborers, Convicts, Paupers, etc., having completed their investigation, respectfully report as follows:

The Select Committee to Inquire into the Importation of Contract Laborers, Convicts, Paupers, etc., having completed their investigation, respectfully report as follows:

PAIPERS, ETC.

The two principal acts regulating immigration are those of 1882 and 1885. By the terms of the act approved August 3, 1882, it is made unlawful for "any convict, lunatic, idiot, or any person unable to take care of himself or herself, without becoming a public charge," to land in the United States. The same act provides that there shall be a tax of 36 cents levied on every immigrant coming to the United States, and that the sum thus collected shall constitute a fund to be used to defray the expenses of regulating immigration. It is also provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be charged with the duty of executing the act, and it empowers him to contract with "such State commission, hoard, or officers as may be designated for that purpose by the governor of any State, and to provide for the support and relief of such immigrants herein landing as may fall into distress or need public aid." In pursuance of this clause of the act the Secretary of the Treasury has contracted with State boards who have charge of the local affairs of immigration at the principal Atlantic and Pacific scaports.

The committee have held sessions in New York, N. Y., Soston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., and Detroit, Mich. A great many witnesses have been sworn and a large amount of testimony has been taken, which is submitted herowith.

The great majority of immigrants landing in the United States are received at the port of New York; therefore he investigation of the committee was more extended in that city than at any other place. The local affairs of immigration at the William of the State of New York, by virtue of a contract entered into with the Secretary of the Treasuration and the greater portion of them arrived between the months of April and September; and during this period the daily arrival of immigrants is exceedingly large, sometimes amount branded name of the work-house of which they had recently been inmates in Ireland.

The investigation at Boston disclosed that a few years ago an organized effort was made by the officials of Great Britain and Ireland, through and by means of an association known as the "Tuke Society," to assist poor persons, paupers, etc., to immigrate to this country, by furnishing them with tickets for the necessary transportation, and that the number of such assisted immigrants who were landed in Boston between April 3, 1852, and July 8, 1888, was 4,922, a great many of whom subsequently became inmates of charitable institutions in this country. And by certain English statutes guardians of the poor are authorized to appropriate funds at their disposal for the purpose of exporting to other lands persons who have become public charges. That the English authorities have made liberal use of these laws is absolutely attested by the number of aliens who are inmates of charitable institutions in this country. In fact, the testimony upon the subject of pauper immigration conclusively shows that there are thousands of alien paupers, insane persons, and idiots annually landed in this country, who become a burden and a charge upon the States where they happen to gain a settlement, many of whom are aided and assisted to emigrate by the officials of the country from whence they came.

IMMIGRATION ALONG THE CANADIAN BORDER.

IMMIGRATION ALONG THE CANADIAN BORDER.

Along the border between Canada and the United States no inspection whatever is made of immigrants, and alien paupers, insane persons, etc., may land at Quebec and at once proceed to this country without any let or hindrance. The number of persons not lawfully entitled to land in the United States who thus arrive in this country by way of the Canadian frontier is rapidly assuming large proportions, and has become a matter of serious contemplation. The testimony shows that in many instances immigrants coming by steamer to Quebec have within forty-eight hours after their arrival there been applicants for shelter in the almshouses of the State of New York. At many of the points along the border no account whatever is kept of the number of immigrants arriving, so that it would be a difficult matter to state with exactness the number arriving in the United States whose landing on this continent was first effected in Canada; but from information submitted to them the committee believe that for the six months ending July 30, 1888, there were about 50,000 such immigrants who arrived here by the way of Canada, many of whom, by reason of being paupers, idiots, and insane persons, were not lawfully entitled to land. The charitable institutions in the county of Wayne, Michigan, of which Detroit is the principal port, are filled to overflowing, and the county has now in process of erection an almshouse at a large expense.

Sigmond Simon, president of the board of county poor commissioners, testified before the committee that this state of affairs was owing entirely to the alien immigrants coming from Canada, whom the county is forced to take care of, and that were it not for the alien paupers who are supported by the county no increased facilities would be demanded.

CONVICTS.

It was also shown that many persons belonging to the criminal class have een sent to the United States by officials of the European Governments. In Germany there exists an association whose object is the exportation of their incorrigible convicts and their vicious and lawless members of society. Quite a number of this class of persons have been assisted by this society to immigrate here, and they have succeeded in affecting a landing. According to the testimony, this practice has also been carried on by officials of Great Britain and of the Swiss Republic, and in this manner this country has been made the refuge for a great many criminals whose character was such that they were deemed to be irreclaimable; and therefore the officials of the governments from whence they came have purchased tickets for them, opened the prison doors, conducted them on board a steamer, and shipped them to the United States, some of them being sentas cabin passengers, in order thereby to render detection more difficult. And they have persisted in this course even after having been requested fluit. The result of the investigation into the enforcement of the law of 1882 demonstrates beyond a doubt that it has been and is being repeatedly violated, and to such an extent, in fact, that it has become a matter of grave concern and demands immediate remedial legislation.

CONTRACT LABORERS.

CONTRACT LABORERS.

By the act of February 26, 1885, it is made unlawful to prepay the transportation or in anywise assisted encourage the importation of aliens into the United States under a contract to perform labor or service of any kind, except skilled workmen in a new industry when such workmen can not be otherwise obtained. The Secretary of the Treasury is given the same power in this act as is conferred by the act of 182, to contract with such State commission or board as may be designated by the governor to examine passengers arriving at ports within such State, in reference to detecting violations of this law.

The enforcement of this act is not essily accomplished. Evasions of the law are much more numerous than convictions, for the reason that it is a difficult matter to prove in court a violation of it. The committee have discovered some cases of actual transgression of the act, but still the instances of failure to obey the letter of the law have been, comparatively speaking, few, yet the proof disclosed that the spirit of the law has been violated with impunity. A reference to the testimony will show that it is constantly evaded to a large extent, and also the manner in which it is done.

In the opinion of the committee the non-enforcement of these acts of 1882 and 1885 is not so much due to a want of diligence on the part of the officials having their administration in charge as it is to a lack of proper machinery to carry them into effect. The committee believe that the enforcement of all acts designed to regulate immigration should be intrusted to the Federal Government and not to the States. The regulation of immigration is a matter affecting the whole Union, and is pre-eminently a proper subject for Federal control.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

In view of the limited time at the disposal of the committee no effort has been made to investigate Chinese immigration.

IMMIGRATION GENERALLY.

The resolution under which the committee was appointed directs the investigation of alleged violations of our laws regulating immigration. In the outset it became apparent to the committee that this question was so interwoven with the general subject of immigration that it would be difficult to separate them; consequently the committee have taken considerable testimony upon the question of the class and character of immigrants arriving in the United States within the past six or eight years, and also the object and motive inducing them to come here.

It can not be gainsaid that immigration in the past has been an important factor in the growth and development of this Republic. The persons, generally speaking, who have sought homes in America have been largely composed of honest, industrious people, who, by reason of a wish to benefit their condition and being in sympathy with our form of government, have come among us and proved a most desirable addition to our population. They have gone into the great West and, by their industry, frugality, and thrift, have aided in turning the wilderness into prosperous and thriving States and Territories; and having become thoroughly imbued with the spirit and genius of our institutions, they have harmonized with our population and ripened into law-abiding and worthy citizens.

become thoroughly imbued with the spirit and genius of our institutions, they have harmonized with our population and ripened into law-abiding and worthy eitizens.

But can this be said of a large portion of the immigrants we are now receiving? The committee believe not. From the inquiry they have made they believe that the time has now come to draw the line, to select the good from the bad, and to sift the wheat from the chaft. To any person familiar with the results of the committee's investigation it must be apparent that this country can not properly assimilate the immigration now coming to our shores.

Take the class of persons known as anarchists, for instance. A few years ago they principally lived in Germany. The officials of that Empire determined to get rid of them. Their newspapers were suppressed; they were forbidden to hold meetings; they were prosecuted in different ways, until Germany became an unpleasant abiding place for them. They then immigrated to England in large numbers, but the officials there made is so uncomfortable for them that they came to the United States. Here they have proven a lawless, turbulent class, and the whole country is familiar with their recent acts of violence.

These disorderly persons do not come here to uphold and maintain our form of government. Their object and purpose is to destroy and tear it to pieces. They hold any law in contempt which does not meet with their individual approbation, and believe disobedience to it is perfectly justifiable. This class of persons, in the judgment of the committee, ought to be rigidly excluded from entering this country.

Generally speaking, the class of immigrants who have lately been imported and employed in the coal regions of this country are not such, in the opinion of the committee, as would make desirable inhabitants of the United States. They are of a very low order of intelligence. They do not come here with the intention of becoming citizens; their whole purpose being to accumulate by parsimonious, rigid, and unbeatthy ber of immigrants who have thus been induced to come to the United States can not be exactly stated, but it amounts to many thousands.

A practice has prevailed among certain foreigners residing in this country of importing men for the purpose of contracting them to perform service chiefly in the construction of railroads. The principal is connected with numerous agents in Europe, who scour the country, picking up laborers. The agent pays the expense of bringing them to the United States, but takes an agreement from each one to repay to the principal, within a certain time, a sum usually more than twice as large as the actual cost of the transportation. Upon their arrival they are entirely under the control of the principal, and are subject to many impositions and frauds at his hands, and in some instances are kept in almost a state of slavery. They come here with no intention of becoming citizens, but merely for the purpose of accumulating a small sum of money, with which to return to their homes. If sickness or distress overtakes them in this country, they become public charges. Many thousands have been brought here in this manner.

Along the frontier bordering upon Canada it is the practice for aliens to perform labor in the United States, coming over in the morning and returning to Canada in the evening. At Detroit, in the State of Michigan, it was ascertained that a great many aliens are so employed, notably in the building trades. The testimony shows that about eight hundred carpenters and joiners, subjects of Great Britain, perform labor in that city, and that about the same number of American citizens of that occupation are lying idle because they can not obtain employment.

The committee will not particularize further, but ask that the testimony be carefully perused. Certainly the effect of the present unrestricted system of immigration as applicable to the conditions under consideration upon the industrial situation of this country has been very bad, and the committee believe that the time has come when immigration should be more effectively regulated; that persons who immigrate to the United States should at least be composed of those who in good faith desire to become its citizens and are worthy to be such.

REPORTS OF CONSULS.

Soon after the appointment of the committee certain inquiries were propounded and submitted through the Department of State to our ministers and consuls in Europe. The replies to these inquires will be printed in a separate document. Attention is called to these reports. They corroborate the views of the committee as gleaned from the investigation in the United States, and show added reasons why immigration should be further regulated.

The committee report back H.R. 11633 with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the bill reported herewith. The committee believe that if the substitute bill should become a law it would effectually remedy the evils with which this subject is now surrounded; and therefore recommend that the substitute bill do pass. The committee report back H.R. 11685 and recommend that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. FORD. I move that the two bills just reported back, and for which the committee has reported a substitute, be laid on the table. There being no objection, bills of the following titles were laid on the

A bill (H. R. 11633) to regulate immigration; and A bill (H. R. 11685) to amend chapter 184 of the laws of 1885, en-titled "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," as the same was amended by chapter 22 of the laws of 1887, approved February 23, 1887.

The SPEAKER. That consent has been given.

Mr. GUENTHER. And also to be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that request had better be made when the report is presented. The report of the committee will be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning, but the views of the minority may not be ready for submission.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then I would ask unanimous consent now that when the views of the minority are prepared they may have leave to print them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. Spinola, from the Special Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report:

That he disagrees with the report of the majority of the committee both in regard to the report of the committee and the bill reported for the consideration of the House.

The undersigned is opposed to a head-money tax of more than $1 for each immigrant, believing this sum sufficient to meet all the required expenses necessary to conduct the Department of Immigration.

The undersigned also disagrees with the majority of the committee in regard to any change of existing law limiting the number of passengers to each 100 tons of the vessel conveying the immigrant, as the safeguards of the present law are sufficient protection to the immigrant, and therefore require no change. The undersigned is of the opinion that the committee was only charged with the duty of making a thorough and full investigation, and to report a bill to effectually protect the country from a flood of paupers, lunatics, idiots, and cripples entirely incapable of self-support, thereby becoming a charge upon the country, adding greatly to the burthens of the people.

Another subject of investigation requiring consideration by the committee was not only to check but to prevent the influx of criminals into this country, as well as to thoroughly wipe out the unjust and injurious system of the importation of laborers and mechanics under contracts made abroad at a very much less rate of compensation than the wages paid in this country, to the great injury of our own mechanics and workingmen. So far as the report and bill of the majority of the committee deal with the three propositions last above referred to, the undersigned is prepared to go any length in advocacy of the passage of a proper measure to furnish absolute protection, in order to shutout paupers, lunatics, idiots, cripples, and thieved, as 'well as all other evil-doers, who come here to practice their wickedness and fill our poor-houses and prisons.

I am unqualifiedly opposed to the passage of any

I am unqualifiedly opposed to the passage of any law that will in any way check or stop the influx of honest immigration, believing that our happy and prosperous country will in the future as in the past continue to receive with open arms every honest, industrious man who may seek a home among us for the purpose of improving and benefiting his condition in life, whether such comer may be worth one dollar or one million of dollars.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

F. B. SPINOLA.

The request of Mr. RANDALL that committees should have leave to file reports at the desk was agreed to.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's ALLEY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11099) to close, condemn, and sell part of the alley in square 288; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURY LAW IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ATKINSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 11587) to amend sections 851, 857, 858, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, Mr. ATKINSON also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, in the nature of a substitute for the foregoing, a bill (H. R. 12291) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the jury law in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will also report the provision of the bill against which the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes for harbor defense: For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them for closing the channels leading to our principal scaports; for needful casements and cable galleries to render it possible to operate submarine mines; for continuing torpedo experiments, and for practical instruction of engineer troops in the details of the service, $330,000.

Mr. SAYERS. As this matter has been discussed, if no other gentleman desires to speak on the point of order I will ask a decision of the Chair.

Mr. ADAMS. Permit me to occupy a few moments. If the Chair is disposed to sustain the point of order I ask to call the attention of the Chair to the language of line 12 on page 1, and line 1 on page 2, which provides:

For needful casements and cable galleries to render it possible to operate sub-marine mines.

I simply ask the attention of the Chair to this provision, because even if the point of order should be sustained as a whole, it can not be sustained as to these two lines, the argument being as to the rest of it that a torpedo was a weapon, but this is not a weapon but a fortification or a part of a fortification, where the guns can be used or discharged, or properly managed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas does not wish to proceed. In the confusion prevailing I could not hear his statement.

Mr. SAYERS. As the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Illinois have already spoken upon the point of order, I suggested that if no further discussion be desired I would have nothing additional to say, but would ask a decision of the Chair.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I should be glad to be heard for a few moments longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Whenever the Chair is ready to give attention

I will proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the gentleman proceeds the Chair will give attention. Mr. CUTCHEON. The question to which I desire particularly now to call the attention of the Chair is the limitation of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations as relating to fortifications. As I remarked to the Chair when this question was last before the House, the question of the jurisdiction of all matters of public defense and of the military establishment is confided to the Military Committee. I also stated that out of that general jurisdiction there was a lesser jurisdiction carved which is confided to the Committee on Appropriations, and that lesser jurisdiction is conferred simply by the words used in the rule, "for torpedoes."

On a former day I submitted some observations in regard to the limitations on the words "for fortifications." Now I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the entitling of the bill submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. It is a bill—

Making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the mament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes

And he proposes to bring all of that caption, with all that it embraces, in under the two words "for fortifications."

Now I turn to the Book of Estimates. It will be remembered that this bill is based upon the estimates for public works, which are to be found on page 170 of the Book of Estimates. I submit, sir, that "other works of defense" are not necessarily fortifications. The point I attempted to make the other day is this, and I think it is an irrefragable position in law, that where a general jurisdiction is conferred upon one tribunal or upon one body, and out of that jurisdiction a lesser jurisdiction is carved, the words defining the lesser jurisdiction must be strictly construed.

I repeat that position to-day. I claim that the Committee on Appropriations must confine itself in the preparation of its bill to works of fortifications, and that they are not at liberty under the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the rule, without any reference whatever to the order made by the House itself—that they are not at liberty to bring in a bill for other works of defense, like torpedoes, for instance, for the armament of fortifications, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, etc. Even if after the order made by the House upon the resolution passed by the House reported from the Committee on ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations should, under the general term "fortifications," have had jurisdiction of this matter, under this resolution which provides that "so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including the appropriations therefor, and to providing an armament for defense on the seacoast be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs," it is absolutely impossible for that committee to take jurisdiction of this subject, because the whole matter of seacoast defenses on this defense on the mere questions. cause the whole matter of seacoast defenses outside of the mere question of the establishment of fortifications is confided to the Military Committee.

The terms used in this bill, "torpedoes for harbor defense, for the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them, for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports, for needful casements," I suppose it means casemates, "and cable galleries to render it possible to operate submarine lines," etc., do not come under the head of fortifications in any proper acceptation of the word, but are a part of the military establishment, a part of the defense of the seacoast, and have been by the rules, as well as the late order of the House, confided to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I understand that this House has in no way committed this matter to the Committee on Appropriations. They must take it under their general jurisdiction or under a special order of this House, or they can not take it at all.

Now, the gentlemen upon the other side, the Appropriations Committee, the other day in discussing this matter referred to the fact that a like order was in existence in the Forty-ninth Congress; that at the first session of that Congress, notwithstanding that order, the Appropriations Committee did bring in a bill somewhat similar to the present bill, and the House entertained it.

Mr. Chairman, if you will examine the RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress, as I think you have no doubt done, because I believe you participated in that debate, no point of order was ever made upon the bill; no question was ever raised in regard to it in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. In the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress no fortification bill was brought in, and no fortification bill became a law at either session of the Forty-ninth Congress. Now, in the absence of a point of order ever having been made, the other side can take nothing from the simple absence of a point of order being made. There was no decision of the Chair whatever.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend permit me to ask him a a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does not the uniform practice of the House operate as a construction of the rules—
Mr. CUTCHEON. I will come to that directly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And the gentleman will admit that the bill, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, conforms to uniform practice?

Mr. CUTCHEON. My distinguished friend from Ohio asks if the uniform practice of the House does not settle the jurisdiction of the committee in this matter. I noticed this in reply to the gentleman from Texas when he raised that point here, and said that for more than fifty years similar appropriation bills for fortifications had been brought in, and that in the Forty-ninth Congress the Committee on Appropriations had unquestioned jurisdiction of this entire bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But when the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of both bills the line was as sharply drawn in defining the jurisdiction of each bill as it is now.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman says that there was no question made in the Forty-ninth Congress. Now, so that he may answer, I desire to call his attention to the proceedings of the House as they appear in volume 85, page 1546, of the RECORD, when a bill was introduced to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, and for other purposes, and the question was raised in the House as to which committee this bill should be referred. The Speaker decided that it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That was the naval bill, as I understand the

Mr. SAYERS. I think that the gentleman himself took part in the debate upon the proposition to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, and insisted that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That was in the first session of this Congress. Mr. SAYERS. It was in the second session of the Forty-ninth Con-

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think the gentleman will find that it was in the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. It was on the 9th day of February, 1887.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no recollection of anything of the kind. Mr. SAYERS. I will send the book to the gentleman so that he may refresh his memory.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not desire unnecessarily to prolong this debate. I desire to state my position, and leave it to the Chair. Support of order was made in the Fortypose that I am correct that no point of order was made in the Fortyninth Congress against the Committee on Appropriations having jurisdiction of this so-called fortification bill. In the Fiftieth Congress, at the first session, there was but one subject embraced in the President's message, and therefore there was no apportionment of the subject of fortifications to any committee, and no resolution was passed or order made. Therefore, in the first session of the Congress that question rested solely upon the rule, without reference to any resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my friend allow me to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations did not take jurisdiction of this appropriation in the Forty-ninth Congress. There was no fortification bill in that Congress.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Committee on Military Affairs in the Fortyninth Congress, at the second session, did take jurisdiction of the entire subject of armament. It also reported a bill from that committee unanimously for armament, through General Bragg, its chairman, and was put by him on the Calendar, but was never reached for action.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me, as he seems to have forgotten what transpired in the early part of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, to have read the RECORD of the 9th day of February, 1887, in reference to the fortification bill which came over from

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker also laid before the House the bill (S.662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. McAddoo, Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order with reference to this bill that the gentleman from Michigan made with regard to the preceding bill, that under clause 2 of the eleventh rule, which provides that all proposed legislation relating to the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, this bill should be so re-ing the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, this bill should be so referred.

Mr. Reed. I ask that the bill be read for the information of the House,
The bill was read at length.

Mr. Reed. I make the same parliamentary inquiry as to this bill that was made with reference to the other—that is to say, if it goes to the Committee on Appropriations will that committee be at liberty to report at any time?

The Speaker. The Chair will state that so much of this bill as relates to the procurement of ordnance, guns, has usually, the Chair thinks, been included in the sundry civil appropriation bill when any appropriation was made for that purpose at all, and the remainder of the bill, providing armor for fortifications, is a subject over which the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction by the express terms of the rule of the House. The Chair thinks, therefore, this bill properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Reed. And they can report at any time for consideration?

The Speaker. The Chair has already stated its opinion upon a bill on a somewhat similar subject; but the Chair has also stated that if convinced hereafter, upon a re-examination, that the ruling was incorrect, the Chair will not hesitate to retract it and correct the reference.

Mr. Reed. A parlimentary inquiry. Will the Chair inform the House to what committee it can be referred, so that it can be immediately acted upon in committee and presented for consideration to the House?

The Speaker. The Chair thinks it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules of the House.

Mr. Reed. The Chair thinks it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules of the House.

Mr. Reed. The Chair thinks its should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules of the House.

Mr. Reed. The Chair has already stated that in his opinion the bill will go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Selexer.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state for the information of the gentleman that the Speaker has never withdrawn or modified the opinion which he gave in reference to the bill which was referred by him to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The reading of that extract from the RECORD brings distinctly to my mind the occurrences of that day. Two bills known as the twin bills for the procurement of steel forgings for heavy ordnance came over from the Senate. The first related to army forgings. Upon that I made the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs under their general jurisdiction with reference to matters of public defense, the matter not being one pertaining to fortifications. Upon the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] I withdrew the point of order for this reason: that the subject not being a part of a general appropriation bill, the Military Committee would have no privilege to report a bill and have it considered at any particular time, while the Committee on Appropriations would have that privilege upon their bill. Therefore the point of order was withdrawn. It was, however, renewed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO]; and the colloquy which has been read between the Chair and the gentleman from Maine then took place.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman state that he withdrew the point of order?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think I withdrew the point of order; that is my recollection; I have not looked into the matter recently.

Mr. SAYERS. There is a ruling by the Speaker upon the point. Mr. SAYERS. There is a ruling by the Speaker upon the point.
Mr. CUTCHEON. That was upon the Navy bill, the point having been made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADoo] after my point had been withdrawn. But that question is not material.
Mr. RANDALL. It was the same point.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The same point precisely.

Mr. SAYERS. Lat me correct the gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me correct the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]. It was upon the Army bill, or the "Hawley bill," as it was called, that this decision just read was made, and the point was raised by the gentleman from New Jawas [Mr. McAngel]

Mr. CUTCHEON. The proposition I stated was that no point was made upon the fortification bill brought in by the House committee in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. I had forgotten about these two Senate bills. I now, of course, remember the ruling of the Chair in that instance.

But it will be observed that at that time the order of the House read the other day by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] conferring this jurisdiction on the Committee on Military Affairs was not referred to. In fact, I may say that at the time its existence was not known to me; and the then chairman of the Military Committee, Mr. Bragg, did not take part, I believe, in that debate.

Now, the question may be asked, if we take away from the Committee on Appropriations or its subcommittee on fortifications this jurisdiction, what jurisdiction will remain to them? If we look into the Book of Estimates we shall see very plainly what jurisdiction will remain. The first item under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense" is the following:

Gun and mortar batteries: For construction of gun and mortar batteries for defense of our chief seaports: For Portland Harbor, $290,000; Boston Harbor, $290,000; Narragansett Bay, $220,000; New York, $690,000; Philadelphia, $210,000; Baltimore, 380,000; Washington, D. C., $30,000; Hampton Roads, $250,000; New Orleans, $210,000; San Francisco, $460,000.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman will allow me this remark. The estimates to which he has just called attention are for works to be com-menced at some time when ordnance shall be ready to be placed upon them; but for the last twenty-five years what would have remained in the fortification bill under the gentleman's interpretation of the rules as changed?

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is not very material, because at the time the rule was changed there was jurisdiction committed to that subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to fortifications proper. In the Forty-eighth Congress we had authorized the appointment of a committee on seacoast defenses and other works of defense, and they had made a report recommending the expenditure of $126,-000,000 for fortifications and their armament. That matter was, by the reference of the President's message, committed undoubtedly to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RYAN. That was for guns and their manufacture; but according to the gentleman's interpretation of the rule there would be left nothing whatever in the fortification bill except the little appropriation of $100,000, or some such matter, for the annual repairs of fortifications.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the gentleman can not make any such complaint at the present time. Here is an item of $2,840,000 for the construction of fortifications, which the committee has utterly ignored in the face of the report of the Secretary of War and in the face of the report of the Board upon Fortifications and other Works of Defense. They have simply taken up a little item here for repairs of fortifications, the second item, recommending an expenditure of $200,000, and even this they have cut down to $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I admire the intellectual adroitness of the gentleman; but I submit that is not the issue. I am afraid he wants to arouse prejudice on this subject.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not at all. I want to discuss this matter fairly. Congress has committed to the subcommittee on fortifications of the Committee on Appropriations one of the most momentous questions of this generation, the fortification of our seaports, the determination of the question where forts shall be built, and what shall be their character; and it has committed, under the rules and by the order of the House, to the Committee on Military Affairs, a committee created for the express purpose of considering military matters, the proper arma-ment of those works. And your Secretary of War and Secretary of the Treasury have sent to you at this very session an estimate for works of fortification proper, calling for the expenditure of more than $3,000,000 in the construction of new works and the repairs of old works. Yet you utterly ignore that jurisdiction except to report an appropriation for repairs amounting to $100,000; and then you come here and ask this House to give you jurisdiction of a matter which the House, by its order, has taken away from you.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to my friend from Michigan that he ought not to make a false impression upon the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not intend to. Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman whether the Military Committee have not taken the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations; whether they have not taken them up entirely as they are recommended in this bill, and whether they do not still seek to place them on the Army bill in amount as well as in items?

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Military Committee, in obedience to the order of the House, has taken jurisdiction of the question of armament of coast defense. They have placed in the draught reported to the full committee appropriation for works of armament, the subject committed to us, although the bill is not yet reported to this House; but I have no doubt when the Army appropriation bill is reported to the House there will be appropriation made therein for armament.

Mr. RANDALL. Has it not been confined to items and amounts as represented in this fortification bill which comes from the Committee on Appropriations? That being so, then why attempt to arouse a sentiment against the Committee on Appropriations because they have not given a larger sum than you believe the Committee on Military Affairs will give?

Mr. CUTCHEON. My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, for whom I have a most profound respect, misapprehends me.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not misapprehend you.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We do not seek to take from you your jurisdiction over fortifications proper. We only take that which the House has ordered us to take, and that is to provide appropriations for the construction of arms, whether small or heavy arms. The House has committed to us the entire subject of armament and seacoast defenses. Of course we have the arming of the three branches of the military service, the artillery, the cavalry, and the infantry.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the gentleman from Michigan to contend that the Committee on Military Affairs gets jurisdiction of this matter by reference of a portion of the President's message to that

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly. Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You do not oust a general jurisdiction by a special reference. The other day the revenue bill, referred to the Committee on Appropriations by a vote of the House, by no means ousts the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means under the rules of the House. General jurisdiction is not ousted by special ac-I do not think the gentleman will claim it is usual to do any such thing. If a certain particular matter is referred to a committee, how does that oust the general jurisdiction of another committee under a standing rule of the House's

Mr. CUTCHEON. My friend from Ohio is too astute a lawyer to make such an argument as that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The astuteness will be found in giving a successful answer to it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will give you a successful answer. The other day we committed to the Committee on Appropriations a single bill. Of course that does not take away from the Committee on Ways and Means the general jurisdiction of the subject of revenue. But in this case the House has committed to the Committee on Military Affairs universal jurisdiction of matters of public defense, except the single subject of fortifications. It has committed to the Committee on Military Affairs the entire jurisdiction of the subject of armament and seacoast defense

Mr. RANDALL. Will my friend say—
Mr. CUTCHEON. It leaves you nothing.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend say, for one moment, he understood it to be the purpose of this House by the special reference to abrogate or rescind one of its standing rules? He will not say so.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, sir. Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In order to rescind or totally abrogate the standing rule of the House conferring general jurisdiction it must be done in a different way from that suggested by the special rule relied upon by my friend.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But I do understand this, that when the House made this order confiding to the Military Committee, in the language of the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means—

So much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor, and to providing an armament for defense on the

that it did oust your committee from all jurisdiction of armament for seacoast defenses. You were left the jurisdiction of the construction of the seacoast defenses, but the armament of the defenses was taken away from you and conferred upon the Military Committee.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have too much respect for the intelligence of my friend from Michigan to believe that he supposes for a moment that the House intended to oust the conceded jurisdiction of any committee by any such reference as that. If any man on this floor so understood it, or if he asked for that reference for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of any committee, or for the purpose of abrogating a rule of the House in force for twenty-five years, the House did not know it, its attention not being called to the matter that any such jurisdiction was being conferred, for everybody knows that we do not rescind or abrogate our rules in that way, but that we do it after careful consideration. Nor do we oust a standing committee of the jurisdic-tion which it has exercised for twenty-five years under the established rules of the House by a pro forma reference made as in the case of the President's message. Very far from it, and my friend, I think, will President's message. not so insist

Mr. CUTCHEON. As the gentleman from Ohio has now finished his remarks

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; I will make another speech in a few minutes.

inutes. [Laughter.]
Mr. CUTCHEON. I will say in response to him that the Committee on Appropriations and its subcommittee on fortifications must get jurisdiction from one of three sources, either from the rules of the House as interpreted by the House itself, or it must get it by the reference of that portion of the President's message, or by the reference of a separate bill or resolution. Now, the House interpreted its own rules by referring to the Military Committee the armament of seacoast defenses. You can not have it, then, in the Committee on Appropriations by any interpretation of the rules of the House given to them by the House itself; you do not get your jurisdiction by the reference of any bill or resolution, and you do not get it at all, because you have not got it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now let me ask my friend, in real good

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, yes; we are all good-natured. Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly, we are all lovable in our dis-[Laughter.] position and nature.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And there is nobody whom I love better than my friend from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly; but I want to ask my friend from Michigan if on the occasion to which he refers the attention of the House was called to the fact that we were vacating or rescinding a rule or order of the House of long standing? Did the gentleman

Mr. CUTCHEON. When this reference was made?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What has that got to do with it? The gentleman is trying to beg the question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; I am only trying to get a candid answer from you. Mr. CUTCHEON. You are assuming that it was a rescinding or abrogation of the rule to make that reference; while, on the contrary, I hold that it was a reaffirmation of a rule of long standing.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend will not find any comfort for himself in that position. Under the settled practice of the House—and this I take it for granted the gentleman will not deny—the items under consideration have uniformly gone to the Committee on Appropria-tions. Now, the gentleman speaks of the reaffirmation of a rule. I have referred to the settled practice which confessedly has been to refer the items covered by this clause to the Appropriation Committee. Now, that being the well-settled practice, if the reference of a clause in the President's message ousts completely the jurisdiction of the Appropriation Committee, does it not result that that proforma reference rescinds and abrogates utterly one of the standing rules of this body. And I ask if the gentleman from Michigan or any one else called attention to the fact that such a result was proposed or attained? And, in view of what is admitted, will my friend still claim that the standing rule is rescinded by the reference mentioned?

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the rules were changed in the last Congress.

We do not operate under that old rule.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, that is not the point.
Mr. CUTCHEON. But we are operating under a new system, and the question of order is for the first time presented here now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask my friend, in all candor, this question: I find under another provision of this bill, for I have not yet examined siege guns. Now, I want to ask my friend, I say, in all candor, if he proposes to take jurisdiction of the armament of the field batteries under the head of fortifications?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, my friend, we will discuss that question when we reach it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I apprehend that the gentleman is scarcely likely to discuss that question now or at any other time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, yes. I am very glad to meet the gentleman in discussion of this point. I will call his attention to the fact that these guns, to which reference is made, are used in the fortifications of the country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that he does not know of the 3.2-inch guns being used in any fortification in this country, except it be in field works

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope my friend will confine himself to one point at a time. He is skipping all around and exhibiting such dexterity in his movements that I can scarcely follow him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am only trying to follow you.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And I hope the gentleman will stick to the real point at issue until it is disposed of.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from Ohio wants to state his position correctly upon this question, because if I have not stated it for position correctly upon this question, because if I have not stated it for him I have misunderstood him, I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman will yield I will state the proposition in full.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will state the position as I understand it, and my friend can correct me if I am wrong. When the President's message was reported to the House the usual order of reference was made, and in that reference a certain part of the message alleged to cover the items in question was referred to the Military Committee. Upon a careful scrutiny of the language contained in the order of reference my friend finds that it gives to the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction of matters which for twenty-five years before, in the practice of the House, belonged to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I say that if that be the gentleman's understanding, and he is correct in that understanding, the attention of the House was not called to the matter; nor did the House by the pro forma reference intend to do any such thing. The gentleman himself, if he knew that to be the purpose or result, did not call the attention of the House to it.

There was no proposition, therefore, to vacate or rescind a standing rule of the House. Nobody's attention was specially challenged to the matter, and now, when in the exercise of the recognized jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee, it offers a bill making appropriation for the items now under consideration, my friend claims that by that reference—inadvertence, if you please, to which nobody's attention was called—of a part of the President's message, the rule of the House was rescinded, was abrogated, was wiped out. I submit to him in view of these facts that he will not adhere to his position that this House intended to do any such thing as he suggests, or that this body consciously ousted any committee from its rightful jurisdiction, a jurisdiction conferred by its rules as construed by uniform practice for years, and conferred it upon another committee.

As my friend sitting near me here suggests, the most that can be claimed is that temporarily the committees may have concurrent jurisdiction of the same subject-matter; but I hold that it would require a great deal of misdirected energy and courage to say that the House in that reference deliberately and knowingly abrogated one of its rules and ousted the settled jurisdiction of one committee and conferred that jurisdiction upon the other.

Now, if my friend says that this was done consciously, I would like him to say so plainly; otherwise, if it was not done consciously, I think he will not insist that it was done at all. I do not believe that the House so intended, and to insist upon it is to practice an imposition upon the House. If for any reason the subject-matter should be taken from the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee and conferred upon the Military Committee, let it be done by an appeal to the House, so action may be taken with a full knowledge of what is proposed, to wit, that we are abrogating, rescinding, or changing one of its standing rules

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman is through I will resume the floor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It was not my desire to interrupt my friend except with his permission.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I have spoken with so poor effect as to leave upon the mind of the gentleman from Ohio the impression that I supposed in the making of the special order on the recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee, the House was abrogating a fixed and settled rule. On the contrary, I have said, and said repeatedly, that the House was simply reaffirming a construc-tion of a permanent rule which conferred upon the Military Committee jurisdiction of matters pertaining to the public defense, such as are embodied in the provisions of the bill under consideration.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend insist that the House understood that it was construing a rule or affirming a construction here-tofore given to a rule by conferring upon the Military Committee jurisdiction of any such matter? Will he insist that the House was consciously construing a rule in that reference?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am one of the best-natured men in the world.
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I know that.
Mr. CUTCHEON. And I have given away fully one-half of my time.
Mr. SAYERS. Will you answer a good-natured question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. How soon will we get through this discussion?

Mr. CUTCHEON. In about two minutes. I realize that this has gone far enough. I remember the fact that the present presiding offi-cer took part in this debate. I know, of course, what the opinion of the gentleman was—the chairman at that time—with reference to this special order of the House. I now insist, Mr. Chairman, that the whole status of the case is changed since then. In the face of the standing rule of the House we have taken the President's message and we have referred it to the Committee on Ways and Means, the leading committee of this House the mittee of this House, the committee which has the premiership of the Having in view the discussion of the law, rules, and practice of the House in the last session as to where these matters of armament and fortification go, they have deliberately reported to this House that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. The House has confirmed that. The Committee on Military Affairs has taken jurisdiction and prepared a bill, and I insist that that jurisdiction shall not be taken away upon a point of order by the chairman. The House may do it if it sees fit for sufficient reason; but I submit, may it please the Chairman, that it does not rest upon the Chairman of this committee upon a point of order to say that this jurisdiction has not been conferred upon this question.

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. RYAN. A few days ago this House referred to the Committee on Appropriations a bill removing the tax from tobacco. Does the gentleman maintain that the House by that action took away jurisdic-tion on that subject from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no; not for a moment, except as to that special bill. But there is no parallel between this case and that.

Mr. RYAN. I think there is.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That was a special bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will not cut off discussion of this question. It is a question to be regulated not by a member of the House, but it is a question for the Chair to determine whether he wants the discussion to continue or not. whether he wants the discussion to continue or not. Mr. SAYERS. How much time do you want?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know.

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misapprehension in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] as to the decision of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who was in the chair at the last session when a similar point was made upon the Senate amendments to the Army appropriation bill. One of the controlling reasons that induced the Chair to hold that the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction over appropriations of this kind was that the estimates having been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, he held— Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There was no resolution of reference to any committee last session, was there?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was no resolution of reference last session. Mr. Chairman, for the reason that the President's message was devoted to one subject. That message did not discuss anything pertaining to the military establishment or to any of the various Departments of the Government; and therefore at that time we had no such ground to stand upon as we have to-day. The Committee on Ways and Means did not distribute the message at the last session as it related solely to the subject of revenue. There was nothing in it a year ago which related to fortifications. We come to-day standing upon a different ground from that upon which we stood when the gentleman from Illinois passed upon the question last session. I call attention to the fact that jurisdiction over all these various questions that specifically relate to the coast defense has by a unanimous vote of the House been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend allow me to eall his attention to a fact? Your committee is authorized to legislate, to report a bill changing existing law. We can not do that upon our appropriation bills, and hence the reference to your committee might be very oroper in view of your having charge of legislative matters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not on the appropriation bills.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not on the appropriation bill, but you have harge of legislative matters strictly. We can not legislate on the charge of legislative matters strictly.

bills, but can only make appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I simply wanted to emphasize this point: That at the last session of Congress there was no reference of that portion of the President's message relating to the military establishment or public defense specifically to the Committee on Military Affairs. We stood in a different attitude at that time. Since then there has been action on the part of the House by a vote of the House. By a unanimous vote of this House all that portion of the President's message discussing the seacoast defenses (and I have the message here before me) are referred to that committee. Under it are included the appropriations in reference to the purchase of steel forgings, the establishment of a gun factory, and the manufacture of heavy ordnance, as well as all other appropriations that have been asked for by the Secretary of War (these very estimates in regard to torpedoes and submarine mines); and the Committee on Ways and Means, having the right to distribute that message, brought in a resolution which I have in my hand here specifically authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to take jurisdiction of these different items and to make such report as they might deem proper.

That resolution I will read. It is the resolution adopted by the House on the 6th of December. The resolution reads in this way:

That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the Congress at the present session * * * as relates to the Army of the United States, including the appropriation therefor—

Mark the language-and to provide an armament for defense on the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That is the last time this House took action in relation to these appropriations. Now, Mr. Chairman, it stands just in this way: The House, by a unanimous vote, has authorized and directed the Committee on Military Affairs to take jurisdiction of these appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations now seek to overturn the unanimous vote of this House by a ruling of the Chair. Thus the Committee on Appropriations is asking the Chair to violate the express and specific direction of this House. The Committee on Appropriations, sir, it seems to me, is asking the Chair to ignore a command of this

If these gentlemen wanted to test the question of jurisdiction over this question why did they not do it in this House when that resolu-tion was pending? Why did they sit here and allow the jurisdiction to be conferred upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and then wait a month or more? The right way to test a question of jurisdiction is by taking the sense of the House. I feel, sir, that gentlemen are to-day asking of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole too much. They are assuming that he will ignore the action of the House, the unanimous will of the House, in order that they may have the privilege of ingrafting on their bill appropriations over which properly they have no jurisdiction, either under the rules or under the resolution to which I have referred, or, as I maintain, under the practice of the House since these rules were formed. These rules were changed in the last Congress. No test on this question was made in that Con-In fact, no fortification bill was disposed of in that Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. A fortification bill was passed by the House. Mr. TOWNSHEND. But it did not become a law.

Mr. RANDALL. Jurisdiction of the subject was taken.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not upon these items. I defy gentlemen to examine the fortification bill prepared by the Committee on Appropeiations in the last Congress and show me a single item pertaining to the manufacture of heavy ordnance, the establishment of a gun factory, or any of these appropriations against which we make the point of order on another bill. In the last session that committee took no jurisdiction In the last session that committee took no jurisdiction over these subjects; they did not assume to do so until they saw that the Military Committee was about to exercise its jurisdiction, and then they hurriedly brought in a fortification bill. The Committee on Appropriations did not attempt to bring in, or even to mature, a fortifica-tion bill until the fact was known that the Senate had placed upon the army bill an appropriation for the establishment of a gun factory and the purchase of steel forgings for heavy ordnance.

Mr. SAYERS. Was there anything of this kind in the army bill which you reported and passed, and which was sent to the Senate?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Military Affairs did not on that bill determine to make appropriations for seacost defenses until the Senate had made such amendments to the bill.

Mr. MAISH. They had another bill.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I may say in reply to my friend from Texas
[Mr. SAYERS] that the Committee on Military Affairs did take jurisdiction. A bill covering this very purpose was introduced and referred to that committee, reported back, and is on the Calendar to-day. The Committee on Military Affairs asserted its jurisdiction.

Now, this is a plain and simple question for the Chair to determine. In my honest judgment the Chair, in order to sustain the appropriation against which I made the point of order, would be forced to ignore the rules, to ignore the resolution of the House, and to ignore its practice.

I leave that responsibility entirely with the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, a direct mind will go naturally to the issue involved in the question, and I beg that you will not become confused by too much "gab." [Laughter.] What is the issue here? Simply one of jurisdiction. As all concede, the Committee on Appropriations, up to the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress, possessed this jurisdiction. Has the House taken from that committee the jurisdiction which without dispute it had up to that time? No; on the contrary, at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, when this issue was practically raised, the House decided that the jurisdiction which the Committee on Appropriations have exercised was justified by a proper construction of the rule.

Now, the Committee on Military Affairs, if they seek this jurisdiction, must have recourse to an alteration of the rules, not only because the jurisdiction exercised by the Committee on Appropriations is warranted by the literal language of the rule, but because of the construction which has been placed upon that rule by the House. If this House wants to take from the Committee on Appropriations another bill, and add it to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, let it do so in an open way, not by indirection, not by any struggle of this kind. The open path is a change of the rule. To prove that there is nothing involved in this matter to-day except the question of jurisdiction, I think I am warranted in saying that there is no diversity of opinion between the membership of the Military Committee and that of the Appropriations Committee as to the merits of the items here reported or the amounts which should be given at this session.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that this question was decided during the last session of Congress. The gentleman from Texas submitted a resolution, but before the Chair passed upon the question he withdrew it. Then after the amendments were ingrafted on the military appropriation bill by the Senate the members of the conference committee on the part of the House finally yielded to the conferees of the Senate, and the amendments were omitted. Somewhat similar provisions were finally passed as having come from the Appropriations Committee.

Now, I maintain that the straight path on the part of both committees would be to appropriate nothing beyond what is provided by the rules of the House. I would also commend to gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee to do only that which is plainly provided by the rules, and not come in here and usurp what clearly does not belong to them. I think they are guilty of indirection. They have embraced in this bill appropriations for field artillery—appropriations for the construction of field guns. Will those gentlemen contend that under the general term "fortifications" they have authority under the rules of the House to make appropriations for field guns? Yet the Committee of the House to make appropriations for field guns? tee on Appropriations has proposed thus to usurp the jurisdict on of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the estimates as they come from the War Department. I do not think he would have the hardihood to put his own opinion on military subjects in conflict with the views of the War Department, and especially of the Ordnance Bureau, in matters of this kind. By examination he will find that the estimates for these very guns, which he calls "field guns," come under the head of "arma-guns, which he calls "field guns," come under the head of "armament of fortifications."

Mr. CUTCHEON. "And other works of defense."

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; "armament of fortifications;" there is nothing there about "other works of defense."

Mr. CUTCHEON. What page does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. SAYERS. Page 170. There is not a word there about "other works of defense."

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, I.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, I have the "hardihood" to say that the Committee on Appropriations did not follow the estimates. Mr. SAYERS. Of course we did not; we have not in some instances ven as much as the estimates asked.

Mr. MAISH. The Committee on Appropriations did not follow the estimates in this particular: They have reported appropriations in this bill for field artillery without specifying that such field artillery is to be used for the armament of fortifications. Why have they not in this bill confined the Secretary of War to the manufacture of field artillery for fortifications alone? No, sir; they have simply come here with their bill, usurping plainly the authority of the Committee on Military

I have taken occasion to make these remarks simply because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has charged that the Committee on Military Affairs have undertaken to do by "indirection" what they should seek to do directly. Now, I charge that the Committee on Appropriations have been guilty of "indirection" in attempting—plainly, manifestly, indisputably—to usurp the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, not only in this particular, but in respect to appropriations for torpedoes and submarine defenses.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT). The Chair is ready to rule upon this question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend], on the paragraph in relation to "torpedoes for harbor defense," raises the point of order that the Committee on Appropriations has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter contained in the paragraph. He and gentlemen who support this point of order base their objection on two grounds: First, the construction of the rules themselves; second, the order reported from the Committee on Ways and Means on January 13, 1889, in this language:

That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor and providing an armament for defense on the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Gentlemen claim that whatever might be the construction of the rule, the order made in the adoption of that resolution deprives the Committee on Appropriations of jurisdiction over this subject. It has been contended that the words "public defense," in clause 12 of Rule XI, give to the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction of this question, leaving the subject of "fortifications" as understood by lexicographers as the whole jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations in reference thereto. That clause of Rule XI is in the following language:

To the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support, and for that of the Military Academy.

Now, if under the phrase "public defense" the Committee on Military Affairs should take jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this paragraph, why should they not likewise take jurisdiction of the matter of arsenals—usually reported in the sundry civil bill? Why should they not likewise take jurisdiction of all matters reported in the naval bill? Certainly the language "public defense" would cover all these sub-

The Chair is of opinion that the words "public defense" were not designed to convey to the Military Committee the jurisdiction claimed by gentlemen who have supported the point of order; and that the language "including the appropriations for its support" relates to the words

"to the military establishment, and for that of the Military Academy," and not to the words "and the public defense."

If it were admitted that the language "the public defense" is as broad as claimed, then the deficiencies in relation to the Army would go to the Military Committee; naval deficiencies to the Naval Committee; postal deficiencies to the Post-Office Committee.

The Chairman pot think that this is a legitimete construction when

The Chair can not think that this is a legitimate construction when clause 3 expressly declares that "to appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies, shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations;" and that all appropriations to the naval establishment shall be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and that all appropriations relating to post-offices and post-roads shall be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, etc.

Then what was the true purpose of the rule? Certainly any strict construction of language, any very literal construction without reference to the parliamentary history of the House in connection with this subject involves contradiction. It is, therefore, important we should look to that history in this connection. The Chair has before it a statute passed by the Forty-eighth Congress relating to fortifications, and in it are included appropriations for the very subject-mat-ter of this paragraph. So, again, in the Forty-ninth Congress, after the change of the rules, the same subject-matter was reported in the fortification bill and became a law.

An examination of the statutes and of the practice of the House for a long series of years shows that prior to the adoption of the present rules the rules simply assigned the work of appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee subdivided their work into various general appropriation bills, not by virtue of any rule of the House, but for their own convenience. They were designated at the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sundry civil bill, the fortification bill, the District of Columbia bill, the pension bill, the deficiency bill, the military bill, the naval bill, and the bill in relation to post-offices and post-roads, etc.

The subject matter of these several bills was designated by the Committee on Appropriations itself, and the Chair thinks that the only way of ascertaining the nature of these bills is by an examination of Under these designations they have been the substance of them. crystallized in the practice of the House until they have a significance as pregnant as the strongest language could give them. of this practice the subjects contained in the paragraph have almost from the beginning been assigned to the fortification bill

Now it is claimed that notwithstanding the construction of the rule upon the language and in the light of the practice of the House the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means outs the Committee on Appropriations of jurisdiction on this subject. The Chair fortunately is not making the first decision upon these several questions. During the Forty-ninth Congress, after the rules now in existence were adopted, this matter was distinctly brought before the Speaker as to the construction of clause 12 of Rule XI. It has already been read to the House. The Chair there distinctly determined that the language in this rule did not deprive the Committee on Appropriations of their right to report the usual matters in this appropriation

This ruling was made on February 9, 1887, and it was made after the following resolution had been agreed to by the House:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message as relates to the Army of the United States and the Department of War, including appropriations there-for, and to providing an armament for defense of the scacoast be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The situation, therefore, when this ruling was made, was identical with what it is to-day. It was not claimed that that order was designed to have the effect now claimed. The Chair is of opinion that the Committee on Appropriations could not have been ousted of their jurisdiction under the rules by this order, even had the Committee on Military Affairs been given jurisdiction by it. The Chair not believing the Committee on Appropriations was deprived of it, holds that this paragraph is in order on this bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McCreary having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage of the bill (H. R. 12060) to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to said port of Co-

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to an error in line 12, on the first page of the printed bill. The word "casements" should be "casemates." It is a typograph-It is a typographical error, and I move that it be corrected.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored to secure recognition before passing from the paragraph relating to submarine mines. To that I wish to move the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, page 2, strike out "$330,000" and insert "$1,912,000."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, that is the amount of the estimates for this part of the subject covered by the bill. When this bill came up at first I desired an opportunity of debating it, but through my own carelessness, and supposing that the gentleman from Texas would himself speak to the bill, I allowed the Clerk to read a paragraph or two, and lost the opportunity.

Now, I want to point out to the gentleman from Texas and to the committee that although there may be some reason for a small appropriation in some parts of this system of public defense, no reason has been given, and none can be, I think, for the small appropriation which the committee give for this particular item. I understood that the reason why the committee does not give so large an amount as the Department desires for making heavy guns is that the delay in the establishment of the new Watervliet shops will prevent the assembling and finishing of heavy guns within the next fiscal year. Admit it to be so. It is also clear that there will be a delay in the delivery of the steel Admit that, too. Admit that the gun and mortar batteries need not be appropriated for in this year. Still, the point I make is, that if we go into this system of coast defenses at all it would require the appropriation of a large sum of money and take a considerable That being so we ought not to delay here appropriating a large amount for the particular part of it which can be carried forward without delay when we are obliged to delay in regard to certain other portions of the system. That is to say that if we have to wait until the next year or the year after to furnish the heavy guns and mortars and the gun and mortar batteries, that is all the more reason why we should give to the Department all the money it says it can use in the torpedo system, which the Department says it can go on with and complete.

Now. I think there is no doubt about it that the casemates and galleries are works the plans of which are already in the mind of the Department. They are simply heavy masonry or heavy earthwork. The places where they are to be established, as well as the manner of their arrangement, are all determined upon in advance and are understood. We need not wait for new plans or inventions. It is simply furnishing the machinery for that part of our system. And there is nothing in the report of the committee, especially in regard to this subject, to show why the appropriation in this regard should not be adequate and up to

I have asked at the Department why this has not been done, but I can get no information there. I can obtain no information from the reading of the report of the committee. As I said before, if the committee means to postpone the furnishing of heavy guns and mortars and gun and mortar batteries, all the greater reason why they should be more liberal, or at least give a sufficient appropriation for the particular items in regard to which no such reason can be alleged.

Mr. SAYERS. Upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and also in answer to what has been said by him, I have to say to the committee that we had General Casey before us, and that upon the first estimate for gun and mortar batteries, which was $2,840,000, he said, in view of the fact that the guns which the present Congress at its first session provided to be built would not be completed before three or four years, it would not be at all necessary to make an appropiration for mortar batteries at this time.

Mr. ADAMS. I admit the force of that.

Mr. SAYERS. Again, it is well known, sir, that the manufacture of these heavy guns and the armament of the fortifications with high ex plosives generally go hand in hand.

Now the torpedo system is in an unsettled state. It is being improved, I may say, continually. The experiments and productions of to-day will possibly in a few months be abandoned and other experiments made and other productions of a different character developed, and the system carried to a more successful issue.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to a letter which has been addressed to me by the Chief of Engineers in regard to the purchase of more than 600 statute miles of cable in 1874. I will read the

The sheathing consisted of sixteen No. wwires, property above.

The above-described cable is to-day practically useless for the purposes of sea-mines, the insulation having been almost entirely lost, but for certain purposes on land some of it may still be used.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. J. D. SAYERS, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

To avoid similar results in the future it was thought by the committee that inasmuch as three or four years will elapse before the heavy guns provided for a few months ago can be built, it would be better for the Ordnance Bureau to have a moderate but sufficiently large sum of money for torpedo experiments, so that when these guns shall have been completed the War Department will have secured a torpedo system that will be entirely practicable.

To expend all of this money at this time might prove a wasteful extravagance from which the Government would derive no benefit whatever, and the committee was of the opinion that $300,000 would be sufficient for present purposes, especially as the sum which we appropriated in the first session of this Congress has not been expended. We now recommend an appropriation of $200,000, bringing it up to about $500,000 for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. I think, if the gentleman will allow me, he will see my point more clearly if I call his attention to the subdivision of the subject contained in the Book of Estimates. Now, the $330,000 that you have allowed is exactly made up of two sums that are contained here, one for the purchase of submarine guns and necessary appliances, $300,000, and the other for continuing torpedo experiments and giving practical instruction to the Engineer Corps in the details of the service, $30,000.

Now, if the committee had determined to allow these two items, and had allowed just what the Department asked, the sum would be $330,-000, precisely the sum which the committee has allowed. And therefore my inference is that the committee left out all consideration of the third, which is the very point on which I was speaking, and the very one to which the objections just made by the gentleman from Texas do not apply, to wit, for casemates and cable galleries, etc., to render it possible to operate submarine mines.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will find that the provision is embraced in the bill; and the Department may use all of the $330,000, or any portion of it, in its discretion.

Mr. ADAMS. I admit that; but they use that for that particular purpose. They want $1,500,000. The point the gentleman makes is that invention is progressive. Invention is progressive so far as torpedoes are concerned; but I am informed and believe the object of this $1,500,000 is simply to build the masonry of the casemates to protect the men who are to operate the torpedo mines.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman permit me to answer him for one moment?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman has referred to the fact that plans have already been prepared for the construction of fortifications. Would he have the Government engage in the building of these casemates upon a large scale to go with the old fortifications that now exist throughout the country? As an instance, take Fortress Monroe. General Casey tells us that according to the new plans it would require no less than $5,000,000 to reconstruct Fortress Monroe alone.

Ought the Committee on Appropriations, as suggested by the pending amendment, to have recommended an appropriation at this time for the purpose of building casemates, to accompany a fortification which the Government proposes either to tear down or to improve at an expense of $5,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. Not one dollar, and not one cent. These are not the casemates which the Engineer Department has in view. The point is this: Here is a harbor. If the harbor is to be defended against a hostile fleet, the casemates must be placed where they will be most effective in order to operate against that fleet. What they shall be

Mr. SAYERS. And these casemates are parts of the general fortifications.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no. Mr. SAYERS. That is my understanding.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Not at all.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not so understand it.
Mr. SAYERS. I understand that the casemate is part of the fortification. It is a part of the system of coast defense, and these casemates form a part of the fortifications which are contemplated in the plans that are now being prepared.

Oh, yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. SAYERS. Where is the difference?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Part of the torpedo system—
Mr. SAYERS. The torpedo system and the general fortification system are one and the same thing—that is, they go together in the general defense.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. With the permission of my colleague [Mr. ADAMS], I wish to point out the error into which my friend from Texas has fallen when he places these items in this bill. He is under the delusion that the submarine mines and casemates provided for in the bill are a part of our fortifications. He certainly is in error there. They have no direct relation to the fort; they may be established away.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course they may; I do not deny that. Mr. TOWNSHEND. As stated by my colleague [Mr. ADAMS], these submarine mines may be placed under the water leading into the barbors

Mr. SAYERS. Let me interrupt the gentleman. One of the purposes of the system of torpedoes is the protection of the fortifications themselves

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But let me call my friend's attention to the language of this item:

For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them, for closing the channels leading to our principal scaports.

Mr. SAYERS. That is all right, but you are talking now about casemates.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I maintain (and I am warranted in this by the officers of the Engineer Corps) that the casemates here provided for are not a part of the fort, are not to be placed at the fort, but are expected to be placed on the shores

Mr. SAYERS. Are not the forts on shore? Where do we have forts except on shore?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Take, for instance, the harbor of New York. The casemates provided for these submarine mines may be a mile or more away from Fort Hamilton or Fort Lafayette.

Mr. ADAMS. They ought not to be near the gun battery. Mr. TOWNSHEND. The casemates provided here are intended simply as a shelter for the operator who is to explode the submarine mines when the enemy's ships approach. They ought to be at a distance from the fort. They are not a part of the fortification. This fact, I maintain, shows clearly that the Committee on Appropriations is not warranted in assuming jurisdiction over this matter, their jurisdiction being confined alone to the fortifications, or the building of the outwork, or something that is near to the fort.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me make this suggestion to my friend from Texas. Suppose a hostile fleet is approaching; you depend upon your mortars

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.
Mr. ADAMS. If your torpedo galleries were a part of the gun batteries, the view from the galleries would be obscured by the smoke from the batteries. That was explained by the Chief of Engineers. There are to be four or five of these torpedo galleries at different angles in different parts of the harbor, so that the men may know when a hostile vessel is over a particular point where a torpedo may be effectively exploded. Therefore the casemates here meant are simply small chambers-say 40 feet square-surrounded with very heavy masonry; and four or five or six or ten of them are to be in one harbor, to be operated in unison, so that a man in each of them connected by telegraph can tell to an instant when an approaching vessel crosses the intersecting lines protected by the torpedoes. This has nothing whatever to do with the gun batteries or the mortars.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Did my friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] understand General Casey to say that he could properly use the entire appropriation asked for, say $1,560,000?

Mr. ADAMS. I inferred that from the statement he did make. I asked him why the committee had reduced certain appropriations, and he gave me the explanation which has been given by my friend from Texas. But when I asked him—and if it is proper to say so when I asked the Secretary of War—what reason had been given for cutting down this particular appropriation, those officers said they could not tell.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to say-my associates on the committee will correct me if I am wrong—that I understood this reduction was not made in defiance of General Casey's wishes, but in view of the fact that the Ordnance Corps were not able to provide that which was essential to the completion of this work; in other words, that the amount asked for in this estimate was not indispensable in view of the facts which he stated to the committee. I believe the committee desired to meet General Casey fairly, for he appeared to ask for only that which he deemed essential to the public defense. My understanding was that the committee tried to meet him fairly.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not dispute that-

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And I understand the item here to respond practically to the requirements of that department at the head of which General Casey is.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, I think my friend is under a misapprehension. I went over these items with him one after another. I simply wanted to get information. I am not an expert in ordnance or fortifications, but I like to understand what I am voting for. I went over these items with him one by one: first, heavy guns; second, mortars; third, gun batteries; and as to each an explanation was given. He said that a gun battery would take a great while to make, and it was a pity that he could not begin the construction now, even though the guns would not be ready for three years. He did say something about the lift for the heavy guns, the plans for which would not be perfected until next

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In that connection, I want to say that the reduction was made with his distinct approbation.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not dispute that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not understand why he should say "it would be a pity" not to begin work on the batteries at once when we struck out that provision—I do not say at his suggestion, but, as I understood, with his approval.

Mr. RANDALL. He has never protested against any item in this

Mr. ADAMS. I should do an injustice to General Casey if I did not correct my language. I did not intend to say he blamed the commit-tee. As we all know, it is a pity that the plans for these heavy-gun batteries, these lifts by which the guns shall be raised into position and then sunk below the line of sight, are not ready in order that these batteries might be built in preparation for the guns, which will be ready three years hence. But I admit General Casey did not blame the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee on Appropriations endeavored to reach an agreement both with the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. ADAMS. We are not disputing that, but there has been a misunderstanding somewhere, because I am sure from what General Casey told me these casemates are works which will require a considerable time to make on account of their ponderous character. The mode of their construction is simple, and does not require any new invention. They can be made applicable at once.

Mr. SAYERS. It is true that these casemates may be applicable to the torpedoes made to-day; but, sir, the gentleman must not forget that torpedoes made to-day may in three months from this time become absolutely worthless.

Mr. ADAMS. I think my friend from Texas has interrupted me a little too soon. These casemates are simple chambers protecting the men who are operating the cables, whatever they may be.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether these casemates or galleries are not in fact for the protection of the men who are engaged in this service?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly, and they are not gun batteries. They are chambers or galleries where the men can be protected while they are receiving telegraphic communications as to whether they shall explode the torpedoes or not.

Now, I am not insinuating that the Committee on Appropriations is unwilling to comply with the recommendations of the Department, but I am sure from what I learned from the engineers this sum of money could be used to advantage in the coming year.

Mr. RANDALL. General Casey has made no protest against this, and, according to the gentleman, then he must have led us into error.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it his duty to watch?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; he was before us.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Our interview with General Casey was of the most satisfactory character. If we have fallen into any error I have never heard of it. We tried to meet him fairly, and to make appropriations which were necessary according to the recommendations the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. We discussed this subject with General Casey when he was before the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman from Texas did not seem to know. He seemed to think these casemates meant gun batteries.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; not at all.
Mr. ADAMS. There is no question about that, as my colleague said, that these casemates meant something very different from what they understood them to mean.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me say a word.

Mr. ADAMS. I have said my say, and I will yield the floor. Mr. TOWNSHEND. General Casey did say to me he was satisfied with the amount appropriated in the fortification bill. He did say also to me he could use the entire sum and would like to have the entire

Now, I understood my friend to say these heavy guns would have to be provided in three or four years. Mr. SAYERS. They might then become necessary after fortifications had been constructed at such points as may be selected. They,

of course, should go together.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We might need these casemates and submarine mines, although we may not have any fortification in the harbor where they are to be used. They are useful where there is no fort. They are one of the real means of coast defense which can be provided.

Now, I am not in favor of increasing the appropriation. I wish to confirm the statement as to General Casey's satisfaction about the matter. I feel I ought to say, in justice to my colleague, General Casey did say that he could use the whole amount to-day, and that it was not necessary to wait until fortifications were constructed.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish my colleague from Illinois would make that very distinct. He understands that there is no reason for delay in this particular item, as there is in the case of the heavy guns, or as may be claimed in that case.

Mr. RANDALL. We gave all that was asked or that was necessary.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I hold in my hand the current report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1888, and on page 5 I find his estimates. The sum there estimated for the purchase of submarine mines and for needful appliances to operate them, and for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports, is $300,000, and for needful casemates and cable galleries, to render it possible to operate submarine mines, $1,560,000, and another item for continuing torpedo experiments, $30,000; but the two items first named in the list are the ones embraced in this paragraph. Here, then, are the official estimates of the Chief of Engineers. He either needs that amount or he does not need it. If he needs it, we ought to give it to him. If he does not need it, he ought not to have put it in his estimates. I do not think he put it in there simply for fun. What, then, was the object of it?

Mr. SAYERS. I ask a vote on the amendment.
Mr. SPINOLA. One moment. I want to know if this is for continuing torpedo experiments?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman can offer his amendment after this is disposed of.

Mr. SPINOLA. I want to get an amendment in here for the purchase of movable torpedoes.

Mr. SAYERS. This matter is left to the Department entirely. Mr. RANDALL. They can go to a junk shop and buy them if they

Mr. SPINOLA. But I wish to insert a clause for movable submarine torpedoes. Mr. SAYERS. That does not come in here. I ask a vote on the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. ADAMS was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armament of fortifications: For the finishing and assembling of 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch steel guns made from forgings procured under the act of September 22, 1888, $35,000.

For the purchase of steel forgings for field and siege cannon as follows:

For steel forgings for not less than twenty-four 3.6-inch field guns, $24,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Upon that part of the paragraph in the follow-

For steel forgings for not less than twenty-four 3.6 inch field-guns, $24,000-

I make the point of order, the same point that was made by the gentleman from Illinois on the preceding paragraph; but I shall not take any time to discuss it, only to say that this relates expressly to field guns for field batteries of the Army.

Mr. SAYERS. Under the head of "Armament for fortifications," page 170 of the Book of Estimates, the Chair will find that clause is embraced providing for steel forging for the manufacture of certain small guns. It belongs to the armament of fortifications. I will send the estimates to the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair will observe that the caption of these estimates is entitled "Fortifications and other works of defense," and this is only one of the minor items under that caption.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to be heard further just one moment, and I will not take more than a minute. I simply want to call the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from Texas also to the estimates under the head of "Armament of fortifications," to which he refers. We have first for finishing and assembling guns under section 4 of the act heretofore passed providing for such purchase, and next is the manufacture of approved field and siege guns and their carriages; in other words, siege guns are guns for fortifications, while field guns are guns for use in the Army in the field; and there is no possibility of mistaking that, and they are not separated in the estimates.

But I make the point against that paragraph which relates to the manufacture of field guns only at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say that an examination of the law passed at the last session of Congress will show that the same character of armament was provided for in that bill. Hence the precedent has been set and jurisdiction is established. I have marked the paragraphs of the bill and of the estimates, which I send to the Chair, and think there can be no controversy on that point.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair will

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine them.

Mr. RANDALL. I think gentlemen will admit that, as this is the language of the law, it establishes the jurisdiction, because, as will be seen, the language there refers to field guns of exactly the same char-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the authorities cited, and overrules the point of order.

The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For the test of experimental guns procured under the act of September 22, 1888, namely, for one 10-inch wire-wound gun, steel, $28,000; for one 12-inch gun, steel-hooped, $39,500; for procuring one 10-inch disappearing gun-carriage, $13,500; for gun-platforms at proving-ground, $0,500; for projectiles for field, siege, and seacoast guns for issue to the service, $28,500; for siege-gun powder for issue to the service, $7,000; for fuzes and implements for issue to the service, $2,000; in all, $125,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon so much of the paragraph just read as embraces projectiles for field guns. I find by a reference to the report of the committee, on page 3, that under the head of "Projectiles" the following provision is made:

One thousand steel shrapnel for field guns. Four thousand eight hundred projectiles, cast-iron, for field guns.

Now, sir, if it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations to provide shrapnel for field guns, it is also clearly proper and in order for them to undertake to furnish cartridges for the muskets of the infantry, and therefore they had better take control and jurisdiction of the whole matter. In the army bill we have $400,000 provided for the manufacture of small-arms, but if this Committee on Appropriations are going to assume the whole thing, why, we had just as well drop that too.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the Committee on Appropriations is assuming nothing at all. We have only been asserting our rights and doing what we have always done under the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When it comes to providing shrapnel for field guns, why then you might just as well take the whole Army under your wing at once. and therefore they had better take control and jurisdiction of the whole your wing at once.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will not the gentleman from Michigan allow us to go on and get this little miserable amount for our seacoast defenses, and not seek to risk even that amount by rescuing the jurisdiction of his committee, scrap by scrap, in this manner?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not mean to sit here in silence and see the jurisdiction of the committee of which I am an humble member seized and trampled upon without protest.

Mr. SPINOLA. It applies to gunpowder for the siege guns also.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the ruling upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no ruling.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before the Chair rules I find away down in the

Mr. RANDALL. Wait till we get there.
Mr. SPINOLA. Powder for siege guns. Now, whether the Committee on Appropriations have the right to appropriate for the powder or not I do not know.

Mr. RANDALL. We certainly have jurisdiction to provide for the testing of guns, and we can not test them without powder and pro-

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not want us to lose our powder. [La The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.] [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to offer an amendment which is made at the suggestion of the Chief of Ordnance.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, after line 23, insert:
"For repairs and improvement at the ordnance proving-grounds, Sandy Hook, New Jersey, namely: Repairing dock and dredging, $5,500; relaying roads and walks, $3,800; repairs to officers' quarters, $2,000; repairs to foremen's and soldiers' quarters, $2,000; repairs to office, $5,000; repairs to shops and storchouses, $1,000; machinery for shops, $4,000; clearing ground about ranges, $500; laying narrow-gauge tramway to proof-butts and targets, $5,320; in all, $25,320."

Mr. SAYERS. I will state that it was intended that that provision should appear in the sundry civil bill, but on reflection, after the pending bill was reported, we concluded to submit it as an amendment. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular business is the hour for the consideration of bills, but the hour of 3 o'clock—

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not propose to go on with the bill until Wednesday, but I would like the track.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Were all points of order reserved?
Mr. RANDALL. It does not matter whether they are or not.

NEW CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to present a report from the special committee to inquire into the erection of the new Congressional Li-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has leave to report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer the report, that it may be laid on the table, and that the report and testimony be printed.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Dockery in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. Unless some member of the committee desires to debate this bill under the general-debate clause, I would ask unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with, and that we proceed to the reading of the bill by sections and its consideration under the five-minute rule, and that there be leave given to print remarks upon the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There may be some point during considera-tion of the bill at which I will ask to be heard, and would not desire to be limited to the five-minute rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Anything reasonable will find a ready assent from

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If for any reason I should want an hour I should want it understood now that I can have it.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Ohio should want to speak an hour I am quite sure he would say so much that somebody would need to reply. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think that the House will be in perfect accord with me.

Mr. RANDALL. So that if an hour be given to the gentleman from Ohio and it provokes debate we should want an hour on our side.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The request made by the gentleman from Ohio may be made by any other member.

Mr. RANDALL. The House will find me ready to grant anything in that way which does not interfere with a reasonably rapid transit of the bill through the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendment. The Clerk read the following:

ent. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I now move that the committee rise and report the control of Treasury Department, $200,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at its next session a statement of the expenditure of the appropriation for repairs and preservation of public buildings for the fiscal year 1889, showing on what public buildings said appropriation was expended, and the number of persons employed and paid salaries therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived and having been assigned by the House to a special order, the Committee of the Whole must rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Dockery reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

DEATH OF HON. EDWARD W. ROBERTSON.

The SPEAKER. To-day at 3 o'clock has been fixed by order of the House for the "delivery of tributes to the memory of Hon. Edward W. Robertson, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Edward White Robertson, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That in his demise the country has suffered the loss of a wise legislator, a valuable citizen, and an able and faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adfourned

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions which have just been read cause this House to pause in the consideration of its regular business, and call upon its members to reflect that death is no respecter of persons, and invades the council chamber of a great nation as freely as it does the lowly habitation of its humblest citizen.

The inscrutable fate of mortal man, and, indeed, of all living things upon this terrestrial sphere, is that none escape its icy grasp. It shuns neither the palace of the great and powerful nor the hovel of the most wretched and degraded. It is familiar in the frequented haunts or men, and is equally present in the seclusion of the closet or the solitude of the wilderness. Science, with all its vaunted progress, has not yet learned the lesson of prolonging the average of life, much less the obliteration of death.

"All who live must die," is the immutable condition upon which existence, as we understand it, is assumed.

When we consider that the choice of life, or its rejection, upon this condition, is not permitted us, life indeed were a bitter irony were death the end of all.

To live but to die, and death being "absolute destruction, total annihilation, utter obliteration," were a fate so cruel and relentless as to suggest that the twin furies of injustice and hate presided at its conception, instead of the divine attributes of justice, love, and mercy.

The argument proves too much. It leads to conclusions which cause the rejection of its premises

Aside from divine revelation, it is at variance with an indefinable something evolved from the inner consciousness, the soul of man.

It is not consonant with what we see in all the universe—the light and beauty, the harmony, law, order, symphony, which pervades all the heavens, which characterizes the celestial bodies and directs their movements.

That the Infinite Power which created man has ordained for him a grander destiny than to live in mortal form only and die to annihila-tion is an eternal truth, whispered in the music of the celestial spheres, and whose effulgence reaches and quickens the soul of man.

Mr. Speaker, these thoughts suggest themselves in contemplating the demise of the good man to pay tribute to whose memory we are now assembled.

Edward White Robertson was born in Davidson County, Tennessee, on the 13th day of June, 1823. His father was William Blount Robertson, the fourth son of General James Robertson, one of the pioneers of Middle Tenness

In 1826 the father of young Robertson moved to Louisiana and engaged in planting in the parish of Iberville, where he amassed a fortune.

The early life of the subject of our sketch was passed in the usual manner of the sons of wealthy Southerners. The leisure and opportunity which characterized life for the owner and his family upon a large, well-appointed plantation in the South in ante-bellum days was utilized by young Robertson in study and reading, for which he early developed a fondness, as well as in manly exercise, such as riding and driving, and in the sports of the field, such as hunting and fishing.

In 1839 his father died, leaving him, at the age of sixteen, lord of himself, with a competency, so far as fortune was concerned.

His education was acquired in various schools and colleges, and completed at the Nashville University, Tennessee, where he graduated in An episode in his life at this time was a visit he paid to General Andrew Jackson at the Hermitage.

The old hero had known his grandfather, General Robertson, and as a boy had associated with his father. So he welcomed with much cordiality the son to his hospitable home.

Colonel Robertson never forgot this visit to the grand old man, and was wont to remark to his friends in after life that his political ideas were given direction and his political principles strengthened and confirmed by this early interview with "Old Hickory."

After leaving the Nashville College, young Robertson decided to adopt the law as a profession and entered upon a course of study to that end. While pursuing his studies war with Mexico was pro-At the call for volunteers he threw down his law-books and assisted in raising a large company, in which he himself enlisted, taking the position of orderly sergeant, having refused with characteristic modesty a higher command. His company became part of the Second Louisiana Regiment and saw service in Mexico.

Returning to Louisiana after his term of enlistment had expired, he married, in 1847, Mary Jane Pope, daughter of Dr. Nathaniel Wells Pope, a prominent citizen of Louisiana. His married life was an un-usually happy one. Domestic in his tastes and persuaded by the gentler feelings which find fullest development in the charmed circle around the fireside, he loved home and its endearments, and no presence was as grateful to him as that of his wife, and no music charmed him so much as the prattle of his children. Twelve were born of this marmuch as the prattle of his children. Twelve were born of this marriage, of whom eight survive him, and one of them, the second son, following in the footsteps of his distinguished father, is now the able and popular Representative in the Congress of the United States of the same constituency, and occupies in this House the same seat so long and so creditably filled by him whose life and character is our theme to-day.

Truly it is a case of the mantle of the father descending on the son. The political life of Colonel Robertson commenced soon after his marriage, in 1847. The parish of Iberville, where he then lived, had for years been a strong Whig parish. Yet notwithstanding this, having been nominated by the Democrats of the parish as their candidate for the Legislature in 1847, he was elected by a large majority. He served a term, but declined a re-election.

In 1850 he was admitted to the bar and commenced the practice of his profession in the town of Plaquemine, the county-seat of Iberville Parish.

In 1854, yielding to the solicitations of his Democratic friends in the parish, he was again elected to the Legislature. During this term of service he advocated the policy of making the construction of levees to protect the alluvial lands from periodical floods a State work, which policy had never before been adopted. He maintained that levees were of more than local importance, and that their cost should be borne by the whole State since, directly or indirectly, all the people shared in the benefits of the protection. He urged that the benefits resulting from a complete levee system were general and widespread and the works too great and costly a burden to be borne by the riparian owners.

While he did not succeed in grafting this policy in full upon the legislation of the State, his efforts in this direction resulted in a law which made it incumbent upon the general public to bear one half the expense of levee-building, the other half to be borne by the riparian owners directly benefited. Thus did he become one of the fathers of the levee system of the State.

His course in the Legislature gained him much prominence and popularity throughout the State, and this resulted in his nomination and election as State auditor in 1857. He was re-elected and served faithfully and well in this capacity until 1862. At this time he was a fine type of the Southern gentleman. Handsome, dignified, of a cheerful disposition, in easy circumstances, and the possessor of a happy and hospitable home, life's pathway to him seemed bright and joyous. But the shock of resounding arms in fratricidal strife was soon to break the enchantment of the scene. War, civil war, grim and hideous, with all its horror and desolation, broke upon the country. call to arms was heard throughout the land, and Colonel Robertson, partaking of the spirit which animated his section of country, raised a company of one hundred and fifty men in Iberville Parish, was elected captain, and left for the seat of war. His company was enrolled as Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Louisiana Infantry. Its local name was the Iberville Guards. With his command he was ordered to Vicksburg, and participated in the bombardments, engagements, and siege which have made that city celebrated in history and caused the fame of its assailants and defenders to be recorded in story and in song. He remained at Vicksburg until its surrender.

Among other events of the war in which he took part prior to being stationed at Vicksburg was the battle of Baton Rouge, on the 5th of August, 1862, in which he served as volunteer aid to General Ruggles. At the close of hostilities he returned to Louisiana and settled with his family at Baton Rouge, where he resumed the practice of the law.

All of his property had been swept away by the storm of war. It was the common fate of all, or nearly all, and he complained not. He addressed himself with quiet determination to the task of supporting, amid greatly altered conditions, a large family, and with commendable fortitude battled bravely against poverty, always the neritage of desolating war. A remunerative practice enabled him to build up a comfortable home in the capital city of his State, and there, avoiding for years the allurements of official station, he quietly enjoyed the tranquil happiness of domestic life so congenial to his disposition.

In 1876 the Democracy of the Sixth Congressional district of Louisiana nominated him as their candidate for Congress

It seemed like a forlorn hope, but so great was the esteem in which he was held, even by members of the opposite party, that he was elected. This was to the Forty-fifth Congress, a Democratic Congress, which elected as its Speaker that distinguished Pennsylvania Democrat, SAMUEL J. RANDALL, still a member and a leader of this House, full of honors, but not of years, with other honors, I trust, higher and better, yet to be pressed upon him by a grateful party and an appreciative country.

Mr. RANDALL, recognizing the abilities of Colonel Robertson, made him chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, notwithstanding it was his first term of service in a new and untried arena. He was peculiarly fitted for this position. He had been reared on the banks of the Mississippi River, had watched the rise of the floods and the fall thereof, and, in short, had that experience with the great river and that knowledge of its phenomena which enabled him to deal successfully with the subjects referred to his com-

He took a leading part in framing and passing through Congress the legislation creating the Mississippi River Commission. This bill was reported from the committee of which he was chairman, and as such he had charge of it on the floor of the House and of the time allowed for debate. It came up for consideration in June, 1879, and an interesting incident of that day's proceedings was the following: General Gar-field, then a member of the House, sent a page across the hall to his desk with the request to yield him ten minutes' time in support of the bill.

Colonel Robertson was only too glad to do this, appreciating his liberal and broad-gauge statesmanship on all great questions of national importance, and knowing the ability and eloquence with which he would handle the subject, and of his great influence with the Republican side of the House. General Garfield thus closed the debate in one of his masterly speeches, which carried conviction with every sentence, and the liberal sentiments he expressed were greeted with applause on both sides of the House.

The bill passed by a vote of 166 for it as against 11 in opposition, and passed the Senate by a vote of 48 to 4.

Colonel Robertson was re-elected to the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses. In the Forty-sixth he again served as chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and it was during this Congress that the commission bill was passed, as previously referred to.

At the end of his service in the Forty-seventh Congress he returned to the practice of his profession, and continued in private life until 1886, when he was again, and for the fourth time, nominated and elected to Congress.

This was the Fiftieth Congress. His term of service began March 4 1887, but he never lived to occupy the seat. On the 2d of August, 1887, he died at his residence in the city of Baton Rouge, after an illness of about two weeks, of asthma and bronchial affection, from which he had suffered for several years. His remains were interred in Mag-nolia Cemetery, near Baton Rouge, with religious services after the forms of the Methodist Episcopal Church and amid the impressive ceremonics of the order of Free Masonry, of which he was a member.

On the receipt of the news of his death the governor of the State issued an executive order, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF LOUISIANA, Baton Rouge, August 2, 1887.

Baton Rouge, August 2, 1887.

W. Robertson, an eminent and distinguished citizen of this State, which event occurred to-day at 1 o'clock. The deceased had served his district three consecutive terms in Congress, and was re-elected again to the Fiftieth Congress. During his public career he had served his State and district well and faithfully, and was devoted to their interests. His services in behalf of the levees were valuable and important. The state-house will be closed on the day of his funeral, and the flag displayed at half mast at the capitol building.

Done and signed this 2d day of August, 1887.

The death of a man so prominent and so useful to his State was everywhere received with manifestations of sorrow and regret. Since his majority he had been associated with well-nigh every campaign of the Democratic party in Louisiana.

Possessed of great firmness of purpose, and of considerable oratorical ability, he was a man of force, and always commanded attention on the hustings and in the halls of legislation. He was justly regarded as one of the ablest advocates in his section of the State in the practice of the criminal law.

The high esteem in which he was held by the members of the bar is attested by the following extract, taken from the resolutions adopted by the bar of the parish of West Baton Rouge on receiving news of his

Resolved, That in his death the legal profession loses one of its brightest or-naments, the parish, a good, noble, and faithful servant, and the State at large one of its worthlest sons.

With what might be called the professional politician class, Colonel Robertson enjoyed no great degree of popularity. His ways were too direct, his frankness too great, his methods too simple and open. There was something about him which impressed all who came in contact with him that here was a man of conviction and force; a man of resolve and earnestness; a man of a lofty conception of duty and the courage to essay its full performance; a man who could not be swayed or swerved from the straight line of what he deemed to be right—in short, a man who could not be used for purposes ulterior to those legitimately connected with the position he filled or aspired to fill.

But with the masses of the common people, with the small farmers and landholders, the mechanics and laborers, he was universally popular. These instinctively regarded him as their friend; they intuitively felt that a warmer and fuller sympathy existed in him for and towards them than was the case with most of the public men they met, and as a consequence no man in his district stood closer to them than he, or could rely so securely upon their support. Early in his acquaintance with the people bonds of union and ties of good-will and friendship were formed and cemented which continued to the day of his death, and made possible the useful and honorable career at the bar and in public life which was his.

Colonel Robertson was an ardent sportsman, and his passion for the rod and gun never abated, and continued strong in him to the day of his death.

All through his life he enjoyed no recreation as much as he did the camp hunts" for deer, which in his day, as now, were in vogue in Louisiana. With a few boon companions—genial spirits of a kindred nature—with their horns and hounds and guns and saddle-horses, accompanied or followed by a wagon or two loaded with provisions and sundries for the maintenance and comfort of the inner man and beast, with Cuffee to cook and Sambo to "tend camp," he would go forth a day's journey into the piney woods of the Florida parishes of Louisiana, and there for a week or so engage in the delightful sport of chasing the deer or bear, or decoying the wild turkey, which abounded amid the fastnesses and solitude of their native forests, or else, varying the sport, in beating the limpid streams of the neighborhood with troll and fly for the sportive trout and the predatory pike, or jack-fish.

And around the camp-fire at night, with bountiful good cheer and hearty welcome for "the natives" who visited camp, his guests and himself would entertain each other and them by stories of deeds of prowess, cunning, and skill wrought in the sportsman's line on that occasion and others.

These annual camp hunts afforded him that relaxation which he liked best from the exactions of business or the cares and annoyances incident to public life.

While making no pretensions to piety, Colonel Robertson was a man of deep religious convictions, and died at peace with the world and with his God. He was a great reader of the Bible. Scarcely a day passed without his reading a chapter or two before going to his breakfast. His favorite chapter in the good book was the 37th Psalm, the key-note of which is, "Trust in the Lord and do good." As a public man Colonel Robertson leaves a long record of useful and honorable service, which his State remembers with gratitude, and of which his descendants in this and future generations may well be

Mr. HOOKER withholds his remarks are for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is said that the "remorseless past stands ever near, breathing through the broken cords of life its never-ending dirge." The past will be repeated through all time. Sorrows are woven into the web and woof of every life's experience, and on each day as it passes the cries of the bereaved break upon the ear. Death invades every habitation, and "life after life flowers out from the darkness but to sink back into it again."

How often these truths force themselves upon us. During my short service in this House thirty-eight members of Congress have joined the great majority." Neither friends nor love nor renown could rescue them from the remorseless destroyer. In these brief years each State of the Republic has inscribed notable names on the death-roll; my own those of Morton and Hendricks and Orth; and Louisiana, the loss of whose honored son we lament to-day, those of Leonard and Hahn and Robertson. Death touched these distinguished men, laborers with us here, and they put aside the burdens of this weary life and passed out of sight. "Dying they have left a memory like the breath of summers full of sunshine."

Allow me on this sad occasion to pay my humble tribute to the memory of Edward W. Robertson. My acquaintance with him, although brief, was indeed a most pleasant one. It began and ended with his term as Representative here. I saw him first at the meeting of the Forty-fifth Congress, in October, 1877; often met him during that and the subsequent Congresses in which he served, and we were for a time domiciled under the same roof. Of his home life, of the details of his life-history, his labors and achievements without this body. I have no personal knowledge; but one so often selected by his neighbors for responsible public trusts must have held a high place in their esteem. That he was twice chosen auditor of public accounts for the great State of Louisiana, and four times a Representative to this House by a people who had known him long and well, is an eloquent testimonial to the excellence of his private life.

Honorable distinction like this is won by those only who merit it. The citizen who could thus succeed must have been well equipped for his work and prepared to "seize the opportunity as it passed." The world only pushes a man the way he has made up his mind to go. "If he would go upward it pushes him upward." Those only who stand near one, who view his life in every change of circumstance, who see him in shadow and in sunshine, can accurately estimate him. While my relations to Edward W. Robertson were not intimate, I was a witness to his work here. He impressed me as an active and vigilant Representative; as one who had a watchful eye to all that concerned the welfare of his people. He brought to his work a force of will, a quickness of perception that made him a valuable public servant.

He did courageously whatever duty bid him do. His methods were at all times plain, direct, and conscientious. In social intercourse he eschewed the mere mannerisms of the times and was affable and courteous to all. His mental processes seemed robust rather than crit-ical—impulsive rather than reflective. He did not often address the House, and his speeches were suggestive of strength of thought more than of elegance of expression. He did not hesitate to attack when duty directed it.

When he believed a corporation of his State—one of immense wealth and of almost unlimited influence-had become an infamous scheme to rob the people, he defied its power and denounced it in language as forcible as it was bitter. From a speech made by him in this House against this iniquity I quote:

Its unscrupulous audacity is only equaled by the secrecy of its counsels. It acts without warning, it strikes without premonition, and the cries of its victims are drowned in the arrogant exultations over its success. It possesses the power, which it ruthlessly exerts, to plunder the ignorant and unwary of sixty millions, and its dupes may be found in every corner of this vast empire. A monopoly of the worst description, and backed by both national and State authority, it laughs to scorn the impotent efforts of its enemies to arrest it in its course. Every official, judicial, legislative, and executive, is at its beck, and those who dispute its power are summarily removed to give place to more pliant tools. Where gold can not reach, it finds in a venal press the way to crush and destroy.

No power is too high to attack, no means too low to use, when it suits the policy of its action. It illustrates the saying of Coke: "It not only possesses no soul, but it is equally destitute of all pity, all mercy, all remorse." Once entangled in its meshes there is no escape for its dupes.

This speech was a vigorous and manly protest against a monster iniquity which, intrenched in its wealth and its social and political power, was debauching the public sentiment and defying the moral sense of the This courageous attack on this colossal swindle was ap-planded by good people everywhere.

No one who served with him will forget the lively interest he took in all legislation looking to the improvement of the levees and navigation of the Mississippi River. Nothing tending to improve this the greatest of our inland water ways failed to secure his support. Of the friends of liberal appropriations for our rivers and harbors he was among the most active and pronounced.

In that struggle that brought sorrow to so many hearts he went with his people and shared with them its dangers and sufferings. Of this I do not speak to either condemn or approve. To this sad epoch in our history he never referred but to deplore it. I believe he sincerely rejoiced that "from under the blood-stained sod of our battle-fields there had sprung a new and more vigorous growth" of freedom and brotherhood. Those who joined on either side of this terrible conflict are rapidly passing away, and time, with generous hand, is engaged in removing its every wound from wood and field.

Nature is teaching us a lesson. As if to show its abhorrence of the bloody and desolating struggle, it is fast removing its landmarks from the face of the earth. It has effaced the furrows plowed by shot and shell, and out of the track of the cannon and the war steed are springing verdure and flowers. Peace and plenty smile in the places laid waste by our devastating campaigns. The yellow grain ripens on the

The good angel is mellowing the hates and bitterness born of the struggle, inspiring a common pride in our matchless institutions and a love of country that will make our Union inseparable forever.

Sad occasions like this start afresh the currents of our better natures;

they soften our asperities and tend to restore that fraternal feeling which is the chief source of our strength and our glory as a people. They make us feel that life is too short for hates, and on the tragedy of blood in which each played his part they invoke that generous charity which forgets and forgives. In death's presence how deformed and sinful hate appears. How ambition shrivels into nothingness when we are made to see that he who but yesterday was full-armored for the battle is to-day-

But, Mr. Speaker, I will not interrupt these proceedings further. With Edward W. Robertson—

We question vainly. Yet it somehow pleases,
When they have spoken the last good-by,
It somehow half the pain of parting eases,

In the vast solitudes of stars and spaces,
There may be consciousness and life and hope,
And that when we must yield to death's embraces
There may be scope
For the unfolding of the better powers,
So sadly stifled in this life of ours.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Mr. Edward Whit Robertson began in the Forty-fifth Congress, when he came to take the seat to which he had been elected from the Sixth Congressional district of Louisiana. It was not long before his associates in legislation discovered his real worth and sterling qualities of mind and heart, and it is a source of sorrow to me to-day that time and strength do not permit me to do that full justice to his memory which my disposition prompts. But I was unwilling on an occasion like this to remain silent for reasons that must be entirely understood by those about

It has been already said that in the Forty-fifth Congress I, as Speaker of this House, appointed him as chairman of the Committee on Missis-He was reappointed by me in the Forty-sixth Congress. The appointment was made after a painstaking inquiry and a full conference with those Representatives who then had this great undertaking directly in charge; and I can say that he brought to the discharge of the duty to which I assigned him intense and unceasing industry, great energy of mind, and full knowledge of the subject, and in conse quence he secured the confidence of the House and the success of the measure which was placed in his charge. His selection for this duty was prompted by two considerations: First, I thought that such an undertaking as the Mississippi levees should be committed to the care of its friends; and second, I thought that such position should be given to one who was capable of doing justice to a measure which was calculated to be of lasting benefit to those he represented.

I was not mistaken in that selection. It was true that he was deeply concerned in the welfare of his immediate constituents who lived along the banks of the Mississippi River, but so far as my observation extended and I was able to judge from his action in this House he never allowed himself to forget the larger duties which he owed to the inter-

beautiful State.

He was a man modest and without pretension, but he was righteous in the search for truth as to every subject to which he applied his mind. His gentle and winning courtesy drew to him hosts of friends. He was greatly honored by his own people, who knew him best, to the hour of his death. Such lives are the solid foundation upon which our institutions, if successful, must rest.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the House during the first two terms of service of Edward W. Robertson. My acquaintance with him began with the Forty-seventh Congress. In a body so large as this House, composed of gentlemen drawn together from every district and Territory of the Union, constantly occupied with exacting public duties, acquaintances are not rapidly formed, but it was my good fortune to form the acquaintance of Mr. Robertson soon after the meeting of the Forty-seventh Congress, which ripened into a cor-dial friendship. We were members of the same committee during that

Mr. Robertson was in that Congress as a Democrat, a member of the minority. It is often assumed that members of the minority, not being directly responsible for legislation, are less attentive to the current proceedings of the House than members of the majority. This is not true as a general rule. It was not true as to Mr. Robertson. He was one of the most vigilant and attentive of the members, carefully noting every step in the current proceedings of the House, and never losing sight of the great agricultural and commercial interests of his great and Louisiana and her great commercial city always have occupied, and always must occupy, a most important and interesting relation to the Union. Her magnificent delta, inexhaustible in fertility, reclaimed from the ocean by the plastic forces of nature toiling on through the countless centuries, covered with rich cane-fields and the golden fruits of the tropics, and warmed by the genial sun-light of eternal spring, may challenge the fairest valleys of the globe to a comparison. Her geographical relations to the Union are, if possible, still more interesting. Resting upon the Gulf of Mexico, she is the especial guardian of the outlet to the ocean of the commerce of the prosperous commonwealths that border upon the great river of the continent. It was a safe prediction of the First Consul of France, when he surrendered this inviting region to the United States, that the nation that should hold the mouth of the Mississippi would be the foremost of the nations. Mr. Robertson represented and guarded the important interests of his State with marked ability and patient industry.

He addressed the House during the Forty-seventh Congress in an able and carefully considered speech in behalf of the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi, in connection with the other great water ways of the central portions of the Union. He discussed the important sugar industry of his State in the broad spirit of an American statesman. But while the services of Mr. Robertson were of great value to his State, the enduring honor that gathers around his name and memory in my judgment rests upon a measure having no direct relation to her material interests—a measure of a class which seldom obtain a hearing in the halls of Congress, involving the tone of a just public sentiment, the moral well-being of our people—the protection of the feeble against the wiles and artifices of scheming avarice and of legalized deception and fraud.

In an evil hour, in the midst of the disorder incident to the late civil war, a lottery had been incorporated in Louisiana with immense powers, which, reaching out into all sections of the Union and bloated with ill-gotten wealth, defied public opinion and denounced its vengeance on any citizen who should call in question its dishonest methods. Edward W. Robertson challenged the right of this corporation to employ the mails, the postal system of the Union, to distribute the seductive poison of the massion for cambling among the people of the United States.

son of the passion for gambling among the people of the United States. He brought a protest against it of the just moral sentiment of the American people into this Hall and gave it a voice. He demanded that the grand postal system of the United States devised by Frankiin, designed to diffuse the light of intelligence over the whole land and elevate the whole people, an agency of government intended to reach with beneficence every fireside and home, should not be degraded to the wretched employment of enticing the young, the unwary, the feeble, into the den of the gambler, into the toils of a mercenary and merciless corporation, whose wealth only expressed the deluded hope, the agony and despair of its victims!

Congress from time to time had enacted provisions of law partially withdrawing from such schemes of fraud the use of the mails. Mr. Robertson sought to uproot the evil "by prohibiting the transportation through the mails of publications containing lottery advertisements." If the publishers of newspapers thought proper to sell their columns to gamblers and aid them in their fraudulent schemes, the postal agencies, designed for the good of the people, should be closed against them. It was an effectual remedy, perhaps the only effectual remedy, for a great evil.

Mr. Robertson's speech in support of this bill was delivered in the House on the 23d day of February, 1883. It was his last and greatest work in this House. That speech alone entitles Edward W. Robertson to a high place in the history of his country. It is a great speech, rendered important and of high moment by reason of the great evil it assailed. The occasion placed him in a commanding position. He stood up as the champion of the best moral sentiment of the American people, of the virtuous home and the honest fireside; he denounced in words that burned the infamy of the traffic that amassed wealth by playing upon the groundless hopes, the credulity, excited passions, and the very weakness and frailty of its victims. In his argument there is no parleying and paltering. This mercenary power, although clothed with the forms of law, that amasses wealth by preying upon the feeble and the poor, must be crushed out!

While the argument of Mr. Robertson was directed against this seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate of the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate and the last the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate in the seductive and victors form of members in capacitate in the seductive and victors form of the last the seductive and victors of the last the seductive and victors of the last the

While the argument of Mr. Robertson was directed against this seductive and vicious form of gambling in general as fatal to the good morals of our people, it was especially directed against the corporation to which I have referred. It is a powerful philippic against that extraordinary feature in the legislation of a great State in the closing years of the nineteenth century. The following passage will indicate the vigor and force of his argument and the extraordinary power that such an institution may attain in a free government until the public sense of right is fully aroused:

No power is too high to attack, no means too low to use when it suits the policy of its action after being once determined. It illustrates the saying of Lord Coke: "It not only possesses no soul, but it is equally destitute of all pity, all mercy, and all remorse." Once entangled in its meshes there is no escape for its dupes. A bribe once accepted the threat forever hangs over the head of its victim. And strangest of all the momentuum of its power, contracted by a long series of years of wrong-doing with impunity, has been so great that it can exist in defiance of all law, and defies the proof that it exists without a charter. It makes no public statements of its affairs, permits no inspection of its books, and its grasp of monopoly exercises all the police functions of an independent sovereignty, allied with the inquisitorial power of a secret tribunal. It is a jealous mistress, and allows no rival within the fair domain of the State. None can plunder its subjects. It keeps their goods and possessions under guard against the attacks of kindred institutions.

His relations with the members of this House in the Forty-seventh Congress were pleasant and cordial. He was a disciple of Jefferson, and stood with unfaltering firmness by the principles of that great champion of the rights of the people. His bearing was that of an intelligent, frank, cordial gentleman, not obstrusive, but equal to any emergency that might arise, positive in his convictions and prepared to stand by them under all conditions; an enemy of false pretense, subterfuge, and deceit, with a heart full of sympathy for the poor and the unfortunate.

Edward W. Robertson was elected by the people of his district to the Fiftieth Congress, but to the sincere regret of those who had enjoyed his friendship in Congress in former years, Providence decreed that he should never return, and a son worthily occupies his seat in this Hall.

If, as the wisest and best of men in all ages have believed, the soul of man is immortal, who shall say that in the last moment, with the light of eternity breaking upon his vision, in the review of his life, his spirit was not buoyed up by the remembrance that he had boldly upheld in this Hall the cause of virtue, purity, and honor against a venal power that assailed them. "Peace to the just man's memory." Peace to his askes. Honor to his name.

Peace to his ashes. Honor to his name.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to speak at length on this occasion either as to the private character or the public services of Hon. Edward W. Robertson, to whose memory we this day pay tribute. That duty I leave to others more familiar with his life and character, and more competent to speak of them than I am. But it was my pleasure to have served with Colonel Robertson in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, and during that time I had an opportunity to observe something of his character and services as a member of this body. And it gives me pleasure, Mr. Speaker, at this time to contribute my testimony to the dignified and courteous, as well as able and faithful, manner in which he discharged his public duties as a Representative in Congress.

his public duties as a Ropresentative in Congress.

I can not say, Mr. Speaker, that our relations were intimate, but they were from our first acquaintance pleasant. We were natives of the same State, and from that fact perhaps we often met in a social way, and sometimes we came in contact with each other during the debates and proceedings of the House, and I ever found him genial and pleasant in social intercourse and a gentleman of high character for integrity and ability. That he was honest and conscientious, as well as able, earnest, and faithful in the discharge of his public duties while a member of this House, no one who served with and knew him will, I think, for one moment doubt.

As a Representative living on the Mississippi River, which flows through one of the richest, grandest, and most productive valleys in the world, he was earnestand untiring in his efforts to secure the adoption of such measures as looked to the improvement of that great river, which with its tributaries gives to the great valley through which it flows 14,000 miles of navigable waters. I well remember how earnestly and with what ability he labored in that direction. I believe he was called the father of the Mississippi River Commission, and certainly he labored faithfully and diligently to establish it. And if the work of that commission shall only meet with the success which we hope it may, and result in a thorough improvement of the river and in preventing the annual loss of property which occurs from its overflow, it will add luster to the name of this able and faithful legislator.

The work of originating a plan for a thorough systematic improvement of the Mississippi River was perhaps the most important service of Colonel Robertson while a Representative in Congress. But he was active in other directions and entitled to great credit for the earnest effort made by him to prevent and suppress lotteries. He made in the House in February, 1883, an able and exhaustive speech in support of a bill introduced by him for that purpose, which exhibited not only a high standard of morals in legislation but a high order of ability and research. That speech is well worthy of study by every friend of good morals. Among other acts of his while a member of this body, and which was in the interest of the people he represented, was a resolution introduced by him and passed through Congress withdrawing from public sale the public lands in the States of Louisiana and Florida during pending legislation and reserving such lands for disposal under the homestead law. This resolution was intended to secure homes for the homeless and to keep the public lands out of the hands of speculators, and his action in that respect is worthy of all commendation.

I have referred to these acts of Colonel Robertson, Mr. Speaker, merely to show something of his character as an able and faithful representative of his people and of the country.

Colonel Robertson was a leading, prominent citizen of the State in which he lived from his infancy, and served his people in many positions of honor and trust in peace and in war, and in all of them, I have no doubt, served them with fidelity and ability. I could well wish that part of his service in war which had for its purpose the dismemberment of the Union might be blotted out forever. But he no doubt was honest and sincere in his action, and I am glad to know that even before the war had fully ended he took upon himself a solemn oath in the presence of Almighty God that he would thenceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States. And that oath I have no doubt he faithfully kept until the day of his death.

Mr. Speaker, Colonel Robertson was elected a member of this Congress; but he was not permitted by an All-wise Providence, to whose supreme will we must all bow, to take his seat here. And on the 2d day of August, 1887, he departed this life, honored and respected by the people among whom he lived and died. It was with deep regret, I know, that all of us who knew him heard the news of his death. But he, full of honors, has paid the debt from which there is no exemption to any of us, and sooner or later we must all follow him. All honor to his memory.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in honoring a college-mate, Julian Hart-ridge, of Savannah, Ga., I said to this House that there were various relations which we sustained to each other, and that these relations often determined the members who were to speak in honor of those who had departed.

In these remarks I said:

It would take a Psyche to assort and arrange the "confused" seeds out of which have grown so many and such endearing relations of regard and affection. Some of us live here under the same roof, some serve on the same committee, some take the same side on favorite themes, some have had in our changeful American life mutual friends who have brought them together, some are kind to each other by association in their own States, and others, though far distant, share early and delightful reminiscences, and among them that one which springs radiant out of the morning of life, enhanced and beautified by college partialities and studies.

My relations to Col. Edward White Robertson did not arise from any association upon any committee or upon any relations we sustained before we met in Congress, either State or otherwise, or from any congeniality upon special themes in which we were interested in our American legislation, but it so happened that we were thrown side by side in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses; and therefore we became intimate. I knew something of the relations which he bore to public life. I had occasion to know something of the trials and hardships through which he had reached his manhood and his emi-

We lay sometimes much stress, Mr. Speaker, upon the elements of blood or heredity, or perhaps these elements are related to associa-tions connected with early and ancestral scenes and struggles.

I think the gentleman whom we honor to-day made the character for which he is honored because of those early associations. By them he was inspired after he left the State of Tennessee, where he was born, and settled upon the Mississippi, with which he becames o intimately bound.

The State of Tennessee has in its delegation to-day a gentleman whose education and refinement have led him within the paths of literature. I refer to the honorable member from Memphis [Mr. Phelan]. In the elegant history of his State he has thrown a romantic interest about the State of Jackson, Houston, Grundy, Sevier, Polk, and Robertson and others, pioneers, soldiers, statesmen, and heroes who overcame the wildness of the Tennessee and Cumberland valleys, and moved on outside of the borders of Tennessee for new States to institute and conquer.

Happening upon an old map of Tennessee, I noted immediately south of the Kentucky line, but not wholly separated from the dark and bloody ground of Kentucky, within the crescent made by the Cumberland, which flows from the mountains on the east to the beautiful Ohio, the name and "route of Robertson." His route from Cumberland Gap and from further beyond in the east, crossing the Cumberland River in Kentucky and reaching to Nashville, makes his name historic along with the State within whose borders his ancestors lived.

His grandfather was born in Nashville. He saw the light upon the banks of the Cumberland. That city is now the conspicuous center and capital of Tennessee. He traversed the districts represented by the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin and Mr. Washington]. It is the great rich limestone country of the Cumberland. This land creates crops and heroes

The descendant of this pioneer sought the Mississippi River over the lands represented by my friend [Mr. ENLOE]. He was of a sturdy class.
Tennessee was separated by mountains from the older States of North Carolina and Virginia. Coming from an old Scotch stock, a tough element that never failed to resent indignity, while it righted wrong, it brought over the splendid eminences and out of the wilderness public and private prosperity out of every possible disaster.

From the Carolinas and from Virginia this stock had emigrated over the mountains. The names of the early counties of Tennessee—the Seviers, Sullivans, Nathaniel Greenes, Waynes, Spencers, Caswells, Williamsons, Sumners, Wilsons, and the Montgomerys—indicate whole chapters of our heroic history, every man a pioneer or a Revolutionary hero. The incarnation of all this energy is Andrew Jackson. In the easy and luxurious modes of transportation at the present time, it is difficult to realize the difficulties of the earlier settlers who led and followed the tide of emigration from Southern Virginia and North Carolina. Some of these migrations were made into the then Indian territory. They were made against the remonstrances and con-tentions of the Cherokees and other tribes. This frontier was a barrier which only served to provoke our ante-Revolutionary emigration. Some acts of the Legislatures of the Provinces of North Carolina and Virginia greatly encouraged, both by franchise and bounties, the surmounting of these barriers. Besides, there were complaints in the provinces, and the hardy pioneers in pursuit of fortune, either to repair or to make their fortune, or to rise in life, penetrated the wilderness in order to enjoy a certain independence of their own. Some of them, like the Huguenot Sevier, who became a governor; others, like Boone, who piloted this new civilization and never stopped until he had reached Missouri; and others, like Robertson, as early as 1770, and with the spirit of the Mecklenburgh declaration of independence in their minds, and with the ambition of erecting free government for themselves and children, live in the annals of those early days. They have received the plaudits of esteem and affection of their hardy offspring, to whom they gave a robust frame, a strong mind, an intrepid spirit, and an invincible honesty of purpose.

The story of Robertson was that of a man, at first, of an unpromising future, with neither learning, means, nor friends. But difficulties were his helper. He lived to figure as the nucleus of a splendid community in Tennessee, along with other heroes whose names are fixed in pioneer

It is hard to realize the little trapping canoes and buckskin huntingshirts upon the Cumberland of that early day. The first commerce in which they engaged was with both Frenchmen and Indians, trading far up into Illinois and as far down as the Spanish Natchez. men were the framers of constitutions, whose States have their emblems in the escutcheons above us.

They combined the gallantry of the volunteer with the cunning of the red man and the heroism of a composite race. Before them melted away, as a famous Cherokee orator said of them, like balls of snow before the sun, the tribes who once held these lands.

Through one of these heroes we learn the characteristics of all. He has been described as the "negotiator between his countrymen and their Indian neighbors, a citizen who well united the character of the patriot and the patriarch; the active friend of his country, who possed, in an eminent degree, the confidence, esteem, and veneration of all his contemporaries."

This man was Robertson, and he was, in this movement across the mountains of America, a fit companion and type of Andrew Jackson.

Associated with such men and pervaded by such influences, the father of the man whom we honor, as early as 1826, when the son was but two years of age, moved from Tennessee to Louisiana. He engaged in planting cotton in the parish of Iberville. He became wealth. He had wealth. He had more. He had good sense; and therefore he increased his capital. The social and cheerful spirit which he inherited from his father was transmitted to his son. That son is the subject to-day of our eulogies.

It is significant, sir, that when the father moved from Tennessee he settled upon the Mississippi at Baton Rouge. No less a stream than the Mississippi satisfied his ambitious movement and mind. The father died in 1839, leaving the son, sixteen years of age, with an ample fortune. By some reflux wave the son returned to Nashville. There he finished his education in 1844, on the spot where his ancestor had blazed out through the forests his early adventures.

How Colonel Robertson performed his life-duty will be rehearsed by others who knew him better than myself. What influences he obtained from the celebrated Nashville convention in 1844; how he was inspired in life by his visit to General Jackson at "The Hermitage," referred to by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]; what energies and adventure came from his communion with the old hero, who talked about General Robertson, his grandfather; how he was led from a life of uncertainty and repose to a life of study and labor, in which the law became his delight; what inducements led him to leap to the front as an "orderly sergeant" in the Mexican war; what sweet, persuasive influences in 1847, after that war was over, came from his marriage with a beautiful and loving helpmeet—these memories belong more to domestic than to political reminiscences.

His political life herea was the back of the Minister of the law in the law to t

His political life began upon the banks of the Mississippi. It began in the locality where it closed. It became famous in 1847, when he in the locality where it closed. It became famous in 1847, when he was promoted to the Legislature in spite of the Whig majority which then prevailed. In 1850 he began earnestly his practice at the bar. In 1854 he was again sent to the Legislature, and during that service he conceived the idea which was the chivalry of his life. He made it the subject of conversation while he sat at my side. That idea was the utilization of the Mississippi, the building of levees to make that great right the great highway of our interior converses. river the grand highway of our interior commerce.

It was Mr. Robertson who introduced and had passed a bill making it incumbent on the part of the State of Louisiana to bear one-half of the expense of building the levees. He thus desired to relieve the peo-ple of one-half of the expenses. That law was having its full fruition when the civil war unfortunately interfered.

It 1857 he held the important office of auditor of public accounts. Being re-elected, his term of service in all was four years.

Friends have pictured him, as he then was, of a manly form, and with a cheerful and kindly disposition. He had with a firm lip, expressive of his will, a happy expression, a courageous independence, and a principle which yielded to no one for its defiance of disingenand a principle which yielded to no one for its defiance of disingennousness and dishonesty. It was, indeed, a sad toesin which called him to our civil war. But the very name of Baton Rouge—a bloody baton—seemed to be contagious. He enrolled himself in the Twentyseventh Louisiana. A glance at the map will show the significance of the position which he and his compatriots occupied. The forts on the Mississippi, the investiture of Vicksburg, and the strategic importance of the vicinage all suggest that his work was intense, because local. It was unhappily a work of war. His baton was the Baton Rouge! The guards of Iberville were of his home. It was the name of his company. His letters from Vicksburg to his heloved wife are of his company. His letters from Vicksburg to his beloved wife are picturesque descriptions of the progress of the siege, out of which he came honorably courageous, and decorated with a preferment.

But these memories would seem, by the order of time and the clemency of the heart, to be obsolete. The son of the toilsome pioneer, the ambitious child of that pioneer's father, the soldier exiled from home, and returning humbly and modestly to his home after Federal successes and Confederate defeat; the lawyer resuming his meager practice after the world struggle in a "lost cause," still he did not succumb to despondency. He yielded nothing to the catastrophes of his life. He never thought of emigration to Mexico or South America. He emerged from these disasters; he came to Congress as a representative of the dominant and patriotic element of his suffering people.

Three times indorsed by his people, sustained by studious and careful practice of his profession and elevated in spirit-by an invincible honesty that no one ever challenged—he was enabled to resume his confidence among his people, though not his service here in the Fiftieth

It is my recollection, sir, that when he first came here the gentleman near me, Mr. RANDALL, was our Speaker. He promptly recognized Colonel Robertson's ability and his local relations, and I may say continental relations. He was created chairman of the Committee on Levees. It was the Mississippi that gave him inspiration and to this he was assigned. The banks of this splendid stream were familiar to his ken. Its trade, its currents, its caprices, he knew. He had seen them from early Above all he knew its importance as an avenue out of the heart and industry of inland America. He knew its exit to the ocean. He knew its uses in peace and, alas! he had found its terrible disasters to his people in war. It was his able report, often quoted here, for all committees and all wise action, that led to the best consideration of its protection as well as a grand channel of transportation, as a mobile though a lasting band of unity.

When the "Mississippi River Commission" had passed Congress he exclaimed, "This is the proudest moment of my life." After this expression he was reminded that he should be careful; that others might claim the credit of securing that for which he had given so much of his time, study, and labor.

"Let them," he exclaimed, "say what they will; I care little for the credit. Let the levees be built, and my people be made happy!"

It is within my own knowledge, sir, why it was that he failed to be returned to the Forty-eighth Congress. It is within my own knowledge.

edge that he was anxious to be vindicated for certain votes and opinions, and why he was returned to the Fiftieth. I was not here to meet him.

I was in another country.

It happens, however, in the order of nature, and by the providence of God, that men like him perpetuate in their offspring their intrinsic virtues. Therefore, the member from Louisiana, whom we deplore, is not without representation here. His son holds, and is worthy of, the seat of his father. I may be permitted to say that the modesty, independence, courtesy, and worth of the son compensate for the loss which the country has sustained in the death of the father.

It will be seen by my brief rehearsal that this man was toughened by experience. His was no butterfly flight to a land of summer where the orange blooms in the wintry air. These experiences connect him with mountain and river life, with peace and war, and with combats of all kinds. In these conflicts he yielded only to one conqueror—death!

For this man, and for every man of every race, death has a sinister, d, or sublime imagery. The Arab sees death as a black camel kneelsad, or sublime imagery. The Arab sees death as a black camel kneeling at the gates of hell; others see death as an angel or houri opening the gates of orient pearl. Some regard death as a rest of stirless, sleepful majesty, in which the human hero "lies down to pleasant dreams," and to a change which has no further change. Philosophers regard death as a matter of chemistry, and as easy as birth. To most of men is it not a dark and repelling horror—a skeleton, a shadow—and not, as it should be, another life, with roseate bloom of Eden loveliness? To one who has traveled over seas and land it is the end, sir, of a long and tiresome journey, only welcome when at the end, as it is blessed with meeting the loved ones who have gone before.

Whatever our mortal man be, whether hero, sage, rich, poor, bad, or good, death comes to each and to all with equal steps. To each and all

it comes as a terrific sadness

How we all strive to avert the great catastrophe which ends our mor-How we all strive to avert the great catastrophe which ends our mortal life! I am not, sir, averse to such laws here as look to human life, its liberty and preservation; but when the life is stranded I would, sir, it were on a shore of affection, without blasts or billows! Upon a silent and happy shore I trust our friend has found refuge and felicity. If honorable service would bring such a happy condition he has won his peaceful home among the immortal souls whom he loved. He has but stream.

but stooped-

Into a dark, tremendous sea of cloud; It is but for a time.

And he could say as he left us:

I press God's lamp Close to my breast; its splendor, soon or late, Will pierce the gloom. I shall emerge one day.

The Mississippi River, which he endeavored so earnestly to direct and restrain in its channel for purposes of public utility, rolls on, and will ever roll on, with "a perpetual sigh." Its waters are freighted with the atoms of earthly empire, whose organism and independence in the far-off realms of the Upper Missouri we have been discussing the past week.

There is a desolateness upon the banks of the great river as there is upon its sources; but this desolateness is the despair of nature—that so much human courage, chivalric goodness has passed down the stream to the eternal sca with the memory of Edward White Robertson!

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Robertson, to whom this tribute is being paid to-day by this House, was a native of my own State of Tennessee. He came from one of the pioneer and most distinguished families of that State. I first made his acquaintance in the Forty-sixth nessee. He came from one of the pioneer and most distinguished families of that State. I first made his acquaintance in the Forty-sixth Congress, and having in my school-boy days learned something of his family and of their history, my attention was naturally riveted upon the member from Louisiana. I became pretty well and closely acquainted with him in the business of this House and the legislation of the country in the two Congresses in which he and I served together. I have prepared no remarks, Mr. Speaker, in the nature of a eulogy upon Colonel Robertson, but knowing him as I did, I felt it to be my duty as one of those who in the providence of God have been permitted duty as one of those who in the providence of God have been permitted to remain and take an active part in the legislation of the country to which he was so dutiful, while he has passed away, I felt that it was a duty resting upon me as one of his associates upon this floor to bear but a few words of testimony to his worth as a man and his character as a legislator.

In the Forty-seventh Congress I had the honor to preside over the Committee on War Claims of this House, of which he was a member, and I am not saying too much when I declare that Colonel Robertson was one of the most faithful, painstaking, just, and fair-minded men connected with the committee. In this committee work, and of that I only propose to speak now, he was never behind. He was always at the meetings of the committee, and when Colonel Robertson investigated a case he did it without passion, without prejudice or predilection in any direction, except with a heartfelt desire to arrive at a true and just conclusion in regard to its merits. I had occasion to know something of the duties of that committee, and I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be improper for me in this connection to state that if there is any committee in this House where a man's capacity and integrity as well as his industry will be more severely tested and where his parts will be more clearly developed than in the War Claims Committee, I do not know it. I wish to say further, and it is about all I desire to say, that Colonel Robertson never, at any time, while friends, personal friends, political friends, old associates, people whom he had known in more prosperous days, were before the committee and called upon him for his assistance and aid in their behalf, I have never seen him in any manner swerve in any direction except to seek to arrive at a just, proper, and an honest conclusion in regard to every question which he was called to adjudicate or decide.

Others have spoken more in detail of his life and character. Speaker, all I desire to say I have now said, except to add in conclusion that in the providence of God he has gone, and I can only exclaim, in the language of Job, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." Peace to the ashes of Colonel Robertson and rest to his soul.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, we have paused in the midst of an exciting session to give expression to our grief at the loss of one of our brother members

Hon. E. W. Robertson is dead. The solemn word "death" brings to us a contemplation of the great fact that all mankind are doomed to decay and dissolution. Life and death were planted within us at the decay and dissolution. This and death were planted within to a the beginning. Life and death, the two great laws of nature, continue in the struggle for supremacy with the certainty that however long life may survive the contest, death will ultimately conquer all.

In the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses we heard as we sat in our seats on the roll-call of members the name of our deceased friend. His answer was always clear, distinct, and positive. His voice is no longer heard. His name has been dropped from our rolls; we no longer hear it announced from the Clerk's desk. His name has not been removed from our rolls simply by an order of the House, for we were delighted with his presence and companionship. It has not been erased by his constituency, for they loved to honor him and had re-elected him as a member of the present Congress. He has gone to meet the summons of his God. To this command we must all, sooner or later, bow.

The name of our departed friend has been transcribed from the roll of time to the book of eternity and, we trust, to everlasting life.

I never knew our departed brother until I met him in the Forty-fifth I served with him in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Fortyseventh Congresses. I had not the pleasure of serving on any committee with him, but in the Forty-seventh Congress my seat was near his. This afforded me the opportunity of a more intimate acquaintance with him, and enabled me to observe his character. I can testify to his genial manners and his social accomplishments which drew to him many personal friends.

He was always watchful of the proceedings of the House and never failed to express himself upon a measure when he believed it was his duty to do so, but he was not in the habit of addressing the House merely with the intention of attracting attention. He was a man of good attainments and ability.

He was a useful and faithful representative of his constituency, but his patriotism embraced the whole country.

I regarded him as a man of strong convictions, great energy, and conscientious in all that he advocated. He was not what we call a brilliant man; he was a sturdy and honest legislator, whose industry and intelligent thought resulted in great good to the country and his constituents. He was cut down by the scythe of time in the midst of a useful career. A laudable ambition to serve one's country and to be useful to mankind in our day is commendable. It is but natural that we should wish to live in history. But, after all, what is earthly fame? This sad occasion reminds us of the uncertainties of life and of the solemn thought that e'er long its struggles will be over. Who can believe death is the end? Who can say in his heart this is all there is of Where is the philosopher or seer that can coldly view humanity as the simple output of natural forces, to be relegated to nothing-The spark of intelligence implanted in man to go out as the lightning's glare or the whistling of the wind? We instinctively revolt at the thought.

No, sir; there is something beyond this life. There must be in the nature of things compensation somewhere; we know it is not here. The great disparities in the enjoyment and blessings of this world teach us that somewhere, somehow, there must be an evening up, else justice is a mockery and life itself a curse and a snare.

We can not say to our departed friend, "Dust to dust, ashes to ashes," and leave him food for the worms, shut up in the gloom of eternal night. The soul has separated itself from its earthly prison, and why not, if life, the spirit or the soul, can live in our frail bodies, and that body perish, who can say the spirit has not entered in another form and resumed an existence of a higher order and a happier state?

So live that when thy summons comes to join The innumerable caravan that moves To that mysterious realm where each shall take His chamber in the silent halls of death, Thou go not like the quarry-slave at night. Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, Edward White Robertson was born in the State of Tennessee in 1823, but in his infancy his parents removed to Louisiana, where he continued to reside until the day of his death. He received a collegiate education, and entered upon a course of legal studies just at the beginning of the Mexican war. Like many of the noblest youths of the country at that time, he volunteered as a private to serve in that war, and took part in that contest as a member of the Second Louisiana Volunteers. Returning to his home, he entered the law school of the University of Louisiana and graduated in 1850. In the mean time he had been elected a member of the lower house of the Louisiana Legislature, where he rapidly rose to distinction in his State. He was re-elected to the same position, and afterwards was twice elected auditor of the State.

In 1862 he entered the Confederate service as captain of a company, and served until the fall of Vicksburg, July 4, 1863, when he was captured by the Union forces. He did not again return to the military service. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of the law, and continued to follow that profession until elected to the Forty-fifth Congress. He was re-elected to the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Fiftieth Congresses, but died before the assembling of the latter Congress. It was my pleasure to serve with him in the three Congresses in which he was a member. I found him an earnest, conscientious man, of more than ordinary ability, of most exemplary habits and pleasing manner.

He did not take so prominent a part in the debates as did some other members, but when he spoke he always commanded the attention of the House, and favorably impressed all who heard him. That which most attracted my attention and gained my admiration for him was the earnestness of his manner and the deep conviction of right which actuated him. Such earnestness and candor are always indicative of honesty and a strict regard for the dictates of conscience. He was not an orator in the sense that oratory consists in well-rounded periods and high-sounding words; but he was an orator in the sense that oratory consists in a clear statement of the facts and deductions therefrom in reference to the matter under consideration. When he had stated the facts and had drawn his conclusions he resumed his seat and left to others that elaboration which more frequently detracts from the strength of one's position than otherwise.

He was a man of high sense of honor—a gentleman in the truest sense of that word. He was courteous to his fellow-members, and in turn commanded the highest respect and deference of all with whom he came in contact. He was free from concealment, free from cunning and de-ception of every kind. He was frank and outspoken, leaving nothing in doubt as to his true position.

He was attentive to his official duties, rarely absent from his seat in the House and earnestly devoted to the service of his constituents and to the people. His frequent election to positions of honor and public trust attests the esteem and admiration in which he was held by the people of Louisiana, where he had resided from his infancy. He leaves behind him a record of official integrity, of personal purity, and of pa-triotic devotion to the public weal. His memory will be cherished by all who knew him; his loss will be mourned by a large circle of friends and relatives, and his State will place his name in the list of those who and relatives, and his State will place his hallot have rendered her faithful and patriotic service.

Mr. Robertson was the grandson of General James Robertson, who was one of the pioneers of Virginia and Tennessee, having been born in Virginia in 1742. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and his character was marked by the peculiarities of both races. The grandfather was one of the most conspicuous of the pioneers of the Revolutionary period, and was engaged in numerous Indian wars, enduring great hardships and performing many heroic deeds. On one occasion, at the head or a colony of two hundred and fifty men, in an exposed position, har-assed by the Cherokee Indians, his companions were fast deserting him and seeking safer locations. He did not repreach them, but said:

Each one should do what seems to him his duty. As for myself, my station is here, and here I shall stay if every man of you deserts me.

And he did stay. His declaration on this occasion was not only characteristic of himself but of his grandson, whose loss we deplore and whose virtues we commemorate this day. Where duty called there was found Edward White Robertson. It mattered not to him what others might do or say. He took a firm stand for the right and adhered to his resolution, no matter whether he was supported or deserted by others.

One of the most striking and appropriate tributes to his memory which his late constituents have conferred upon him was in the election of his son, with great unanimity, as his successor as a member of this House. But to do this required, happily, no letting down of the high standard which should prevail in choosing Representatives in Congress. The son is worthy of his sire, as his sire was worthy of his illustrious grandfather.

True greatness consists in doing one's duty. In whatever station of life that duty may be, he who performs it well has done all that man or God requires. In the service of the State that which is most requisite for stability of government and the prosperity of the people is-

Men who their duties know, But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain.

Such a man was our deceased brother. And now, having ended his public service, having performed his whole duty to his State, his country, and his fellow-men, we commend his spirit to the favor and fellowship of his Creator.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker, with the sun fast sinking in the West and the hours of the Fiftieth Congress fast flying to its close, we have laid aside for a time the ordinary routine of legislation to pay a last tribute to one whose hours on earth are over, but whose life of kindly deeds, of able efforts, and patriotic actions lingers in memory still as the light lingers in the evening sky after the day has gone.

Sir, the words are not idle, the phrases are not empty, the tribute is not unearned which we pause this afternoon to offer to the memory of Edward White Robertson.

Elected from Central Louisiana to the Fiftieth Congress by a large majority, he died three months before it assembled. A devoted constituency, with high regard for his faithful service in the past, sent a son to sit in the father's stead. The members of this House from other States than Louisiana, whose public life on this floor commenced with the Fiftieth Congress, did not know the father upon whose death the son was selected to fill the uncompleted term. Hence the eulogies that have so far been pronounced have been uttered by friends of former years, by comrades and fellow-members of the Congresses before this. Full of detail as these eulogies have been, full as they have been of respect and appreciation, of affection and esteem, I can add but little more, and a part of that little will be a repetition of what has been already said.

Edward W. Robertson was born about sixty-six years ago, near Nash-ville, in Tennessee, a State then as now the mother of noble sons. He was brought by his parents when a child of two years to that beautiful region of Louisiana on the banks of the Mississippi River, to which Iberville gave his name. He was educated in Louisiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee. As a young collegian, he took front rank in the lecture room and was a leader in manly sports. On coming of age he de-termined to be a lawyer, but had scarcely begun his legal studies when he laid them aside to serve on the battle-fields of Mexico. From thence he is next found occupying a seat in the Legislature at the early age of twenty-four. Graduating afterwards in law, in which he enjoyed a successful practice, he was elected again to the Legislature, then to the position of State auditor, to which he was re-elected in 1858.

Such were, in brief, the chief incidents of his life up to the begin ning of the civil war. In that tremendous conflict which showed, through blood and agony, through desolation and tears, that the Constitution as the fathers made it was not a sufficient bond of union, and that for the perpetuation of the Union hereafter citizenship and its inherent obligation, allegiance, must be extended so as to make the citizen a citizen not of the State alone, but of the United States—in that tremendous conflict, amid those tragic scenes, he was an earnest and an active participant. He marched, fought, and endured side by side with his neighbors, his friends, and his countrymen, and like them, when defeat came, devoted his energies to healing the ghastly wounds that war had made.

Recognizing the ability with which he had served in so many stations, it is not remarkable that he was selected by his people in 1876 as a candidate for membership in this House. Elected in that year to the Forty-fifth Congress, he was re-elected to the Forty-sixth, again to the Forty-seventh, and once more, after an interval, to the Fiftieth Congress, and would have taken his seat on this floor after being elected for the fourth time, had not death ended forever his legislative career.

He would have come no stranger here, but would have been among friends, some of whom served with him for six years, who loved his genial qualities and respected his mental attainments, and who have told this evening in glowing terms of his virtues and his worth.

I shall not attempt, Mr. Speaker, to add to what they have said about his legislative career. Words from the lips of those who served with him through all that period, tributes offered by those who were engaged with him, on one side or the other, in legislative contests of and earnest, are more precious than any that I could utter or I could

I knew, but not intimately, the colleague for whom we mourn, for the generation of public men in Louisiana among whom he moved and by whom he was best known, was my father's more than mine. I well knew, however, of the esteem in which he was held, not only in the district which so often honored him, but by the people of the whole State whose faithful public servant he had also been.

It would have been singular indeed had he not been held in high esteem. As a soldier who served with gallantry in two wars, as a civilian who adorned every station which he had filled, what right had he not won to honor and esteem? Twice sent to the Legislature; elected again and again to a high State office; four times selected as a Representative in Congress, his record in all these positions bears no mark of calumny or of shame. It is white and unsullied as the marble slab that marks his tomb.

My dead colleague lived a life and held a creed which in great meas ure robbed the dread hereafter of its terrors; but making life on earth pleasant to others as he did, he had a keen appreciation of its joys himself. A wise counselor, an earnest advocate, an able legislator, ever zealous for the interests that clients or constituents had committed to his care, his love for manly sports gave at times fresh zest to his labors in their behalf. He loved to breathe the open air outside of courts and legislative halls. He loved the woods and fields, the shady dells where crystal streams and placid pools seemed made for lovers of the angler's art. He loved the chase. The whirr of wild-fowl's wings, the notes of hunter's horn, the deep baying of hounds in close pursuit, all made sweet melody to his ears.

But now, alas, the hand that was skilled with rod or pen alike, the voice that moved juries or contended for right and justice before the courts where the law is interpreted, or here where the laws are made, that hand is motionless, that voice is hushed in death.

When last in this Chamber he sat yonder full of life and vigor, and looking forward to many years more of usefulness. To-day he sleeps on a distant hillside a thousand miles and more away.

Close by that silent form is the home to which happiness and sun-shine ever came when he was near. Not far off the white towers of the State capitol, where thirty years ago he served, lift their lofty summits, fit emblems of the uprightness of his life. Near by also flows the great river whose banks witnessed his childhood's early sports, and to deepen whose shallows and control whose mighty floods were given his manhood's grandest efforts.

While he sleeps so silent there, the phenomena of nature will go on in their appointed courses just the same as if he and all the hosts who sleep with him had never lived or never died. The days will continue steep with him had never fived or never died. The days will continue to come and go in splendor, with dawn's red light and sunset's blush. The nights will ever gem the sky with stars. The seasons, as in all time, will mantle the earth with bloom, or verdure will deck the fields with harvests or shroud them with snow. And as the hours and days and seasons come and go, by a kind provision for our happiness, time will dull, as it ever does, the keen edge of grief. In the years that are to come it may be, it must be a consolation to the season and don't be. to come it may be, it must be, a consolation to the sons and daughters now grown to man's and woman's estate—to her who has been left to go down the path alone without the dear companion with whom she "climbed the hill thegither"—it must be some solace to them to feel that the priceless heritage of a name honored, esteemed, and beloved Sorrow for his loss did not come to them alone, for when their dearest companion, counselor, and protector was taken, not only was a loving husband and devoted father lost to them, but the State was deprived of an able and a faithful representative, poverty and distress were reft of a kind and sympathetic friend, justice lost a devoted champion, patriotism a bright ornament, Christianity a conspicuous exemplar!

There have been two similar bills reported favorably from the committee. This is practically an abandand military recommends. abandoned military reservation.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the facts as stated by the Senator from Missouri, and in view of the further fact that apparently the parties are awaiting the passage of this bill in order to commence work upon the line of railroad through the reservation, I ask for the passage of the bill

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported. It will be read at length for information.

Mr. ALLISON. If it takes no time, I shall not object. The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Omaha, Dodge City and Southern Railway Company, a corporation in the State of Kansas, be, and is hereby, granted a right of way, not to exceed 100 feet in width, across the Fort Hays military reservation, upon such line as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

RECEIVING-SHIP CLAIMS.

I submit the following resolution, and ask for Mr. CHANDLER. its present consideration:

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

*Resolved**, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate a statement concerning claims for extra allowances to officers and men of the Navy based on sea service on receiving-ships, showing the total gross amount of such claims which have recently been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the total amount of such claims now pending, and any estimate which been paid, the total amount of such claims now pending, and any estimate which may have been made in the Treasury Department of the probable total amount of all such claims; and that said Secretary be also directed to inform the Senate whether or not, either in the office of the Fourth Auditor or Second Comptroller, any lists of such probable claims for sea-pay and allowances for service on receiving-ships have been prepared in advance of the presentation by the claimants of their demands; and if so, why such lists have been prepared; and also whether or not clerks have worked evenings or otherwise out of office hours in preparation of the same; and whether or not copies of such lists or access to them or any knowledge of their contents have been allowed to or obtained by attorneys or claim agents; if so, who are such attorneys or claim agents; and further, whether or not any such claimants have, to the knowledge of the Treasury Department, paid or made bargains to pay commissions to attorneys or claim agents in the newspapers inviting correspondence from the heirs of officers or men of the Navy supposed to be entitled to extra allowances on account of sea service on receiving-ships; and if so, whether to the knowledge of the Treasury Department attorneys or claim agents have inserted advertisements in the newspapers inviting correspondence from the heirs of officers or men of the Navy supposed to be entitled to extra allowances on account of sea service on receiving-ships; and if so, whether to the knowledge of the Department such consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VANCE. I feel it my duty to object to the consideration of that or any other business unless I can obtain unanimous consent for an extension of the time fixed limiting the debate on the tariff bill to twentyfour hours. The most important of all the schedules is the woolen

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6963) to increase the pension of Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the rev-

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President—
Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from North Carolina in one moment. I ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock to-day the rule limiting debate to five minutes may be applied to this bill.

Several MEMBERS. Say 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. Two o'clock is suggested. I will say 2 o'clock to-day, allowing ten minutes instead of five.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that at 2 o'clock this afternoon—
Mr. BUTLER. I suggest 3 o'clock.
Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will modify my request and say 3

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock this afternoon— Mr. VANCE. I shall feel compelled to object to that, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown]

Mr. VANCE. I desire before the subject passes away I desire before the subject passes away to make the appeal which I undertook to make a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator to make a request except conditionally.

Mr. VANCE. I ask that the time for the discussion of this tariff question be extended twenty-four hours from the time fixed by the agreement that we have already made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original agreement was that the vote should be taken at 1 o'clock this afternoon. By subsequent agreement that period was extended until to-morrow at 1 o'clock. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the agreement be further extended so that the vote shall be taken on the bill and the pending amendments at 1 o'clock on Wednesday.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to say in support of that request that the most important, as it occurs to many of us, of all the schedules has not yet been touched. It was kept back out of its order when it was regularly reached, at the request of the Senator from Iowa, and to confine us now to a five-minute debate, with the little remnant of time remaining to us, is not doing justice to the importance of that great sub-

I trust, inasmuch as we have been able to manage this thing harmoniously by unanimous consent so far, that twenty-four hours more will be given, and that the time be given to the wool schedule, and not subject to be taken up by anything else that may be thrust in at the discretion of Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina I will say that we have proceeded with as much diligence as possible in the consideration of the bill. We have lost not a moment. It is true that the wool schedule has been passed over. I am ready this morning to take up the wool schedule. We have already arranged for a night session, and I am quite sure that there is ample time between now and 1 o'clock to-morrow, the time for the final vote, to debate the wool schedule so far as detail is concerned.

I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not ask for an extension of time. We are so pressed with every sort of business at this ession that it will be almost impossible for us to get on unless we get this bill out of the way to-morrow.

Mr. VANCE. If we could take the wool schedule and adhere to it and nothing else we should perhaps have somewhat reasonable time.

Mr. ALLISON. It was with that view, I will state to the Senator from North Carolina, that I suggested that at 3 o'clock we limit the debate. I know how easy it is, as the Senator well knows, to get away from the special paragraph under consideration into a general discussion of the tariff. So, I think if the Senator will allow us to limit the debate say at 3 o'clock to-day and take up the wool schedule immediately, or in a few minutes, after the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is disposed of, it will not be necessary to extend the time beyond 1 o'clock

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Iowa what appropriation bills have passed the Senate?
Mr. ALLISON. None.

Mr. HOAR. We have but thirty-three secular days remaining of this session after to-morrow, and the time to be occupied in ascertain-ing and declaring the result of the Presidential election is to come out of that. So really we shall have but between four and five weeks for what usually occupies thirteen weeks and crowds us.

Mr. VANCE. I do not want to be considered obstinate, sir, but we have no assurance how long the question of rice is going to occupy the time of the Senate. Then the lumber schedule is to be taken up—

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from North Carolina. Instead of 1 o'clock make it 3. That will give us two hours more.

Mr. VANCE. I can not consent to any limit of debate to-day unless the time shall be extended as I have requested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment, proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown], will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 287 and in lieu thereof to insert:

287. Rice.—Cleaned, 2½ cents per pound; uncleaned, 1½ cents; paddy, 1½ cents. Broken rice or rice-flour which will pass through a sieve commercially known as No. 12 wire sieve, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown].

Mr. ALDRICH. I submit two amendments to be offered to the pending bill, and ask that they be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Senator from Rhode Island submits two amendments to the pending bill; which will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it is rather late in this debate, but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] made some allusions to Southern industries which I think it proper to examine very briefly before the Senate. I would not interfere at this time with the discussion of the particular items of this bill if I did not feel that it was a duty I owe to my own State to say something in reply, or rather in explanation of what conceive to be the drift of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia.

Capital is represented by money, and credit is the power to concentrate it upon giving a promise of repayment, with interest or profits. Money is worth nothing except as a token of value by which ex-changes of articles of real or supposed use to the human family can be conveniently made. The value of a dollar is always fixed by agreement, expressed or implied, when it is given in exchange for any com-

When it is given in payment of a debt its redeeming power is fixed by law. So many dollars of money for so many dollars of debt is the tender that is made legal by statute. In all other transactions money has a purchasing power, dependent upon the agreement of the persons who are trading. It has no redeeming power supported by the law of the land. As a purchasing power there is a universal standard of the value of money for which there is no substitute, but to which there are exceptions caused by varying circumstances. That universal standard is food, raiment, fuel, and shelter. The cost of these is measured strictly by demand and supply.

Demand and supply fix the value, in these elements of human subsistence and comfort, of every dollar that is used in transferring them from the hands of the producer to those of the consumer

A bushel of wheat that is worth $5 in a famine would be worth only 80 cents in a time of abundance. The demand and supply of wheat haul the prices of the dollars up and down as hot and cold raise and lower the mercury in a thermometer.

One hundred million bushels of wheat demand the use of $100,000,-000, or of $500,000,000, according to the abundance or scarcity of wheat, not according to the abundance or scarcity of dollars.

Capital is the aggregation of money and its great incident, credit, but the wants of mankind for food, raiment, fuel, and shelter fix and regulate the value of capital whether it is in the form of money or credit. Money is a bad thing when it can not purchase these elements of human existence and social organization.

It is the productions of these elementary industries that furnish food, raiment, fuel, and shelter to mankind, that fix the value of money in the first instance and in the most important respects.

The necessities of mankind force them to have these dollars redeemed in these productions. They are the real capital of the world, and the indispensable basis of all that human existence depends upon, and that also supports the human family in every stage of social, commercial, and manufacturing development.

Agriculture, in supplying food and textiles for clothing to the people, is the foremost agency in regulating the value of money, and in the supply of what is called capital, whether it is money or credit.

The country that has the most productive agriculture, in reach of the channels of exchange, ought to be the richest country.

In such a country, if the agriculturists are poor or greatly embarrassed with debt, we must know that the laws are unwise. In such a case debt represents agriculture artificially depressed and money artificially increased in its purchasing power. The laws that produce this result reverse the laws of nature and imperil all the laborious indus-

The South, in depending for the permanent prosperity of the people upon increased agricultural productions suited to soil and climate, has chosen the wisest course.

To cut down agricultural productions for the purpose of a temporary increase of their price, by laws that burden and overload the farmers with taxes, is to lock up the real fountain sources of wealth.

Such laws react upon that industry and tend to degrade it. For a time such laws may increase the gains of the farmers, but they depress the value of money with reference to food and raiment, so that the people can not buy their productions except to supply their extreme necessities. A people starved on account of the high prices of food are not good customers for the farmers. They can never be held in that condition while the earth holds out an inducement for tilling the soil. The factories will empty their labor into the fields whenever the laws create a short supply and high prices for food and for the material of which raiment is made.

It is the business of all mankind to keep the prices of food and raiment down to the capacity of the consumers to buy them from the farmers. This competition never can cease while a short supply of food and raiment produces hunger and nakedness.

The farmer never turns a furrow that does not place him in competition with every other industry. This unceasing pressure is quite enough of burden for him to endure. He should be left free, without artificial burdens, to work out his hard but noble task. If encouragement is given by law to any industry it should be given to agriculture, but its real interests are never promoted either by diminishing the crops or by taxing the hunger and nakedness of the consuming classes to increase the prices of food and raiment.

The laws of human necessities which enable the agriculturists to measure the value of money should be left free to regulate the entire sweep of the relations of agriculture to all other pursuits.

I must, therefore, declare my opposition to tax laws that disturb these relations. I would not cause any class of people to go hungry and naked in order to increase the profits of agriculturists, nor would I load taxes upon them for the purpose of building up other industries at their expense.

I rely upon agriculture in the South as the leading and best and safest industry for the enriching of the people, and I would as soon advise those people to suffer their lands to grow poor for want of fertilization as to advise them to abandon their fields in order to diversify their pursuits, and to increase the price of their crops for a short period by decreasing their annual yields.

It is a grave mistake to suppose that we can benefit the South by decreasing any crop that is suited to the climate and soil.

What we have need to do is to increase our crops and to diversify them, and not to decrease them by drawing the labor engaged in agrithem, and not to decrease them by drawing the labor engaged in agriculture into other pursuits. Agriculture is the chief source of the supply of money to the South, drawn from the whole civilized world, and it will continue to be. This money, saved to the people by low taxes and wise economy, becomes a fund that will search out new fields of investment and add to the wealth of the country; but if we neglect agriculture we will dry up the stream at the fountain.

Iron, coal, and timber are immense resources of wealth added to our agricultural wealth. They may equal the value even of cotton, our great staple, in a few years, but it is as idle to relax our hold on the money this crop will produce as it was for the dog in the fable, while crossing the brook, to drop his bone into the stream while attempting to add its shadow to his store of food.

We have no need to abandon agriculture in order to make iron or lumber, or to raise coal from our mines. We need all our resources, and only ask to be allowed to save something from the hundreds of millions of dollars that our agriculture produces annually to enable us to add to our population the classes who are skilled in the manufacture of our other rich materials and will convert them into additional wealth.

It is said that this process is too slow; that we need capital in the South to develop our coal and iron mines and to work up our forests into merchandise, and that the capital will not come to our iron and coal fields without special inducements created by law in the shape of high taxes on all consumers. If agriculture is the mother of capital and gathers it from the remotest parts of the earth, and if it is also the redeemer of money over the counter of the great bank of supply for human necessities, there is no reason why so vast a yield as the South furnishes in its crops to the hunger and nakedness of the world should not accumulate capital with rapidity.

This accumulation of capital has been largely prevented, I know, by the drain of taxation we have had to endure while establishing in the wilderness the foundations of our mother industry, agriculture. Then, far more than three thousand millions of dollars of accumulated wealth were swept off by the civil war, and that must be replaced before our real prosperity can be increased.

But we have advanced very rapidly in making up these losses, and have already raised and invested in our mineral and lumber industries a vast sum of money, far in excess of that which has been supplied from the Northern States. While doing this we have increased our cotton crop from three to seven million bales. To the earnings of this crop and to railroad enterprise, and not to the tariff, all this progress is due. is due.

I have known from my boyhood the riches of Alabama in coal, iron, and timber, and in many other mineral resources of which little has been said or thought. What is now revealed to the surprised intelligence of the country as to the value of these natural resources is not half-way up to the conceptions that I had of their magnitude long before a railroad penetrated our mineral regions. We are only in the hosizonia of this great development and yet we have the full master. beginning of this great development, and yet we have the full mastery of the production of hematite pig-iron in the whole world. This result has been a plain deduction from well-known facts for a half cen-

In all of the early reports on projected railroad routes and river improvements in Alabama, back to 1840, will be found the most vivid statements and the most confident prognostics of the extent and riches of our coal and iron fields. Their conjectures are already eclipsed by the reality. These calculations led to great activity in building rail-roads when iron T-rails cost $70 a ton. Railroads were being built from Mobile to Chicago, and to Montgomery, and to Girard, from Mont-gomery to Atlanta, and to Nashville, and from Memphis to Charleston, from Chatanooga to New Orleans, from Selma to Dalton, and to Meridian, from Montgomery to Eufaula, besides many shorter lines in Alabama, as early as 1845.

The farmers were the chief contractors and the principal stock-holders in these railroads. In Georgia and Alabama railroads, as far as completed, were earning good dividends on their stock, and no country has ever engaged more earnestly or more successfully than the South in building its railroads on its own capital up to 1861. The war

If we had completed even two or three of these railroads in Alabama we should have created a market for coal and iron that would have yielded us as much profit and as rapid an advance in prosperity as came to our mineral region just as soon as these railroads were completed.

We would have owned these railroads and would have had them in full operation at least by the year 1870. We were then diversifying our pursuits by putting the money we earned in our fields into railroads in order to reach the markets with our coal and iron.

We were not diversifying our industries by destroying our main reliance for wealth, in order to build up new and different schemes for making money.

Our plan was then, and now is, to "try all things," and yet "hold fast to that which is good."

We were making rapid preparation to reap for ourselves, with our own capital and energies, and with a skill which we think the history of the war has proved equal to any requirement.

Our capital was large accumulated wealth in money, our State banks in the South had a gold capital that supplied, at three dollars of circulation for one of gold in their vaults, all the money that we needed, and quite as much and quite as good for our purposes as the national-bank circulation, which only has the credit of the Government as a fund for its redemption.

Another element of capital was slave labor. Whether this was right or wrong, human or inhuman, it had the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States for its continued existence. As capital its power was enormous.

It was not as a mass highly intelligent, but the labor of the African race is that which now actually moves and supports the new progres in mineral development that is so astonishing. As slave labor it would have been still more efficient under the control of the slaveholding railroad builders and owners of mines, foundries, and factories than it is now, in a very demoralized condition, under the control of men who hire that labor.

I do not assert that we could have reached the highest development in manufactures using negro slave labor alone; still there are many instances which I could state from my own knowledge of very high mechanical skill, and skill in the manipulation of iron ores and in smelting, among the negro slaves

I do assert that we could and would have placed this labor under the direction of skilled white men, as we were accustomed to do in the cotton plantations, and they would have done more and better work than they do now. And then, as now, they would have done the larger part of the work in the iron, coal, and lumber industries.

We were ready to open these wonderful stores of wealth, and were making all the needful preparations with great rapidity and with the most earnest purpose that ever moved in a grand business enterprise, when the war prostrated and sealed up all these enterprises.

When we came out of the war our railroads were destroyed, our money was gone, our labor was lost, and all it had cost the generations

It is a wonderful story that reveals the power of our natural resources to attract capital to our Southern fields of industry. Capital, timid as it is said to be, rushes to the center of attractive investment as the air presses in upon the vortex of a cyclone.

In the South this vacuum had to be filled, and money poured in upon us to take the place of the $300,000,000 in values that had been destroyed by the war.

The first investment was in cotton-planting, and hundreds of millions of Northern capital was employed at once in raising cotton, then worth 50 cents a pound, and cotton-lands were then in great demand at high prices.

It requires peculiar skill and experience to grow cotton, and the capitalists who went into amateur cotton-growing soon settled their accounts in the courts of bankruptcy.

The railroad builders of the North, through the power of the enfranchised negroes, seized upon the credit of the States to create subsidies for the building of our incomplete lines.

They got all our corporations, strangled all the stock, seized our State credit to vamp up their issues of mortgage bonds, and in Alabama they ran up the State debt from $4,500,000 to $32,000,000 in less than six years, and with the funds thus raised they finished the same roads and on the same lines that we were building in 1861 when the war stopped our progress.

They opened to the markets these treasures of wealth, the barriers to which we had so nearly removed, and capital greedily sought out the best fields for investment.

The first movements, and the most profitable, were made by Southern men with Southern capital earned in the cotton-fields of the South.

The opportunity for speculation was so good that capital came rushing in from all quarters, England and Germany furnishing as much or more than the Northern States. Not a dollar of it, when wisely invested in coal, iron, and timber lands, has failed to yield a great profit. Not a dollar so invested during the next twenty-five years will fail to return ample profit. But this is the true statement of the causes that have lifted up, the properity of the mineral and timber districts. have lifted up the prosperity of the mineral and timber districts of Alabama. The tariff had no more to do with this wonderful progress than it had to do with the divine councils that laid the coal and iron in such excellence and vast abundance close together in the bosom of

When we remember that almost every dollar of money that has been used or that will be used in this great mineral development has been furnished its true value by the labors of the agriculturist in some part of the earth, we should turn our thoughts to that industry as the solid and enduring basis of all this show of increased wealth.

After all, this new wealth only means the power to purchase more of food and raiment and to supply more of fuel and shelter to this and coming generations of men.

In Alabama there is an evident and constant shrinking in the profits of agriculture. I have not time to go into all or even a considerable number of these causes. The most prominent of them are the with-drawal of labor from the cotton-fields, the usury that must be paid to capitalists to draw money into the cotton industry, and the high taxes our people must pay who grow cotton, without any compensation.

Mr. President, I have laid down these propositions, which I think are incontrovertibly true, for the purpose of showing that it will not increase the prosperity of the Southern States, and particularly of the State of Alabama, to cause the people of that country by force of oppressive laws to give no the production of cotton and turn their attention. ive laws to give up the production of cotton and turn their attention and their capital and resources of every kind into a new field of in-dustry. Whenever we in Alabama, we in the South, we in the United dustry. Whenever we in Alabama, we in the south, we in the United States, set our faces against the prosperity of agriculture we reduce the power of this people and this Government in a way that can be done by no other agency that can be devised. It is irreclaimable, and it is an awful thing to break down by the burden of taxation that one industry which, I take occasion to repeat again, through its crops and its yield, comprises the value sooner or later of every dollar of capital that passes through the hands of the human family.

These are the remarks that I desire to submit in explanation rather than in reply to the position taken by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BUTLER. During my absence from the Senate on the last legislative day the Senator from Rhode Island said:

Mr. ALDRICH. It is especially unfortunate, I think, that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who addressed the Senate on this subject the other day, is now absent from his seat, as there seems to be a radical difference of opinion between these representatives of two rice-producing States as to the necessity of protection on this article—

Referring to the speech made by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] who sits on my left.

The Senator from South Carolina stated the other day that there was no necessity for any duty on it, that it could be produced as cheaply here as anywhere in the world, while the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] now thinks that the present rate, which is 113 per cent, ad valorem, is inadequate for the protection of rice in the State of Georgia. Perhaps this item had better go over until we see whether an agreement can not be reached as to the facts between the Senators specially interested in the question.

Now, I have a proposition to submit to the Senator from Rhode Island, and let us see if he will, as I remarked the other day, meet me half way on this proposition. I repeat now to the Senator that if he will reduce the tariff on farming implements and on clothing which the laborers in the rice-fields and the planters who own the rice plantations and employ the laborers have to use to anything like a respectable rate so as to cheapen the articles necessary in the culture of rice, I will stand by the proposition which I made to him the other day. I await a re-by the proposition which I made to him the other day. I await a reply from him upon that proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the colloquy which took place between the Senator from South Carolina and myself the other day, which I am not able to put my hand on now—I hope he has it—

Mr. BUTLER. It is on page 1035 of the RECORD of January 20.

Mr. ALDRICH. There were no conditions as to what should be done for South Carolina, and that was not involved in my question. I asked the Senator whather, if there were no duties on rice whatsoever, the people engaged in the production of rice in South Carolina and Georgia could compete with the cooly labor of India, and he said distinctly that they could.

Mr. BUTLER. I repeat that.

Mr. ALDRICH. There was i There was no question about protection to any other industry involved in that statement.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.
Mr. ALDRICH. And I hope the Senator will confine himself to what was then said.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to know what the Senator thinks upon the subject. Does he think they can?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think they can. I think the protection of rice in the Senate bill is sufficient, and it is greater than the rate of protection afforded to the articles to which the Senator alludes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I ask the Senator if he is willing to make a reduction in the articles which the planters and the laborers in the ricefields have to use which are necessary to them?

Mr. ALDRICH. Such as sugar.

Mr. BUTLER. Take woolen clothing.

Mr. ALDRICH. We propose to put 40 per cent. ad valorem upon woolen clothing above the duty placed on wool; and the rate we propose on rice is equal to 50 per cent. Agricultural implements pay 45 per cent. I am quite willing that the duty on rice should be fixed at the rate which is placed upon agricultural implements and the cotton cloths and other articles which the planters of South Carolina use.

Mr. BUTLER. With the same conditions surrounding the people who produce the woolen cloths and the agricultural implements that surround the rice-planters and laboring classes?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know what the Senator means by "conditions." If he means the physical conditions-

Mr. BUTLER. I mean the condition necessary to the production of these articles, the circumstances incident to the production of these articles. Is the Senator willing to reduce the rate of duty on necessaries of life used by the rice-planters and laborers in proportion to the reduction on rice?

Mr. ALDRICH. The duty upon rice at present is 113 per cent. ad valorem. There is no article which the rice-planters use which has over 45 per cent. protection, and we propose to give the rice-planters 50 per cent. by this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not that an excessive rate of duty?

Mr. ALDRICH. Fifty per cent.? Mr. BUTLER. No. Is not that excessive under the circumstances?

Mr. ALDRICH. On rice? Mr. BUTLER. No; on articles used by the rice-planters, farming implements and scythe-blades, axes, hammers, and iron in its various forms, and woolen clothing and shoes and hosiery. Is he willing now to make a reduction in proportion on them?

Mr. ALDRICH. We export agricultural implements.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. And the duty on them is only 45 per cent. Now, we propose to give the Senator's rice-planters 50 per cent. upon an agricultural product where he says no protection whatever is neces-

Mr. BUTLER. And I state to the Senator now that it costs to produce rice just about ten or fifteen times as much as it does agricultural implements. Mr. ALDRICH. And the Senator comes here this morning and admits that he was wrong—

Mr. BUTLER. No; I do not admit it.

Mr. ALDRICH. He now admits that he desires protection upon rice

Mr. BUTLER. I do not admit that I am wrong. I contend for fair play in this bill; that is all. I simply contend for fair play. The Senator undertakes to vindicate the increase upon cotton-ties of over 100 per cent. by replying to me that that 100 per cent is a protective duty and is part of the general scheme for the protection of industries engaged in hoop-iron. That is the reply he makes to that. I ask only common fairness; nothing more for rice than for any other industry in this country now.
Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then you do not ask protection?
Mr. BUTLER. All I ask is that it shall have fair play, and I repeat to the Senator now that if he will reduce the tariff upon articles which those people use in the production of it, I will stand by my proposition.

The Senator said in the course of the debate the other day that there were sixty-five millions of people who consume rice. I venture to say there are not a thousand people in the Senator's own State who use rice. It is practically a luxury.

Mr. ALDRICH. Three hundred and seventy-odd thousand, or whatever there are there, use rice—as many people as there are in the State of Rhode Island. It is not a luxury with them, whatever it may be in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. • Yes; it is a luxury in the State of Rhode Island, too, and I venture to say that you can not find on the table of a thousand people in the State of Rhode Island rice as an article of food.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes.
Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from South Carolina will have to investigate the question of the consumption of rice as well as its production, and I think with investigation he will change his views on that subject also.

Mr. BUTLER. I have looked into it in various forms and I undertake to say that rice in its crude state is not used in Rhode Island by a thousand people. Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. They use it with molasses.

Mr. ALDRICH. They do not eat it raw.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course not. What I complain of in this bill is that the Senator and the Committee on Finance have reduced the tariff on rice far below the reduction made in other matters, but on the contrary have increased the duties on many other items.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from South Carolina must be mistaken as to the use of rice. I do not think there is a family in my

State that does not use it to a greater or less extent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly; there are no families in Rhode Island who do not use it.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask a question, if the Senator from South Carolina will allow me. The Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Iowa declared that we must exclude sugar from protection because we do not produce sufficient under the tariff system to supply the country.

Mr. ALLISON. I said if we must rely wholly upon the production of sugar from sugar-cane we did not produce enough for that purpose.

Mr. GIBSON. I understood the Senator to say that the extraordinary reduction of 50 per cent. of the duty upon sugar was because it had been demonstrated that with a rate of duty which he considered high protection it had been demonstrated that it was impossible to produce sufficient sugar for American consumption.

Mr. ALLISON. From sugar-cane. Now I will ask the Senator if he controverts that statement, if he believes that we can produce 3,000,-000,000 pounds and increase at the rate of 150,000,000 pounds a year according to the increase of consumption-I ask if he believes that quantity of sugar can be produced in this country from sugar-cane?

Mr. GIBSON. For the purposes of the suggestion which I am about to address to the Senator from Iowa

Mr. ALLISON. I want to get the other matter straight first. Mr. GIBSON. I will concur with him in his opinion that we can not produce sufficient sugar from the ribbon-cane in the State of Louisiana to supply the demand of the American market. That was the reason given by the Senators who spoke on that side, notably the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison]. That was the reason given why they made the extraordinary reduction of 50 per cent. in the rates of tariff duty on sugar.

Now, here is another article that is produced south of the Potomac, and I beg leave to call to the attention of Senators that these are the only two articles under the tariff system that are produced exclusively south of the Potomac upon which the committee have proposed the extraordinary reduction of 50 per cent. ad valorem.

We were discussing on Saturday the tariff upon cutlery, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] showed that on certain grades of cutlery the tariff had been raised to the extraordinary height of 190 per cent. ad valorem, and the rates fixed by this bill on woolen goods, woolen hats, woolen shirts and blankets constitute an ad valorem tax imposed upon the producing classes of this country reaching to 80 and 90 per cent., and in some instances to 133 per cent. The tariff is actually raised by the subcommittee on cotton and woolen manufactures and cutlery and steel; and now when you cross the Potomac you reduce the tariff rate upon sugar, which is a manufactured article, 50 per cent, on the one hand and you reduce the tariff rate on rice 50 per cent, on the other hand. Now, I ask you—

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question if he will

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator will pardon me a moment, and I shall take pleasure in answering any question he submits presently.

Now, then, if the reason why you make this extraordinary reduction on sugar be that that industry does not produce sufficient for the American market, I ask you why do you make the extraordinary reduction of 50 per cent. on rice when the rice industry in this country can produce ample rice, sufficient for the American market?

Mr. HOAR. The question I desired to put to the honorable Senator was this: Why it is that in dealing with this question he always thinks of the amount of reduction on sugar, the amount of the reduction on rice, as compared with other things, instead of speaking of the amount of duty which is left on sugar, and the amount of duty which is left on rice as compared with other things? If this protection be robbery, as I think I have heard some of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber say—I will not specifically name any particular Senator—why is it not robbery and why are not sugar and rice still the greatest robbers left, even if they have come down in their robbery a little?

Mr. GIBSON. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to address that question to me?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir. Mr. GIBSON. In the first place, I have never said, speaking for myself, that the bounty or benefit or protection to rice under the tariff was robbery. I have not used that language, but I say that I think the bounties and the burdens of the tariff should be equalized not only in respect of the industries north of the Potomac, but in respect of the industries south of the Potomac, whether those industries be in manufactures or agriculture or commerce. Why is it that this bill gives in some instances over 150 per cent. protection to manufacturing industries, to the capital and labor in manufactures, and proposes 50 per cent. as the maximum protection to be given to agricultural industries? Upon what grounds can such discrimination be defended?

Mr. HOAR. Then the other part of my question is, if that be true, the Senator complains of a duty which is still left larger than any

Mr. GIBSON. I will answer the Senator. I think when the sub-committee of the Committee on Finance of the Senate bring in a bill here which is not uniform in its operation with respect to the industries of this country, but discriminates by reducing the tariff rates upon sugar and rice and raising the tariff rates upon cutlery, upon wool and woolen goods, that that is an unjust discrimination, an inequitable discrimination, and anybody with an impulsive temperament might be very likely to say that that is legislative robbery—legislation which yields large bounties to the manufacturing North and imposes heavy burdens upon the agricultural South. Whether the North and South shall take to manufacturing or to agriculture is determined by climate and soil and other natural conditions, and it is no answer to say that the South is free to embark in manufactures and thus enjoy equally with the North the enormous bounties and privileges bestowed upon them.

Mr. HOAR. Have they equalized them yet?

Mr. GIBSON. Now I will answer the Senator with respect to the other question I understand him to ask, namely, why I allude to the ad valorem rate of reductions made and not to the rates which are fixed by this bill. I will answer the Senator I do so with respect to sugar because the laws of demand and supply have been interfered with by the competition between the French and German Governments, each in a race with the other to command the markets of the world, and each bestowing large bounties upon the export of sugar, equal almost to the cost of production in those countries, so that sugar has become cheapened in all the markets of the world far below the cost of production. The sugar producers from cane all over the world have been bankrupted, and it is owing to these bounties that these extraordinarily low prices have been reached in the article of sugar and the ad valorem rates correspondingly raised.

The tariff on sugar has been steadily reduced since 1874. The largest reduction made in the revision of the tariff in 1883 was upon sugar, from about 2.18 to 1.40 cents per pound.

I was in the House of Representatives at that time, and it was fixed by the House of Representatives at 1.25, which was thought to be about 41 per cent. ad valorem. It was brought into the Senate, and in conference committee it was increased over the rate fixed upon by the House to about 51 per cent. ad valorem by the Senate of the United States.

But the tariff on sugar before that had been higher than 41 per cent. and higher than 51 per cent., and the standard for determining the value of sugar was the Dutch standard; no doubt the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] well remembers it. Under that standard sugars Ohio [Mr. Sherman] well remembers it. Under that standard sugars were brought in by the wholesale at a lower rate than the tariff actually required that they should pay, because they were colored down in the West India Islands so as to come in at a lower rate, the color then being the test and not the saccharine strength.

But the point I make now-I do not intend to detain the Senate by any remarks upon sugar or rice at length—the point I make now is that here it is shown that the resources of the rice supply are adequate to the American market and the American demand. ficial tables, and I ask any man acquainted with business in the Senate to look at these tables, and I will have them inserted in my remarks.

From 1865 to 1867 there were 11,000,000 pounds only of rice produced in this country; in 1868 there were 26,000,000 pounds; in 1878, 62,000,000 pounds; in 1879 there were 86,000,000 pounds; in 1883, 107, 000,000 pounds, and in 1886 there was the enormous production of 155, 000,000 pounds of rice. Now, look at the importations of rice. The importations last year of foreign rice consumed were 89,000,000 pounds. We are producing to-day nearly two-thirds of all the rice consumed in this country. But look at the ratio of increase from 11,000,000 pounds to 155,000,000 pounds in 1886. There is no other industry in this country that has increased so rapidly, I venture to say, as the rice in-

Now, is it true that we produce sufficient wool in the United States to supply our manufacturers? We do not produce more than two-thirds of the wool that is required for the home market in this country; and yet look at the rates agreed upon by the Finance Committee upon wool.

Do we produce sufficient cutlery for the wants of this country?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken in regard to wool. The total amount of wool produced here is far above the proportion he states.

Mr. GIBSON. I have heard that statement made in the debates in the House, and I think there is a general consensus of opinion that we produce about two-thirds the amount of wool required for the Ameri-

Mr. SHERMAN. There ought to be no controversy about this matter, because the tables show that the amount produced in this country four or five years ago was about 320,000,000.

Mr. GIBSON. In value?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, in pounds.

Mr. GIBSON. The point I make is that these manufacturing industries that receive high protection are not producing all that is necdustries that receive high protection are not producing all that is necessary for the American market, and no gentleman on the other side of the Chamber defends the high duty upon that principle. The Senator from New York [Mr. Hiscock] fell back in his remarks the other day upon the position taken by Henry Clay. We all remember how the tariff system was proposed in order to protect infant industries in this country, that ultimately they might under protection be able to become self-supporting and self-sustaining against foreign competition. Now, here is an industry, agricultural and manufacturing, representing both interests, and the figures show unmistakably that if the rice industry is adequately protected, protected like woolen goods, or cotton goods, or cutlery, that industry will make such strides as will enable the capital and labor engaged in it to supply the American market. In

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Does he

Mr. Allison. I desire to ask the senator a question. Does no think 113 per cent. is necessary to protect rice?

Mr. GIISON. Mr. President, I will answer that question in a moment. In 1860 we produced in this country 187,000,000 pounds of rice, and we exported 25,000,000 pounds. Now, why can we not produce sufficient rice for the American market, and why should we not do it? It is true the building of the Suez Canal has shortened the route to India and reduced the cost of transportation, but there is a large area brought into the production of rice that in 1860 did not produce a pound of it. We were large exporters of rice in 1860, and I believe now, if any gentleman will look in candor over the figures embraced in this table, he will see by the ratio of increase that in a few years from now we shall be producing all the rice consumed in the United

My friend, the chairman of the subcommittee, asks me if I think 113 per cent, adequate. I think it just as adequate a protection of rice as 190 per cent, is for the protection of cutlery or 80 per cent. on woolen

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Senator from Louisiana recognize any distinction between agricultural products and manufactured products?

Mr. GIESON. Not for the bounties and benefits of the Government?

Mr. HISCOCK. You do not permit any incident of labor involved, or anything of that kind, to make any distinction?

Mr. GIESON. I do.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then why is it that you still couple rice, an agri-eultural product, and manufactured products together?

Mr. GIBSON. I stated that rice is a manufactured article as well as an agricultural article.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask, if the Senator thinks there is a distinction between agricultural products and manufactured products, why he does not illustrate his argument by potatoes, by wool, and by things of

Mr. GIBSON. Because that is an industry, like cotton and wheat, that does not require any protection; and I want to ask the Senator, and I want him to treat me with candor in this business—
Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly I will.
Mr. GIBSON. I desire to answer the question the Senator asks me, why I do not compare rice with potatoes.
Mr. HISCOCK. Or with wool.
Mr. GIBSON. The people of this country are engaged in particular occupations, such occupations as the climate and soil and the natural conditions most favor. The people of New England are engaged in manufacturing industries. Why? Because nature favors the development of manufactures in New England and disfavors agriculture, and the climate and soil are not favorable to agriculture, whereas in the South the conditions are unfavorable to manufactures, but favorable to agriculture.

Now, I say that when we come to establish a protective system we ought to give to the great leading agricultural interests of the West and South the same favors, the same benefits of the Government, that we extend to the people engaged in the manufacturing industries of New England and the North.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I understand the Senator to be in favor of a protective duty on wool?

Mr. GIBSON. Not necessarily.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that necessarily follows.

Mr. ALLISON. There should be an intelligent discrimination in all these things. The Senator knows that. I do not ask, however, for any greater bounty or protection for the industries I represent here than I am willing to accord to other sections of the country.

I desire to say to the Senator from New York that I am far from being a free-trader. I never have risen either in the House of Representatives or here and advocated free trade as a system for the fise of this country. How could we raise the immense sums necessary for the support of the Government if we abolished all tariff taxation and declared commerce should be as absolutely free with foreign nations as it is between the States of the Union?

Mr. BUTLER. I yielded the floor to my friend for a moment.
Mr. GIBSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he had given up the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to get my friend from Rhode Island [Mr.

ALDRICH] down to some practical point.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me a moment further, as I have just said I am not a free-trader, I want to say also that I am not in favor of using the powers of the Government to create and build up by a high-tariff system any particular industry in this country, nor am I in favor of using the power of the Government to favor one industry in this country, at the overnment to favor one industry in this country. ment to favor one industry in this country at the expense of another, or one section of this country at the expense of the other, but I am in favor of the doctrine laid down by Mr. Madison, that we ought to raise our revenue by levying taxes upon foreign imports, that the object is revenue and the incident is protection.

In exerting the power to raise revenue for the support of the Government I would adjust the tariff so as to discriminate against foreign competitive commodoties and in favor of the capital and labor in American industries in such a way as to prevent monopolies and to distribute equitably the benefits and burdens of the system between the manufacturers, commerce, and agriculture, and also between all sections of our common country

That principle is laid down by Mr. Madison, by Mr. Benton, and Mr. Webster, and all the great writers upon the American system. I will quote briefly some of their observations.

Mr. Madison remarks:

In the first place, I am myself the friend to a very free system of commerce, and hold it as a truth that commercial shackles are generally unjust, oppressive, and impolitic. It is also a truth that if industry and labor are left to take their own course they will generally be directed to those objects which are the most productive, and this in a more certain and direct manner than the wisdom of the most enlightened Legislature could point out.

Nor do I think that the national interest is more promoted by such restrictions than that the interest of individuals would be promoted by legislative interference directing the particular application of its industry.

The case is the same between the exercise of the artsand agriculture, between the city and the country, and between the city and the town, each capable of making particular articles in abundance to supply the other; thus all are benefited by exchange, and the less this exchange is cramped by government the greater are the proportions of benefit to each.

The same argument holds good between nation and nation, and between parts of the same nation. In my opinion it would be proper also for gentlemen to consider the means of encouraging the great staple of America—I mean agriculture—which I think may justly be styled the staple of the United States, from the spontaneous productions which nature furnishes and the manifest advantage it has over every other object of emolument in this country.

. If my general principle is a good one—that commerce ought to be free and labor and industry left at large to find its proper object—the only thing which remains will be to discover the exceptions that do not come within the rule I have laid down.

Duties laid on imported articles may have an effect which comes within the idea of national prudence. It may happen that materials for manufactures may grow up without any encouragement for this purpose. It has been the case in some of the States, but in others regulations have been provided, and have succeeded in preducing some establishments, which ought not to be allowed to perish from the alteration that has taken place; it would be cruel to neglect them and divert their industry to other channels, for it is not possible for the hand of man to shift from one employment to another without being injured by the change.

The impost laid on trade for the purpose of obtaining revenue may likewise be considered as an exception; so far, therefore, as revenue can be more conveniently and certainly raised by this than any other method, without injury to the community, its operation will be in due proportion to the consumption, which consumption is generally proportioned to the circumstances of individuals. I think sound policy dictates to use this means.

Mr. Webster says:

Protection, when carried to the point which is now recommended—that is, to entire prohibition—seems to me destructive of all commercial intercourse among nations. We are urged to adopt the system on general principles. I do not admit the general principle; on the contrary, I think freedom of trade the general principle and restriction the exception.

Mr. Benton remarks:

Revenue the object, protection the incident, had been the rule in the earlier tariffs; now that rule was sought to be reversed and to make protection the object of the law and revenue the incident,

Mr. BUTLER. I want to get my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH ] down to some practical point where he will deal frankly and fairly, and not answer a question which I put to him by asking me an-

He says that the tariff on rice in this bill is 50 per cent.

that there is a reduction of over 50 per cent. on rice, and he says, in fact, that nothing else has been increased—

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BUTLER. Beyond what is proper and right, as I understand him. I am not responsible for this bill, and the Senator might as well understand now as later, if he has not already understood it, that I am not going to vote for it. I should like him, though, to explain, if he can, which he has not done so far, to my satisfaction, at least, why it is that in the amendment which was offered to the substitute the other day the duty on four-blade knives was increased from 50 to 80 per cent. I ask where he finds warrant for an increase of 30 per cent. on that article in this country? Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me after he finishes his question, which seems to me rather involved, I hope he will make it as explicit as he can, I will answer it in my own time and in my own way.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will not answer it now.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, I will answer any question.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask, why increase the tariff from 50 to 80 per cent. on four-blade knives, an increase of 30 per cent., and why at the same time he insists upon the reduction of the duty on rice from 113 per cent.

time he insist upon the rectangle of the second of the representatives of both parties in their national platforms and the representatives of both parties in the executive office, and especially in the Treasury Department, have called attention to the inequalities and the anomalies of the existing tariff, and both parties have been pledged to remedy those defects and inequalities and anomalies. The duty upon rice is one of the anomalies and inequalities of the present law, as the duty on sugar is, and it was for the purpose of remedying that inequalities that the committee anomalies are duction. As to the edequacy of ity that the committee proposed a reduction. As to the adequacy of that duty I will address the Senate in my own time when the Senator gets through with his remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely; but I am not asking the Senator what the representatives of both the political parties or their platforms recommended and thought wise and desirable. I am asking the Senator what he thinks. He has put a question directly in regard to rice. I should be glad to have his individual opinion as to the proposition that it is unfair and unjust to select one industry in this country, to wit, rice, and cut that down from 113 per cent., which I am very frank to say to him is entirely too much in my opinion.

Mr. ALDRICH. How much does the Senator think would be enough?

Mr. BUTLER. I think the rate provided for in the Mills bill is about right. That is what I think.

Mr. ALDRICH. You think that it is important a duty should be retained?

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is right and just in view of the other reductions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it necessary for the industry?
Mr. BUTLER. I can not say that it is absolutely necessary. I will say to the Senator, if he will reduce everything else, that I shall be quite willing to agree to a reduction of the tariff on rice to 50 per cent. But the Senator from Rhode Island, and those who agree with him, insist that they are in favor of protecting American industries, and by one stroke of the pen according to their own admission they strike it down and destroy it. That is not my proposition. It is the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island. What I want to get him down to is whether he thinks it fair in the arrangement of these tariff duties, whether he thinks it is just according to the view which he himself expresses, that he should increase the duty from 50 per cent. to 80 per cent. on a certain grade of knives and reduce the rate on rice from 113 per cent. to 50 per cent. I ask him in common fairness, and I will say in common honesty, if that is right, leaving my own views out of the question and taking his standpoint. I ask if he can justify himself and justify the committee in that? willing to agree to a reduction of the tariff on rice to 50 per cent.

justify the committee in that?

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator allow me one moment to make a suggestion in that connection?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. My suggestion is this: That in the case of cutlery and knives we pay in the United States I suppose about twice as much for the labor as is paid in Great Britain, where the articles are made in the factories of that country; and in the case of rice the rice-planter on the coast of Georgia or South Carolina pays just fourteen times as much as the foreign rice-planter pays for labor, and I showed this very clearly from statistics in my remarks on Saturday.

Mr. BUTLER. I have stated that this morning to the Senate when I undertook to draw a comparison between the rice industry and the manufacture of agricultural implements. What I should like the Senator to come to if he will—

Mr. ALDRICH. When I am able to retain the floor for a minute successfully without being interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina, I shall answer the question in my own way.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the Senator declines to answer the question?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not decline to answer it, and I will answer it to the Senator's satisfaction when I can obtain the floor.

Mr. Aldrich. I do not decline to answer it, and I will answer it to the Senator's satisfaction when I can obtain the floor.

Mr. VEST. If my friend from South Carolina will permit me, when the Senator from Rhode Island makes that answer I want him to answer something else. The other day when we were discussing the cutlery schedule I said, as matter of compromise only, I would be willing if Senators on the other side would accept it to put a duty on each article which would be different between the said of ticle which equalized the difference between the cost of labor in this country and abroad, and Senators around, with a unanimity I have never seen outside of the political convention, said "Amen;" they would do it. The Senator from Connecticut said he would; the Senator from Rhode Island said he would; and so did the Senator from Iowa.

Now, I want to read the cost of labor—the most unprotected and help-less labor of this country—in the production of classed via and this less labor of this country—in the production of cleaned rice, and this is the testimony of Mr. Trenholm, now Comptroller of the Currency, an experienced rice planter, before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. He says:

The cost of producing a bushel of rice is about $1, and a very careful estimate has been made showing that of that the cost of labor is 90 cents, so that almost the entire cost of rice is in the labor expended on it. The soil is so soft and soggy that it is impossible to use machinery or animals in the cultivation of rice to any extent. In many places, after the rice is harvested, it has to be made up in bundles and carried out of the fields on the heads of the working people.

Mr. Harris. Is it cultivated with hoes?

Mr. TRENBOLM. It used to be cultivated entirely with hoes, and isso still to a great extent. Now they put broad boots of leather on the feet of the mules and use cultivators more than they did before.

But what I want to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to is this: The cost of this helpless negro labor—because it is impossible to use white men; the stench from the rice-fields is insuffera-able; the malaria is deadly, more deadly than that of Chagres; no white man can work in the rice-field—the cost of that labor is 90 cents on the dollar-the peculiar wards of our friends on the other side, who vote the Republican ticket with a unanimity and pertinacity unrivaled in political experience; and now it is proposed when the labor is 90 per cent. to reduce the duty to 50 per cent., the present duty being 113 per cent., or only 23 per cent. over the amount of labor actually used. I am not complaining of any reduction in this bill, understand me; I am speaking now from the standpoint of Senators on the other side, who the other day said that was the just rule; but it has its climatic disproportions. It is a good rule north of Mason and Dixon's line, but it will not work at all when it goes South.

Mr. BUTLER. No, the Senator from Rhode Island has avoided my question, and says he will not answer it except in his own time. It trust he will be able to explain the inconsistencies which to my mind trust he will be able to explain the inconsistencies which to my mind are in this bill from one end of it to the other.

I do not retract one syllable of what I said in regard to rice. On the contrary, I have said from the beginning of this tariff discussion, not only in general but to those engaged in the culture of rice, that they must expect a reduction in the duty on rice. I thought myself, and think now, that it is too high. But I am now arguing the question from the standpoint of the Senator from Rhode Island and the Finance Committee and the Republican side of the Senate, in which they claim that their object is to protect American industries uniformly, equally, justly, without regard to locality. What I can not understand and have not been able to get from any Senator on the other side, is why it is that they increase the tariff enormously on some articles manufactured that they increase the tariff enormously on some articles manufactured in certain localities in this country and reduce the tariff on articles manufactured in other localities out of all proportion. That is what I have not been able to comprehend.

I stated awhile ago that the article of rice as an article of food was in a measure a luxury, and that comparatively few people in this country use it as an article of food. The Senator replied to me by saying that there were such large importations. He must be aware of the fact that two grades of rice imported into this country, to wit, the grades known as broken rice and rice flour, are used by brewers in the manufacture of beer. They are not consumed upon the tables of anybody that I know of. Broken rice and rice flour is the only rice that is imported into this country, and it is used enormously.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BUTLER. That may be a mistaken statement of it, but the very large proportion of imported rice brought into this country is what is known as broken rice and rice flour.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to give him the correct

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Of rice the Senator speaks, of broken rice-

Mr. GIBSON. And rice flour.

Of rice flour, etc., there were imported 48,526,783 Mr. TELLER. pounds. Of other rice there were imported 33,731,463 pounds, and 4,000,642 pounds placed in the bill at one-half cent per pound.

Mr. BUTLER. That is imported rice?

Mr. TELLER. Imported rice.

Mr. BUTLER. Very much the largest portion of it is what is known as broken rice and rice flour. The Senator does not deny that proposition?

Mr. TELLER. Not so very much the largest portion.
Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the Senator that the tax on broken rice or rice flour is only 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUTLER. The tax is only 20 per cent. ad valorem. I believe this bill cuts it down to 15 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. No, it does not.
Mr. BUTLER. It cuts it down to one-quarter of a cent a pound. I do not know what the ad valorem would be upon that. It is a very

So I repeat, while the Senators are claiming to protect labor in this country and to exempt, as far as possible, the necessaries of life, and those used every day by the common people are the special objects of their care and consideration, they strike down here, according to the Senator's theory, not mine, an agricultural product raised only in a very limited area in this country. It is not a matter of a great deal of concern to my constituents. The production of rice is very limited in South Carolina, comparatively, and I think is languishing every day, owing to the uncertainty of the labor and the enormous risk and expense of preparing rice plantations for the cultivation of rice. a matter in which I feel no special personal interest except, if I can, to induce the Senators who have charge of this bill to exercise some degree of justice and consistency in the preparation of their bill, and that is all.

The Senator seems to have got into a spasm and a state of perturba-tion which is getting to be alarming, I am afraid, as to the differences between my friend from Georgia and myself. It perhaps would be cruel to relieve him of that happy state of mind, but I desire to say to him that he need not lose any sleep on account of any difference between my friend from Georgia and myself on this point. He need not indulge in too much hilarity on that account. He will find, in the common parlance of the day, that upon the general propositions we shall be very apt to flop pretty closely together on this bill.

The Senator might, with very great propriety and a very much better expenditure of his time, devote himself to reconciling some little differences on his side of the Chamber on the iron schedule and the lumber schedule. When my friend from Kapsas [Mrs. Plumba] and differences on his side of the Chamber on the fron Schedule and the lumber schedule. When my friend from Kansas [Mre Plumb], and my friend from Nebraska, who now presides so gracefully over this body [Mr. Manderson in the chair], have an occasional spasm of independence and manifest some anxiety to see justice done to their condependence and manifest some anxiety to see justice done to their condependence and manifest some anxiety to see justice done to their condependence and manifest some anxiety to see justice done to their condependence. stituents, my friend has about all he can attend to to keep those gentlemen straight, I think, without crossing the line and coming over to this side to reconcile the differences between ourselves.

I should be very glad to see this bill so arranged as that ample and exact justice can be done to everybody. The only point I have made on this rice schedule is that it is unjust and unfair and unequal in its I will not charge any personal motives to gentlemen concerned in it, but I believe in the main it is intended to make a blow at rice and sugar and other commodities because certain Senators on this side of the Chamber will not acquiesce in the monstrous propositions in this bill.

Mr. President, this proceeding in the Senate does not deceive anybody. It is a farce from beginning to end. However desirous the Senator from Rhode Island and the Finance Committee of the Senate may be to reduce the tariff on certain articles, Senators on that side know perfectly well that if they dared do justice the masters of the Republican party in this country, the monopolies, the trusts, the corporations would relegate these gentlemen to a back seat as soon as they could get to the polls and have "fat" enough "fried out" of them to purchase the votes to so relegate them.

The country understands this matter perfectly well, Mr. President. In the classic language of some Republican Senator, the fat must be fried out of the manufacturers; and the fat was fried out of them in the last election for the purpose of buying "floaters" in "blocks of five" to carry the election. Now we are going through the farce of pretending to these persons out of whom the fat was fried that we will give them an opportunity under this bill to fry the fat out of the tax-payers and recoup what they have paid for electioneering purposes in the last election. That is the object of this bill.

Senators are perfectly well aware that the bill can not become a law, but they have a certain part to play, and they are playing it. They think that perhaps the producers of rice have not as much influence as the manufacturers of cotton-ties; that perhaps the producers of sugar have not as much influence as the producers of structural iron or jack-knives or blankets or woolen clothing or the finer fabrics of cotton manufacture. Therefore they will reduce enormously the tariff on rice and sugar and raise it in other directions in order that those who have had the "fat" "fried out" of them may fry the fat out of somebody

Mr. BROWN obtained the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to proceed now, or is he willing that I should answer briefly the elaborate question which has been propounded to me by the Senator from South

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BROWN. I will yield provided I can retain the floor. I do not know when I shall be able to get it again. I will yield a part of my time, however, if the Senator prefers to make his explanation now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from South Carolina may well be excused for the extreme sensitiveness which he has shown in regard to the matter now under consideration. Senators from the rice-producing States charge that the members of the committee who prepared this bill have treated the article of rice unfairly; that upon the theory on which the bill is constructed rice is entitled to a larger duty.

The theory upon which the bill was constructed was to give adequate protection to every American industry which was entitled to protection, whether it was located North or South; and it was the purpose of the committee to give to the article of rice that adequate protection.

The rate now fixed by the bill upon rice is equivalent to about 50 per cent. ad valorem, which I think is the highest rate upon any single agricultural product which is produced either at the North or at the South. As to the adequacy of that rate, I was anxious the other day to ascertain the views of the Senator from South Carolina upon this subject, as he represented one of the principal rice-producing States. He was haranguing the Senate against the rates which we had placed in the bill upon other agricultural and manufactured articles, and I was anxious to find out whether he thought the rate which we had fixed upon rice was a proper and adequate rate, and I asked him this ques-

Does not the Senator think that the duty upon rice enables the laborers of South Carolina and Georgia to produce rice in competition with the cooly labor of India?

After a short colloquy, I followed it up by this question:

Could they do it-

That is, compete with India-without any tariff at all?

Mr. Butler. Yes, sir.
Mr. Aldrich. Without any tariff?
Mr. Butler. Yes, sir.
Mr. PLATT. Then let us take it off.
Mr. Butler. I have not asked you to keep it on.
Mr. Aldrich. I have not said that the Senator did ask us to do so.
Mr. Butler. And I will never ask it. Let my friends on the other side understand that.

This was a distinct and definite statement, not connected with any proposition for the reduction or increase of duties upon knives, woolen fabrics, or anything else. The Senator from South Carolina stated emphatically that his constituents could compete with the cooly labor of India without any duty whatever, and he is certainly an authority, or ought to be, on this subject. Yet we allow 50 per cent. duty upon this agricultural product, which is in general use.

Now, the Senator undertakes to show that we are not treating rice fairly and the Senator from Missouri agrees with him. The problem fairly, and the Senator from Missouri agrees with him. The problem we have in hand is whether the rate of duty which we have imposed on rice is adequate to protect this product.

It may be interesting to remind Senators how rice has been treated in former tariffs. In 1846 a Democratic Congress under the leadership of the great apostle of revenue tariffs imposed a duty of 20 per cent. In 1846 a Democratic Congress under the leadership upon rice. In 1857 another Democratic Congress reduced the duty from 20 to 15 percent. Mr. BUTLER.

Will it disturb the Senator if I interrupt him?

Mr. BUTLER. Will it disturb the Senator if I interrupt min.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply want to be right as we go along, I will say frankly. I say according to his theory of taxation, the theory of the Committee on Finance, 50 per cent. is not enough. According to my theory of taxation it is. That is my statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. According to the Senator's theory the other day, there was no duty required at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I say so yet. I say if you will adjust the tariff fairly, equally, and justly, I believe the American laborer can compete with anybody in the world upon any of these industries that the Senator speaks of—cotton-ties and a good many other things.

Mr. ALDRICH. My position and the position of Senators on this side is that the rate which we have fixed is adequate; if it is not, we propose to make it so. Certainly if 20 per cent. was adequate in 1846, and 15 per cent. in 1857, 50 per cent. should be adequate in 1889.

Mr. BROWN. We made rice by slave labor entirely in the period referred to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Because they were misled as to the facts.

Mr. EUSTIS. Ah! Mr. ALDRICH. We had a Tariff Commission appointed in 1882 on which were three Southern Democrats interested in the rice production, or one of them was at least, and they recommended to Congress this exorbitant rate of duty, and it is the purpose of this bill to relieve the tariff from existing inequalities.

Mr. BUTLER. If it will not disturb the Senator, I ask him if any body other than those interested in the manufacture of the articles specified in this bill have given the committee any information?

Mr. ALDRICH. A great many people.
Mr. BUTLER. Outside of those interested in manufactures?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. The Senator from North Carolina has given us information.

Mr. BUTLER. But I am talking about information in framing the

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER. Did the committee summon anybody before them except those interested in manufactures?

Mr. ALDRICH. We summoned no one before us.
Mr. BUTLER. Did anybody appear except those interested in man-

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER. The Senator makes a point about one of the members of the Tariff Commission being interested in the culture of rice, and says that therefore they were misled as to the facts. I should like to ask the Senator if in framing this bill the committee were not influenced very largely by the opinions of those interested in the manufacture of the articles protected in it.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir; we based the provisions of the bill upon information which was submitted by various parties and gathered from

Mr. BUTLER. Was not the tariff act of 1883 based upon facts given by the Tariff Commission?

Mr. ALDRICH. Possibly.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the Senator says the committee was misled.

Yes. Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. BUTLER. May not the committee have been misled by the gentlemen who appeared in this case and testified in their own behalf?

Mr. ALDRICH. Possibly we have been.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me to make one suggestion?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose I represent as large a variety of manufacture as any Senator on this floor, certainly with one or two exceptions only, and a great deal of it is manufacture which comes at the highest stage of protection. I wish to testify for the committee that various manufacturers from my State have appeared before them presenting various views, and that they have been subjected by the committee to a very sharp and searching cross-examination in regard to their statements, and in many instances their desires have been complied with, while in many instances they have been rejected.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President— Mr. BROWN. I yielded the floor to my friend from Rhode Island, but not with a view to general debate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will allow the Senator to proceed, and will submit what further remarks I may have to make later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the statement is made that the bill provides a higher tariff on rice than any other agricultural production, if I understand it correctly. If that be true, there are strong reasons why it should be so. First, it takes a much larger expenditure to reclaim swamp lands and prepare them for the cultivation of rice than it does to prepare land for any other agricultural crop, and that heavy expenditure is indispensable to the cultivation of rice successfully.

Then, again, the rice-planter comes in competition with cheaper labor than any manufacture in this country comes in competition with, or than any other agricultural production in this country has to compete with. Take the manufacturers; they usually pay about double as much for their labor as is paid in Great Britain, scarcely ever three times as much. Take the article of rice. The rice-planter in Georgia pays fourteen times as much for his labor as the rice-planter in India or in China does. Therefore, according to the rule laid down by the political conventions of both the great contending parties, there ought to be a heavier toriff for the protection of the rice-planter than any to be a heavier tariff for the protection of the rice-planter than any other. In other words, the labor cost ought to be equalized, and to do that you must provide a heavy tariff or it is impossible for the rice-planter of Georgia and the Carolinas to subsist at all in cultivating rice and making any profit upon it.

As to the preparation of the land, I desire to send to the desk and have read an extract from an address issued by the agricultural convention of Georgia, which shows the modus operandi and the expense of preparing reclaimed swamp lands for the cultivation of rice. I respectfully ask the attention of Senators to the statement as to the cost of preparing lands for the production of rice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter referred to will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the estimates of cost the interest on the investment in land and improvements have not been considered. But this is really of first importance. Perhaps no better evidence of this can be presented than the following extract from an address published in the Proceedings of the Georgia State Agricultural Society in 1884:

"In order that the character and extent of the embanking and drainage system may be understood in a general way, I will venture, before concluding, the statement of a few facts in regard to these, the chief extraordinary burdens of a rice plantation.

"In order that the character and extent of the embanking and dramage bystem may be understood in a general way, I will venture, before concluding, the statement of a few facts in regard to these, the chief extraordinary burdens of a rice plantation.

"The storm-flood of 1854 rose about 11.5 feet above mean low water in the Savannah River. This would make the still-water level of the flood over the fields 4.8 feet. The storm-flood of 1881 was about 6 feet maximum over the fields, or 1.2 feet higher than that of 1854. No rice-field embankments exist which could repel such storms as these. If any were constructed high enough to reach the still-water level of the flood, its waves, which surge like those of the ocean, and to a height quite double the elevation of that level, would roll over such embankments and submerge the fields as effectually as if no such protectives existed. No effort, therefore, has yet been made to bar off extraordinary cataclysms like those of 1854 and 1881, and the rice-planter raises only such embankments as will defend his fields against ordinary storm-floods.

"The exterior embankments of a rice plantation are usually originally constructed 4 feet wide on top, 5 feet in height, with a base of 10 feet. On insular plantations, and, in fact, all rice plantations are practically insular, because each is necessarily self-dependent, these dimensions are carried entirely around the property. Unless creeks and other surface irregularities increase the quantities, these embankments contain 6,845.5 cubic yards per mile. Thus, the exterior embankments contain 6,845.5 cubic yards per mile. Thus, the exterior embankments of a plantation of 640 acres, I mile square (which is used here for easy estimates), would be 4 miles in length, and contain 27,378 cubic yards, or 77 cubic yards per acre. If now, this plantation be divided into 36 square of, say, 17.5 acres each, the divisions, which are called check banks, will roughly be 8 miles in length, with contents of 34,417 cubic yards, or 65 cubic yards to length is 18 miles, its contents are 111,079 cubic yards, or 174 cubic yards to the acre.

"But the drainage of the rice-fields and its annual maintenance is a servitude more burthensome than their embankments. It is, however, also true that while the rice plant of the tidal lands is aquatic, or, perhaps more correctly, amphibious, it is paradoxical in demanding the most thorough drainage for its successful growth. * * * Interior embankments not necessary to the safety and convenience of the fields may demand no more than perfunctory renewals, but the drains imperatively require to be not only thoroughly excavated in the origin, but to be constantly kept down to their original depth, and, as the land settles, to be lowered to the same relative depth.

"A properly arranged plantation of 640 acres, looking to the best control of flowing water and to thorough drainage, would require four parallel canals, each 20 feet in width and 5 feet in depth. The total length of these would be 3.33 miles. Each would require a flood-gate at its extremity on the river, so arranged as to admit or bar the tide-water at pleasure. Along these canals, one on each side of each field, or two to the field, are laid small flood-gates, commonly called tranks, by which the watering and drainage of each field is independently regulated. The main flood-gates of the canals are frequently true locks, so that canal and river navigation may be united. The four canals mentioned call for the excavation of 48,899 cubic yards, or 76 cubic yards per acre.

"In addition to these canals, which are the great arteries of the rice-fields, each square or field must be surrounded by a main or margin ditch, cut 6 feet wide by 4 in depth, and parallel drains, called quarter drains, must be sunk through the fields from 1.5 to 2 feet in width, by 3 feet in depth, usually 75 feet apart, but in some instances still nearer. If now, for easy computation, we throw off spaces not actually cut through margins and embankments, which would not seriously affect the resul

Mr. BROWN. I recur to the fact that there is no other agricultural crop in the world that costs as much labor and as heavy expenditure of money to prepare the land properly for its cultivation as the rice crop. The document just read shows that the expense of reclaiming 1 mile square of rice land in the swamps on the tidal deltas is very heavy indeed. No one but a man of very considerable capital can undertake it. Then the culture, as I undertook to show and I hope I did show on Saturday, is a very difficult one, has to be conducted almost entirely by hand labor, and the crop has to be flooded at certain periods and the water drained off at certain periods. It is subject to casualties greater that any other crop, because whenever the river gets higher than the embankments it runs over and entirely destroys the crop. So there are more contingencies against it, more casualties befalling it, than any other crop. It takes a much greater amount of capital to prepare and care for the cultivation of rice than any other crop. Then the riceplanter has to contend with the cheapest labor on the face of the earth. As I stated awhile ago, the manufacturer in New England competes with labor in Great Britain that costs about one-half what the New England manufacturer has to pay.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, that is hardly a gen-

Mr. BROWN. I said "about one-half;" I do not have the exact figures.

Mr. HOAR. There are many instances in which some of our most valuable labor competes with labor which is paid abroad not less than

Mr. ALDRICH. Take the article of cotton-bagging, for instance. The manufacturer of cotton-bagging competes with precisely the same kind of labor in the industry abroad

Mr. BROWN. I will take a third, then, as the Senator suggests that. It answers my purpose just as well to make that admission, though I doubt whether it is quite correct.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, if I am not interrupting him too much, there was a representative of a very important industry in my district who appeared here the other day, a near neighbor of mine, a gentleman well known to me personally, a gentleman of the highest character and standing. He was a Norwegian, and he told the story of his life, which will appear in the published testimony before the committee. He had worked, being an apprentice, between six and seven years, getting only his board during that term of apprenticeship, and depending on his father for the rest of his support. He became perfectly competent to make all parts of a breech-loading arm, a gun or pistol, and became one of the skilled workmen in Norway, getting as high wages as any. He came to this country before he learned our language. He went up from a dollar, a dollar and a half, two dollars, two dollars and a half, to four dollars a day in Worcester, Mass., and is now the head of an establishment where he employs three hundred and fifty hands. He said he had been to Europe within a few years, and the wages in Norway and Belgium, with which he has to compete, laborers of the highest skill, never exceed 80 cents a day, while he pays to his men in Worcester, for precisely the same service. while he pays to his men in Worcester, for precisely the same service, two dollars and a half.

Mr. BROWN. I am willing for the purpose of this argument, though I do not believe it is a fact, to admit that the manufacturers of New England, as a whole, pay three times as much for their labor as the manufacturers of Great Britain.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not think it is a fact?

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it is a fact, but it answers my purpose just as well in this argument to admit it. The rice-planters of Georgia pay just fourteen times as much for their labor as the rice-planters in China do. The difference, then, is certainly so great that there would be a little to the supplementary of the supplementary China do. The difference, then, is certainly so great that there ought to be a little more liberality in fixing the per cent. of the tariff on rice. If we are to take the doctrine laid down by the two political parties that the tariff is to be so arranged as to equalize the labor, then the present the tariff is to be so arranged as to equalize the labor, then the present tariff on rice is not near as high as it ought to be. There can be no doubt that it costs more to prepare the land, that it costs more to cultivate the rice, and that there is a greater competition with foreign labor in the case of rice-culture than any other. It is not therefore right to apply the rule to it that is applied to other grains raised upon the farm.

But I can not quite agree with the Senators in charge of the bill that they have left 50 per cent. upon rice, and it is still the highest of any agricultural production. I will take the article of corn. As I do not know what the import price is, I will fix the price of the articles of corn, wheat, and rice at their supposed value at the plantation or at the plantation or at the plantation or at the plantation or at the plantation is not interior. the market town near the plantation in our interior. That, I think, is a fair mode of treating the subject. Corn per bushel of 56 pounds pays a tariff under the present law of 10 cents a bushel. Forty-four pounds, the remainder of the hundred pounds, would pay at the same rate 8 cents, or 100 pounds of corn pays a tariff of 18 cents. Corn is worth per bushel of 56 pounds, say, 40 cents. I presume on the prairies of the West that is a very liberal price for it. The 44 pounds is worth 31 cents, or the 100 pounds of corn would be worth 71 cents in the market, which pays 18 cents tariff, or a fraction over 25 per cent. ad

Wheat per bushel of 60 pounds pays a tariff of 20 cents a bushel. Then the 40 pounds necessary to make 100 pounds pays 13 cents, or 100 pounds of wheat pays a tariff of 33 cents under the present law. A bushel of wheat is worth in the market near where it is raised, say, 80 cents. The 44 pounds would, at the same rate, be worth 53 cents; or 100 pounds of wheat is worth $1.33. This $1.33 worth of wheat pays a tariff of 33 cents, or 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Now take the article of rice. Cleaned rice in the vicinity of the rice plantations, or in the nearest market, is worth 4 cents a pound. costs the planter 4 cents a pound to make it. Under the proposed Senate bill $4 worth of rice would be protected by a tariff of $1. In other words, the tariff is 1 cent a pound, and the rice is worth 4 cents a pound. It is therefore protected by 25 per cent. of its value. Uncleaned rice, which is the rice after the husk has been cleaned off it (it is paddy before that state, and when nothing but the cuticle and flour that are left around the grain are to be cleaned off it is then called uncleaned rice), is worth $3.50 per hundred pounds in the market. The bill proposes to worth $3.50 per numered pounds in the market. The bin proposes to a balance every year that had a fix the tariff at one-half cent per pound, or at 50 cents on $3.50 worth of rice, which is 14\delta per cent. ad valorem. One hundred pounds of paddy was the case every year during would be worth, if cleaned, $4. Deduct for cleaning 28 per cent., or $1.32, and it leaves 100 pounds of paddy worth $2.68. The proposition and it is one worth considering.

is to put the duty on this rice at a quarter of a cent per pound, which would be 25 cents tariff on 100 pounds of paddy, and that is simply 10 per cent. ad valorem.

If it is said that the import price is lower than this, then to that extent it would raise the ad valorem. There may be some difference in that particular, but in no case does the present bill fix the tariff as high as 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The proposition is to take an agricultural product, for which it costs ten times as much to prepare the land as any other, and that pays four-teen times as much for labor as its competitor abroad pays, and to put a lower tariff upon it than is put upon corn and wheat, the common productions of the country.

There is scarcely an acre of land out in the rich region upon which the Senator who now fills the chair lives that can not be prepared with very small expense for the cultivation of corn. Then there are no great casualties that attend the crop. It is a pretty certain crop, and the freshets and contingencies are a very small per cent. as compared with those which attend rice. It is not fair to put the tariff as low upon rice as upon corn under all these circumstances.

I can not think the Senators who profess to be governed by the principles of protection can feel that they are doing quite the thing that they are doing quite the thing that make the done to pass the bill in the shape they now have it. When ought to be done to pass the bill in the shape they now have it. they look into the whole question and examine it in all its lights, I think they will come to the conclusion I have, that rice needs all the protection it now has.

I think the Senator from Rhode Island was mistaken when he said that the bill passed in 1883 made one-quarter of a cent reduction under a misapprehension of facts. The bill was very thoroughly discussed, and the particular paragraph relating to rice was discussed at very considerable length and with a very full understanding of the facts.

The Republican Senate in 1862 or 1863 fixed the tariff at 2½ cents; The Republican Senate in 1862 or 1863 fixed the tariff at 2½ cents; the Republican Senate in 1883 reduced it to 2½ cents on cleaned rice. Now the proposition is to reduce cleaned rice to 1 cent, taking off a cent and a quarter and leaving it at 1 cent. Take uncleaned rice, which stands, under the present law, at 1½ cents a pound. The proposition is to reduce it to half a cent, or only one-third as much as the present rate. Then take the paddy, which now pays 1½ cents a pound. The proposition is to put it at a quarter of a cent, or only one-fifth as much as the present rate. It seems to me that this is doing great injustice to a very important and valuable agricultural industry and discrimito a very important and valuable agricultural industry and discriminating against it sectionally at a rate that can not be said to be fair and just

I think there is much good sense in the proposition laid down by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. While I do not agree with him that we could get along in cultivating rice at all, with any profit, without a tariff upon it, still if everything that is made in New England factories and in other sections of the Union is to be taxed at a high rate to support the Government and give incidental protection, I think it is only just and fair that a great Southern production such as rice should have like consideration.

It is hardly the fair thing for the committee to insist upon the rate fixed in the Senate bill. I think the present rate of tariff ought to be maintained on rice just as it stands to-day, and nothing ought to be taken off it. I do not believe the planters would have anything like a reasonable profit as it now is. If the rate is much reduced, they can not even make a living at all by raising it.

Now, a word in response to my friend, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who sits near me. He made a speech this morning dissenting from the views I take as to the part that the tariff has played in the development of the South, in the building up of Southern industries. It would not be worth the while of myself and my friend for us to discuss that question at any great length or by any set speeches, as I do not think we should convince each other, and we should not be likely to come together on it. I expressed my views very fully on this subject during the tariff debate in the Senate at the last session, and as the desire is to get to a vote upon the bill to-morrow, and I do not want to take an unreasonable portion of the time of the Senate, I will refer to what I then said, for my views more fully stated than I stated them Saturday afternoon last.

I will, however, call the attention of the Senate to certain statistics as to the balance of trade. I will not claim for the tariff (for my friend and I would differ about that probably) that it did produce the result which I shall reach when I have read this official statement about the balance of trade as between this country and foreign countries; but it is rather a peculiar coincidence that at the time when the tariff was the lowest it has ever been, certainly at any late period of the Government, from 1848 to 1857, inclusive, taking those ten years the balance of trade was against us every year, and the aggregate balance for the ten years was, in round numbers, $339,000,000. In other words, we conducted trade and commerce with the people of other nations, and when we came to a general settlement at the end of the year we owed them a balance every year that had to be paid by sending gold out of this country to pay the debt, which gold is not likely ever to return. That was the case every year during that very low-tariff period. I do not say whether the tariff did it or what did it. I only speak of the fact,

Then take another period, from 1878 to 1887, inclusive, taking exactly the corresponding years, and the balance of trade was largely in our favor every one of those ten years. The aggregate balance in round numbers for the ten years was $1,381,000,000.

In other words, in conducting trade and commerce with other nations for the ten years from 1848 to 1857, inclusive, during the very low-tariff period, the balance of trade was against us every year, and the aggregate balance of the ten years that we had to send out of the country in gold to pay debts abroad was $339,000,000. Taking the period from 1878 to 1887, inclusive, the ten years just passed, under a high tariff, the balance of trade was in our favor largely every year, and it aggregated in the ten years $1,381,000,000.

These are simple facts that I state. I shall not draw any conclusions, because I have no doubt my friend and myself would differ about the conclusions. I think, however, that the tariff had something to do with that balance in each case.

I have here a statement made up of the balance of trade every year from 1790 to the present time, and if there is no objection I will incorporate it in the RECORD, as it is a rather interesting document.

	MANAGEMENT OF STREET

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the balance of trade that was against us has been relieved by the contributions of agriculture to the com-merce of the world, not by the contributions of manufactured goods or articles. We overcame that balance of trade because our agricultural interests were very greatly expanded by immigration, and by our homestead laws, and by the increased demand of the foreign nations of the earth for our food productions as well as for our textile productions. I can not conceive how the balance of trade has been turned in our favor by imposing upon imported goods higher duties than were formerly imposed.

The balance of trade means the return for the productions of this country that were sent out abroad that the people in foreign countries are obliged to have, being indispensable elements of living. If I am correct in the statement that the contributions of agriculture are the causes of the turn of the balance of trade in our favor, when we come to look over the statistics in respect of what those contributions are I think we shall find that very much more credit is due to agriculture in the United States than to manufactures for our present apparent prosperity, considered in a national view.

If I have correctly footed up the column in the "Statistical Abstract" headed "Amount of duties collected" (and my addition is, I think correct), from 1791 to 1888, inclusive, the Government collected customs duties amounting to $6,092,311,456. Of this, $5,028,984,800 has been collected since 1850, including that year, from which date we have census reports of manufactures.

A table prepared by Mr. Switzler gives the amount of the products of domestic manufactures in the United States for 1850, 1860, 1870, and 1880-census years. I have taken the amounts for 1850 and 1860, added them together, and divided the aggregate for an average for the ten years between these dates; and so for 1860 and 1870, and for 1870 and 1880, and using the figures for 1880, estimated at moderately larger figures for 1888, for an average for the last eight years, thus making an estimate of the total products for thirty-eight years. I have in the  $\begin{array}{c|c} 131,388,682\\ 43,186,640\\ 77,403,566\\ \end{array}$  same way estimated the exports of domestic manufactures for the same 77,403,506 period, and have so reached the amount consumed. There is no means of knowing exactly what of these products are of protected industries or the percentage of protection.

Of all the goods consumed, of domestic manufacture or imported, the percentage of imported goods was, in 1850, 11.61; in 1860, 12.43; in 1870, 6.86; and in 1880, 7.42.

If the consumption of goods of domestic manufacture since 1791 has borne the same proportion to the consumption of imported goods that it has since 1850, and if the effect of protection is to increase the cost of the domestic goods to the amount of the duty imposed on foreign goods, the consumers have paid to the manufacturers more than $50,-000,000,000 in bounties, the imported goods being something like 10 o00,000,000 in bounties, the imported goods being something like 10 per cent. of the value of the domestic goods consumed, and more than $8,000,000,000 having being paid on their importation.

These figures may look large, they may even look wild to the Senator from Georgia, but I believe there is a close approximation to correctness in them. It is not probable, though, that nine-tenths o' the direct and indirect tariff tax goes to the manufacturer and one-tenth to the Government. It believe that is not the correct proportion. With the resources that I have for information on subjects of this kind—and I believe they are resources that almost any other persons can resort to for such information—it is necessarily the case that our estimates must be only approximate; but that the agricultural interests of the United States have paid to the manufacturing interests and industries of the United States during these periods of taxation about the enormous amount that I have referred to I think is undoubtedly correct.

Agriculturists in the United States have been able to bear this tax because of the great fertility of our soil and because of the immense number of immigrants that have come from other countries here to supply us with labor, as well as, also, because of the necessities of for-eign countries, many of which have been engaged in very heavy warfare with each other and have consequently depleted their fields of labor so that their harvests have been comparatively small. But I think I can state with absolute assurance, and every American citizen will appreciate fully the fact, that the agricultural interests of the United States, which, as I remarked in the few observations I made this morning, fixed the value of all capital and all money, have yielded to the protected industries more than five times the money that would be necessary now to rebuild every one of them if they were burnt to the ground. It has been the constant, unvaried cause of the depletion of the profits of agriculture, and while that industry has borne it with patience it does seen to me that when we are reforming our tariff act and are trying to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, amounting to $130,000,000 a year, our very first and most direct effort should be to lift the burdens from this industry that has contributed so enormously to the support of the Government, has provided this balance of trade in our favor, and has yielded to the manufacturing industries of this country, as I repeat, more money, by far more money than would be necessary to rebuild every one of the manufactories of the United States if they were burnt to the ground.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. BUTLER rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Just one moment, if the Senator pleases. I do not desire to interfere with the drift of the debate, but just to say a word. The other day in the discussion between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and myself on the subject of rice—and I propose to dismiss it after what I shall now say—that Senator referred to the duty on beans, an agricultural product, which he said had only been taxed 25 cents a bushel. I think there is one agricultural product that is ceasing to be patient under these exactions.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not hear the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I say I think there is one industry which is ceasing to be patient under this protective system, and is coming in now to ask relief at the hands of Congress. The Senator from Rhode Island, with some exultation, said that while the committee had given 45 cents a bushel on rice they had only given 25 cents a bushel on beans, an industry cultivated principally in New England; it does not make any difference where they are cultivated; they are used very largely in New England.

I find that that Senator did not state quite all relating to beans. According to my understanding of another line in this bill they have put a tax not only of 25 cents a bushel—where they come in, I take it, in bulk—but they have also put a tariff of 25 cents a gallon on "beans, peas, and mushrooms, prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles, or

Now, estimating 8 gallons to a bushel, the tax on a bushel of beans under that head would be about $2.

there is a duty of 25 cents a gallon, and there are eight gallons in a

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the number of the paragraph?
Mr. BUTLER. Paragraphs Nos. 241 and 242.
Mr. ALDRICH. These are "prepared or preserved"—French beans green, in tin cans.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose that is the way they are prepared. I do not know how they are prepared. I see that the paragraph states:

Beans, peas, and mushrooms, prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles, or otherwise, 25 cents per gallon.

Mr. ALDRICH. Ordinary beans are never prepared in this way These are French beans.

Mr. HISCOCK. It would be equivalent to a duty of about 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUTLER. Under the existing law they are about 30 per cent, under the House bill 30 per cent., under this bill 25 cents per gallon.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not a change of the ad valorem rate of duty.

These rates are based on Government tests in the Mr. ALDRICH. ew York custom-house for a period of six months.

Mr. BUTLER. These beans in paragraph 242, then, are not the beans referred to in the preceding paragraph?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means. Mr. BUTLER. Paragraph 241 states 25 cents a bushel. What ad valorem duty is that?

Mr. HISCOCK. About 25 per cent. The value of beans is just about the same per pound or bushel as the value of rice.

Mr. BUTLER. I see here that the imports are 478,205.33. I do not know whether these are bushels or pounds. The value is $492,752.39.

That would be a little over $1 a bushel if for bushels. Mr. ALDRICH. It is $1.03 a bushel. The foreign price of rice is

Mr. BUTLER. Domestic rice is four or five dollars a bushel.
Mr. ALDRICH. But the foreign rice is not.
Mr. BROWN. Not more than a dollar a bushel?
Mr. ALDRICH. Not more than a dollar a bushel.
Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—
Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to finish my remark st? I have been trying to get the floor for half an hour.

Mr. BROWN. I had the floor and yielded it.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will yield for a question if the Senator desires; otherwise I should like to continue.

The Senator from South Carolina said that the committee had heard only parties interested on one side—the manufacturers.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not state that, but I ask the Senator from

Mr. BUTLER. I did not state that, but I ask the Schator Hola.

Rhode Island whether that was not the case?

Mr. ALDRICH. I say it is not the case, and I will say that we have heard on each of the questions involved in the preparation of this bill parties on both sides and on all sides—not only the manufacturers but importers and everybody who had anything to say either for or against the rates in the bill, or the rates of the existing law. So the inference that would be drawn from the Senator's statement would not be a correct one. We have given a hearing to everybody who desired to be heard.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. Mr. HARRIS. As a matter of fact, I will ask the Senator were not the people who appeared before the subcommittee in the ratio of 9 out of 10, if not 19 out of 20, manufacturers who sought protection for their special industries?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir. As to the people who appeared in the earlier hearings of the committee that proportion would probably be too large; but as to the later hearings of the committee very much the Mr. ALDRICH.

larger proportion have been importers.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say, if the Senator will allow me, that so far as I have had the honor of attending the sessions of the subcommittee I do not know exactly what the ratio was, but at least 9 out of 10, if not a larger number, were manufacturers who sought protection for their special interests.

Mr. ALDRICH. That may have been true, or approximately true, in regard to the earlier hearings of the committee; but the Senator from Tennessee must remember that for a number of weeks, when the hearings before the committee have been very large, he has not been able to be present.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will restate that recently we have heard importers and other persons interested in the reduction of rates, in a much larger proportion than we have the manufacturers.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island a

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. Mr. VOORHEES. I have not been very troublesome. The Sena-Mr. ALDRICH. What paragraph is the Senator reading from?

Mr. BUTLER. I am referring to paragraphs 241 and 242. I do not know how beans are prepared in "tins, jars, or bottles," but I say that the Committee on Finance. Inasmuch as all this labor and exertion on the part of Congress seems to be to protect laboring men and laboring women who work in the factories, rolling-mills, and mines, I should like to ask how many of them have appeared here in behalf of these interests of theirs?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that all the great industries and very many minor industries have been represented by laboring men.
Mr. VOORHEES. They have been represented by the employers of labor, the manufacturers.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. VOORHEES. If there has been here a man or a woman who works with his or her own hands in the factories I have not seen one.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not at all strange. The Senator never attended but one meeting of the committee, I think.

Mr. VOORHEES. What does the Senator mean—one meeting of the Finance Committee?

Mr. ALDRICH. One meeting of the subcommittee.
Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, that subcommittee met in the interest of the Republican party and kept four-fifths of its workings secret from all the world.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no. Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes. I will ask the Senator this question: How many mechanics or agricultural laborers were before the commit-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will answer the questions seriatim. The meetings of the subcommittee have never been secret. They have always been open to every member of the committee. No meeting was ever held when a Democratic member was not present or had not the op-portunity to be present if he had seen fit. I do not say that the Senator from Indiana purposely absented himself from the meetings of the committee; I have no doubt he had other matters to attend to. I have never seen him at but one of the meetings of the subcommittee, and the statement that the Senator now makes shows that he could not have been present.

Mr. VOORHEES. That does not affect the question.
Mr. ALDRICH. We have heard delegations of laboring men and women constantly before the committee, and their testimony is in the printed record of the committee

Mr. VOORHEES. Where did they come from? Mr. ALDRICH. From New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, and other States

Mr. VOORHEES. M Mr. ALDRICH. Yes. Mr. VOORHEES. H Mechanics and agricultural laborers?

Mr. VOORHEES. How many farmers have ever been there?
Mr. ALDRICH. Several delegations of farmers have been there recently.

Mr. VOORHEES. On the subject of rice and sugar, I suppose.

Mr. ALDRICH. No. sir; on the subject of Northern farm products.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not think there have been five farmers

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator evidently is not familiar with the work of the committee. If he had read the record of the committee's proceedings he would not make this statement.

I want to say that it was the purpose of the committee (and it had no other purpose) to afford adequate protection to the rice industry of the United States.

Mr. BROWN. The committee has not done it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then it is not the fault of the committee. of the facts presented by the Senator from Georgia were not before the I would suggest that the matter go over until to-morrow, until the committee can examine the facts presented by that Senator, and if it shall appear that we have the rate too low we are willing to change it. There is no rate in this bill that the committee will insist on if evidence be produced by any one in the Senate or out of it that will lead the committee to believe that they have done an injustice. I suggest that this paragraph may go over until to-morrow morning, and the committee will in the mean time examine the facts now presented.

Mr. GIBSON. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to complain that in the revision of the tariff in 1883 the rate on rice was increased.

Mr. ALDRICH. No. I said it was fixed too high.
Mr. GIBSON. That it was fixed too high—not properly reduced.
Mr. President, the tariff rate on rice before 1883 was 2½ cents per pound on cleaned rice, and 2 on uncleaned rice; 3 cents a pound and 20 per cent. besides on "rice and other starch;" and 20 per cent. on "flour and meal" rice. In 1883 there were reductions made in these rates on rice. On cleaned rice the duty was made 2\frac{1}{2} cents; on un-I wish also to call the attention of the subcommittee to the fact that while they have reduced the tariff rate on rice—on clean rice 50 per cent. and on uncleaned rice more than 50 per cent. -no, not quiteabout 23 per cent., and on paddy 26 per cent.—that the reduction in revenue will be very small collected from rice. The revenue collected from rice now does not quite equal a million dollars—exactly $971,454.49, and by this reduction of largely over 50 per cent. the estimated amount that will be collected will be exactly $599,957.13. Hence the total revenues will only be reduced by the sum of $371,497.36; a trifling sum, indeed, as a compensation for the overthrow of this industry. I suggest that there are no considerations relating either to the revenues or public policy to justify this extraordinary discrimination against rice. It can not be defended on any ground.

Mr. BROWN. In connection with what the Senator from Louisiana

[Mr. GIBSON] has said, I want to repeat one statement.

Prior to 1883 the duty on cleaned rice was 2½ cents a pound. tariff act of 1883 took off a quarter of a cent, leaving the duty as it now stands, 21 cents. The committee proposes to reduce it to 1 cent. In other words, you propose to take off one cent and a quarter and leave a cent on. Then take uncleaned rice. The present law fixes it at one and a half cents, and you put it at half a cent. You reduce it two-thirds.

Under the present law, on paddy it is one and a quarter cents a pound, and you put it at a quarter. In other words, you take off four-fifths of

Before I take my seat I want to say a word about another matter, in reference to the point I made awhile ago and the reply to it of my friend from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. I stated that I had not expected that he and I would agree on the effect of the tariff on Southern industries. I take one view of that subject and he another. He attributes it all to the general advancement of business and to the importation of foreign money for investment and all that sort of thing. I think the tariff has had a great deal to do with it. But I stated that there was another point on which he and I might differ, that is as to the effect of the tariff on the balance of trade, and I referred to the fact that the balance of trade during the ten years of lowest tariff from 1848 to 1857, inclusive, was against us every year, and that the aggregate balance of trade against us for which we had to send gold to Europe to make settlements amounted to $339,000,000. There was no year out of the ten years of low tariff that I have just referred to when the balance of trade was not against us, and the aggregate was what I have just stated.

Then as to the ten years lately past, making a corresponding computation and taking the years of 1878 to 1887, inclusive, under the present high tariff, the balance of trade has been in our favor every year during that period and the aggregate balance in our favor $1,381,000,000. It was against us every year during the ten years of the first period I referred to, aggregating a balance against us of $339,000,000, and it was in our favor every year during the latter period referred to, aggregating a balance in our favor of $1,381,000,000, in round numbers.

My friend attributes all that to agriculture. I attribute a large part of it to manufactures. I think the tariff caused a great many industries to spring up that otherwise would not have sprung up. The protection that was given caused capital to be put largely into business, and the increased quantities made brought down the prices until during the period I have referred to our people, instead of going abroad for their manufactured articles and sending their gold abroad in settlement, made their articles mostly at home and kept the gold at home that they would otherwise have sent out to pay for them. That is my view of it. I know that my friend and I can not agree on it, but as I referred to it I wanted to put the point on record.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the Senator from Georgia consents that this matter may go over.

Mr. BROWN. I consent that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendment will be passed over until to-morrow mo ning.

Mr. DOLPH. At the request of the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] I submit an amendment to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed now to the consideration of Schedule K, page 142.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the first paragraph of Schedule K.

The Secretary read as follows:

All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend in line 1383 by striking out all after the word "be" to the end of the paragraph, and inserting the words "admitted free of duty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 1383, page 142, after the word "be," it is proposed to strike out to the end of the paragraph, as follows:

Divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Admitted free of duty.

So as to read:

All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President—

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to say just a word. This debate has taken up the morning, and no definite agreement has been arrived at. If it will suit the convenience of the Senators in charge of the bill, I would suggest that we continue the general discussion without limitation as to time until 5 o'clock to-day, and that any subsequent discussion shall be under the ten-minutes rule, and that the debate close and voting on the bill and amendments commence at 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senate that the Senator from Missouri and myself and the Senator from North Carolina have had some informal conversation on the subject, and I am willing, in behalf of our side of the Chamber, unless some objection be made, that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks that general debate may continue until 5 o'clock this afternoon, and that thereafter all debate shall be under the ten-minutes rule until 5 o'clock

Mr. HARRIS. Is it this afternoon or to-morrow afternoon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again state the proposition of the Senator from Missouri. It is that the general debate continue until 5 o'clock this afternoon, and after 5 o'clock to-day that the debate shall be under the ten-minute rule until 5 o'clock to-morrow, at which time the vote shall be taken on the amendments and the bill without further debate. That is the way the Chair understood it. If that is not correct the Senator will correct it,

Mr. HALE. Make it the five-minute rule, instead of ten.
Mr. VEST. No, make it ten minutes. I have consulted my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, and I believe that ten minutes will be more acceptable to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I will thank the Presiding Officer to state it from the Chair so that there may be no mistake about it. It is, if I understand it, that there is to be no limit to debate until 5 o'clock this evening, that being the hour for the recess, so that when we come here at 8 o'clock to-night we shall go on under the ten-minute rule, and that that shall go on to-morrow until 5 o'clock, when all debate ceases.

Mr. HALE. All debate closes to-morrow at 5 o'clock.

Mr. VEST. At 5 p. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me a moment? There are some amendments that the committee propose to this wool and woolen schedule that I think perhaps I had better offer and have sent to the printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received if there be no objection, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer an amendment and have it printed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received and printed. Mr. ALLISON. The amendments I offer are by direction of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be received, lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, we have approached now what I regard as the most important schedule in this bill. It will certainly be conceded that there is nothing of more prime necessity to the comfort or the clothing of man than wool.

The history of our race from Asia to Australia is the history of wool. It is commingled with the traditions of Greek mythology as well as the ceremonials of the Jewish religion. In all ages, in all countries, wool has been the chief covering of man. The gentle domestic animal which yields it has ever been the faithful friend of man, furnishing him both food and raiment By the tables which are furnished us by the Bureau of Statistics, which I will not take the trouble to read, but will ask to have incorporated as part of my remarks, I find that the United States is the fourth country in the world in the number of sheep, while in the production of wool the United States is the second country in the world.

The table is as follows:

Table showing the number of sheep and lambs of the principal wool-producing countries of the world.

Countries.
Russia in Europe (1882) United Kingdom (1886) France (1885) Spain (1878) Germany (1883) Hungary (1884) United States of America (1887) Argentine Republic (1885) Uruguay (1884) Uruguay (1884) Australasia (1884 and 1885) India (1877 and 1878) Cape Colony and Natal (1875 and 1885)	19, 189, 718

It will be observed that Australasia leads the world in the number of sheep and lambs.

Table showing the raw wool produced in ecc's of the principal wool-producing countries of the world.

	Quantities produced.
Russia in Europe (1884) United Kingdom (1885) France (1882) Spain (1/78) Germany (1881) Hungary (1885) United States of America (1885) Uruguay (1884) Uruguay (1884) Australasia (1885–'86) British East Indies Turkey and Persia Cape Colony and Natal (1885)	Pounds, 262, 966, 000 135, 936, 000 80, 138, 000 54, 894, 000 43, 146, 000 302, 000, 000 283, 047, 000 59, 084, 000 455, 470, 000 36, 354, 000

Those tables substantiate the assertion I made that the United States is second in wool producing and fourth in the number of sheep of all countries of the world.

The number of sheep in the United States in 1888 by estimation was 43,544,755. The amount of wool produced in 1887 in this country was 285,000,000 pounds; the amount of wool imported was 114,038,030 pounds; the amount of wool exported was 6,986,232 pounds. Therefore there were retained for consumption 392,051,798 pounds. The tax paid upon the imported wool in the shape of tariff duty was $6,430,317.

The price of corresponding grades of wool at that period in London was 22½ cents per pound and the price in New York and Boston for the same grades of wool for that period was 31 cents per pound. So that we can clearly arrive at the conclusion that we paid a tax on the domestic article of 8½ cents per pound, minus the cost of transportation to this country, which at a half a cent per pound, or something like $11 per ton, should be stated thus: 285,000,000 pounds of domestic wool with 8 cents added in the shape of the duty on the foreign wool with which it competes, making $22,800,000, and the total tax therefore upon the raw wool used by the American people in the year 1887, was $29,-230.317.

The cost of woolen manufactures which were imported in 1888 was $47,719,393, and the duty paid thereon averaging 69 per cent. was $32,213,120, making the total cost of imported woolens $79,932,513.

The domestic articles of wool manufactured in the United States we can only arrive at by approximation. In 1880, according to the census, the product of our factories-and it must be borne in mind that less than a half million dollars, all told, were exported the last year—the product of our factories was $267,252,913 in value. At the very lowest At the very lowest estimate, I suppose it would be fair to say that the product of the woolen factories of the United States now is at least $300,000,000. Now how are we to arrive at the additional cost to the American people? We have seen that the tax on the raw material, domestic and imported, amounted to $29,000,000 and upwards. We have seen that the taxes on woolen goods imported amounted to $32,000,000 and upwards. Now, how much additional cost has been imposed upon the American people by the enhancement of the price of the domestic article?

Estimating the amount of manufactures in 1888 at $300,000,000, if we were to take the whole amount of duty of 69 per cent. the amount would be $188,000,000. The price of the enhanced cost of the domestic article, if we are to take it at 50 per cent. duty, would amount to $150,000,000. If it were so that it did no more than enhance the price to the extent of 25 per cent. it would be $75,000,000. Whichever way you see proper to take it, there is an enormous additional tax imposed upon the American people under cover of this duty on wool and woolens, which is to be paid by them, and which will continue to be woolens, which is to be paid by them, and which will continue to be paid by them so long as our present laws exist. We have already seen that about 80 per cent. of the duty on wool itself is found in the enhanced price of the domestic wool, at least 8½ cents per pound. Therefore, if you take 50 per cent. of the duty imposed, as I have found, upon the domestic article, you will have somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 of additional tax upon the American people in consequence of these weeken duties people in consequence of these woolen duties.

Mr. President, we are the greatest wool-consuming country in the world. That is stated and I believed admitted upon all sides. We have a larger population than almost any other people in Christendom. The average wealth of the people of the United States is greater than that of any other; their average condition of comfort is greater than that of any other people, and therefore we consume more of woolen goods, and it is our greatest industry, with the single exception of the metals. In 1880 the product of all the manufacturing establishments of metals in the United States was $604,553,460, whilst the value of all the wool manufactured was $267,182,914, and the value of all the cotton manufactures was $210,950,383. So I say with the exception of the metal manufactures of the United States, wool is our very greatest interest, and therefore it should be the duty of legislators, as it seems to me, to push the prosperity of our greatest industry.

Why continue this heavy tax? Why tax the raw material which forces the taxation of the manufactured product in order to equalize it? When a proposition to place any article upon the free-list or to reduce the duty is made, the assertion is always made that it will, in the first place, destroy that industry. Can that be said here? Can it be asserted here truthfully that the reduction of the tax or the removal of the tax upon the raw material of a great industry will destroy that in-

It is an absurdity to say so. dustry?

In the first place, I have some authority here showing that there is In the first place, I have some authority here showing that there is nothing in the way of this country excelling all the countries in the world in the manufacture of woolen goods except the duty on the wool itself, which makes the price higher than it is to any other people. A gentleman by the name of Schoenhof, who is at present the consul of the United States at Tunstall, has made, under direction of the State Department, most careful inquiry and investigation into the cost of manufacturing wool in the United States and in England. He visited, as his report shows, which I have before me, the most reliable and respectable manufacturers whom he could find in both countries and made the most careful and paintstaking calculations and inquiries and made the most careful and painstaking calculations and inquiries into every branch of the manufacture of woolen goods, and the conclusions to which he comes, and which I have not yet seen anywhere denied, are, as I have stated, that there is nothing in the way of the successful manufacture of American woolen goods in competition with all the world except the price of raw material. Instead of reading his statement in extenso I have collated and abstracted it for the purpose of saving the time of the Senate.

The total cost of manufacturing a pound of wool into ladies' dress

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment for a question?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. What evidence has the Senator that those estimates are upon the same quality of wool?

Mr. VANCE. I have the evidence of the gentleman who took the testimony

Mr. CHACE. Does the Senator know this gentleman?

Mr. VANCE. Mr. CHACE. I do, personally.

What are his qualifications for judging as to the quality?

Mr. VANCE. I think he is one of the most competent men to deal with questions of this kind I have ever known.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator knows that? Mr. VANCE. He is a man of intelligence He is a man of intelligence and long experience, with perhaps twenty-five or thirty years of his life devoted to the study of these very subjects.

Mr. CHACE. Has he any practical knowledge of it?

Mr. VANCE. I should say so. I do not know whether he ever worked in a mill or not. I have not that knowledge. He gives the names of the manufacturers and everybody from whom he obtained the information. So it is very easy to contradict it if it is not true.

I was proceeding to read that the wool of the English manufacturer stands at 32 cents per pound.

Cost of manufacturing the same quality of goods in England:

	ents.
Carding, preparing and spinning	32 4 1.50
Supplies Weaving and dressing, etc	7.40

Whereas the Massachusetts cost was 32. So the cost of manufacturing a pound of wool in England is 5.59 cents greater than it is in the United States.

In England the wages of weavers in woolen mills (mostly girls) are from 12 to 15 shillings per week, scarcely more than one-half the earnfrom 12 to 15 shillings per week, scarcely more than one-half the earnings of the American weaver in the same goods, but the English weaver tends one loom only, and the American tends two.

The output of the American weaver is about 300 yards per week; the output of the English weaver per week is 105 yards; making the average cost for weaving American goods 2.65 cents per yard, and for English weaver 2.56 cents per yard; English cost of weaving per pound, English weaver 2.56 cents per yard; English cost of weaving per pound, 6.07 cents; Massachusetts cost, 6.90 cents. The small difference is due to difference in width of the cloth, the English article being 54 inches in width and the American article 50 inches in width.

All this plainly shows that if we had free wool we could produce woolen cloth at 64.31 cents per pound which would cost in England 69.90 cents per pound to produce.

I think there is nothing wanting to the demonstration that we could exceed the world in the production of woolen goods with free wool; and even with a different duty levied upon wool, the manufacturing interests of this country would take a great start forward and would be able to furnish goods much cheaper and give more employment to labor.

The manufacturers, the woolen people, who apppeared before the Finance Committee gave some testimony that I regard as very valuable concerning the present method of levying duties and the present duties which are levied upon the raw wools that are imported into this country. I will read first from the statement of Mr. T. Sampson, of the Washington Mills Company of Lawrence, Mass., and to save my own Washington Mills Company of Lawrence, Mass., and to save my own strength I will ask the Secretary to read this testimony which I have

I respectfully submit what I believe to be the solution of that much-vexed question, tarif on wool.

I respectfully submit what I believe to be the solution of that much-vexed question, tarif on wool.

Wanskuck Mills, Providence, R. I. I am now manager of the Washington Mills Company, a corporation with two millions of capital and consuming about 4,00,000 pounds of wool a year and employing 1,600 hands. My business has compelled me to become personally acquainted with the working of the present of the system and to suggest a remedy.

You are aware that wools are classified and a separate specified duty is charged on the various classes. Wool costing a certain price pay 22 econs duty; when that price advances it pays 5 cents, then again 10 cents, then 20 cents, etc. As you are aware that wools are classified and a separate specified duty; is charged on the various classes. We will start from 20 to 8 per cent. of retime markets contains from 20 to 8 per cent. of retime markets of the wool is the payed to the wool when society. For instance, when in England recently I found many of the mills in Bradford using a Russian wool that costs 5 pence a pound.

This was desirable wool, and was then being put into yarns which were exhibited the United States the amount of the duty would have been equal to the cost of the wool, as it must have paid 10 cents a pound duty on the greasy weight. This was desirable wool, and was then being put into yarns which were saystem. After passing through the London wool stores with my broker, I selected certain wools and instructed him to bid for the same at public auction. He was a substitute of the wool would have the province of the present system. After passing through the London wool stores with my broker, I selected certain wools and instructed him to bid for the same at public auction. He was the province of of wool was imported into the United States. The effect of an ad valorem duty would be to equalize the prices of wool abroad. American competition would be liable to drop in on any and all kinds of wool, and so advance prices in Lon-

It is beyond my comprehension how any intelligent manufacturer or farmer can advocate a specific duty on wool. I have conversed with many, and have as yet to hear the first who will give a good reason why wool shrinking 70 per cent.; or why wool costing 15 pence in public auction in London should pay 10 cents a pound, whereas the very same wool costing 15\(\frac{1}{2}\) pence pays 20 cents a pound duty. The farmer's trouble to-day does not arise from the amount of Australian, South American, or Cape wools that are imported into the United States, but from the fact that these wools come in the shape of manufactured cloth. Raising the price of the raw material abroad will decrease the importation of manufactured cloth, will start up the American mills that are now idle or in a semi-idle condition, and then a market will be found that will satisfy our farmers.

tion of manufactured cloth, will start up the American mills that are now idle or in a semi-idle condition, and then a market will be found that will satisfy our farmers.

Not along ago an attempt was made to enter at the New York custom-house single 60 worsted yarn at 59 cents; the parties desiring to enter it declaring that they would furnish 200,000 pounds of the same thing at that price.

Any one familiar with the prices at which certain wools can be bought abroad and with the prices paid for foreign labor can understand the possibility of the truth of the above statement.

As has been stated, certain wools, on account of high shrinkage, can not be imported under the present tariff. Hence there is only demand for these wools by the foreigner, who is able to buy them at much less cost than would be possible could the American bid on them, thus greatly enhancing the demand and enhancing the price. Wools thus cheaply bought by the foreigner are worked by him cheaply into yarn or goods and passed under a low tariff into this country, where of course they can be sold at a much lower figure than the same grade of goods made in this country from the wool on which high tariff has been paid. It takes 3 pounds of low-priced wool to produce 1 pound of yarn. The duty on this wool would be 35 cents. The duty on it after being made into yarn woulds be but 18 cents. So it is seen that we not only aid the foreigner by being unable to bid against him in the purchase of wool, but also by allowing him to pass into this country the manufactures from this wool at about half the duty we would pay on the same wool should we buy it at a price to allow of its entry as a low-cost wool. Thus it is readily seen that the very object of the tariff is deteated. Instead of the price of wool being raised for the foreigner by the possibility of American competition in bidding on that wool, the American farmer is utterly discouraged by the impossibility of finding a market for an equally good wool, but which the American manufactures read of

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it will be recollected that in 1885 Mr. Manning, then Secretary of the Treasury, sent out inquiries to manufacturers and merchants all over the country requesting their co-operation in the improvement of the fiscal policy of the country, and among the replies received was one from the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, representing over one hundred manufacturing establishments of wool, and signed by some of the leading manufacturers of the country, among them William Whitman, of Boston, as president, Thomas Dolan, of Philadelphia, one of its vice-presidents, and James Dobson, of Philadelphia, one of the executive committee, and other officers of this association, and they give almost precisely the same arguments that were given by Mr. Sampson, of the Washington Mills Company, whose testimony I have just had read; and it is all to the effect that it is impossible, with the specific duty such as we have now on raw wool, for the manufacturers of this country to compete, with on raw wool, for the manufacturers of this country to compete, with anything like a chance of success, with their foreign rivals.

They go on to say that the cheap goods are absolutely forbidden because of the tax upon the grease and dirt which are in it, and which frequently amount to 66 or 70 per cent. of the weight of the mass; and therefore to pay a duty of 10 cents a pound upon grease and dirt, and in the case where there are two pounds to one of grease and dirt the duty would be 20 cents a pound upon it, is an absolute prohibition upon the importation of such goods. Therefore the cheap, greasy, dirty wools of Europe, however fine in quality they may be, are left for the manufacturers of Europe to consume and undersell the American manufacturers with their production.

Not only is that the case, that our manufacturers are prohibited by

Not only is that the case, that our manufacturers are prohibited by this duty from the use of these wools in that greasy and dirty condition, but the very fact that so great a wool-consuming and manufacturing country as the United States is kept out of the market depresses the price of these dirty wools still more in the European market, and still further inures to the benefit of the manufacturers of Europe who can alone pay for them at the rate in London. Therefore, it is a ruinous and suicidal policy to maintain this duty; and it seems to me that the best thing for the manufacturers of this country that could be done would be either to remove this duty entirely (which I propose to do by my amendment) or to change from specific to ad valorem duties, and put it in the reach of the American manufacturer of cheaper goods to buy; and being able thus to get his material cheap, he will be able to sell the product to the people cheaper.

But it is said that it would destroy the woolen interests; that if the duty upon raw wool is reduced it will cause a decline in the number of sheep in this country, a decrease of the flocks all over the land; and they give as an evidence of that the slight decrease in the duty on wool that was made by the tariff of 1883, which they say was followed by a great decline in the number of the sheep in this country. There never was an argument more fallacious than that.

with the number of sheep and the increase or diminution of the flocks of this country during the same period, will show that there can be no possible connection whatsoever between the tariff rates of duty and the number of sheep that we have had in this country. Why, sir, the decline of which they speak and which they attribute to the reduction of the duties on wool in 1883 began many years before the passage of the act of 1883. That decline began in 1867. In 1867, after the duties were raised to the highest point they have been since the war, a decline in the number of sheep began.

I have tables here showing the number of sheep in various portions of the country at the decennial periods when our censuses have been taken, and you will notice that the decline of the flocks has mostly been in the older and more thickly settled States, showing that from the nature of the animal the sheep which required a large extent of pasturage had to give way before the pressing necessities of man, and therefore the decline was found to be the greatest in the older and more thickly settled States of the Union.

In the New England States in 1840 there were 3,820,307 head of In the New England States in 1840 there were 3,820,307 head of sheep; in 1850 there were 2,257,583; in 1860 there were 1,779,732; in 1870 there were 1,450,155; in 1880,1,362,234, a gradual decline in the number of sheep in New England. Did the tariff have anything to do with that? From 1850 to 1860 the duty was very low, about 24 per cent., and from 1857 to 1860, I believe, all wool below the value of 20 cents was admitted free, and yet the decline was no greater in that decade than it was in the next one, when the duty was raised to 10 and 12 cents a pound and 12 cents a pound.

How was it in New York and the Middle States, as they are called?

In 1840 there were 7,403,557 sheep; in 1850, 5,641,641; in 1860, 4,559,000; in 1870, 4,248,000; and in 1880, 3,801,000, or a slight increase for the first time in the history of any of these older settled States.

But that increase made the total number just about half what it was in 1840.

In the Southern States in 1840 the number was 4,521,000; in 1850, In the Southern States in 1840 the number was 4,521,000; in 1850, 5,667,000; in 1860, 5,938,000; in 1870, 5,188,000; in 1880, 7,439 000. That included the great and then thinly settled State of Texas and other Southwestern States where the presence of man had not yet driven out the cultivation of sheep and restricted their pasturage, and there we see an increase from 1840 to 1880 of nearly 100 per cent.

In the Western States in 1840 there were 3,562,000 head; in 1850, 7,743,000 head; in 1860, 8,141,000 head; in 1870, 13,757,000 head; in 1880 14 146 000 head; showing a gradual increase in that country where 1880, 14,146,000 head; showing a gradual increase in that country where there was room and pasturage for them, just as there was a gradual decrease in the countries where their pasturage was restricted. Now, can any man pretend to say that the tariff had anything to do with So I might go on through the whole list, including the Territories, where, of course, the increase has been very great.

I think that sufficiently establishes the fact that natural causes influence the number, the increase, or the decrease of the farmers' flocks, and not the tariff duties on wool. Why, Mr. President, the same variations and fluctuations in the number exist in regard to the other animals, particularly swine. The fluctuations in the number of swine during the period which I have read are just as great, or much greater, than they are in those of sheep, showing, as a matter of course, that no tariff could have had anything to do with their increase or decrease.

Now, let us see whether the tendencies of tariff reduction are to a destruction of the sheep industry or not. Let us see what effect the low tariff which existed from 1846 to 1850 had upon the sheep itself, its carcass, its value, and its wool. I have taken what I shall read from the reports of the Bureau of Statistics, giving the export prices of various articles of commerce at various periods of our country's history.

I find that the export price of sheep from 1846 to 1859 in New York was $4.39\frac{7}{2}$ per sheep, and the export price of wool for the same period at the same place was 28.7 cents per pound, whilst the export price of sheep from 1860 to 1885 was only $3.03\frac{1}{2}$ per head, and the export price of wool during the same period averaged only 32 cents, a slight increase in the export price of the wool itself, but a very large decrease in the export price of the value of the sheep. I find the highest price paid for sheep was in 1866, when they reached the price of $7 per head, whilst the highest price paid for wool was in 1850, during the free-trade period so called, which was 62 cents per pound.

I find from the same authority that the average prices of wool from 1825 to 1880 at different periods were as follows: From 1825 to 1836 it was 29.18 cents; from 1837 to 1842 it was 30.8 cents; from 1843 to 1847 it was 25.4 cents; from 1848 to 1861 it was 33.3 cents; from 1862 to 1867 it was 25.4 cents; from 1848 to 1861 it was 33.3 cents; from 1862 to 1867 it was 33 cents; and from 1868 to 1880 it was 26.8 cents. So the highest average price of wool was during the period from 1848 to 1861 under the so-called free trade.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina in moving that wool be placed upon the free-list to do so to increase the price?

Mr. VANCE. What is that?

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand that the purpose of the Senator A careful examination of the tariff duties which have been imposed upon wool from the organization of the Government to the present time, increase the price of wool?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; that is not my idea.
Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator was now reasoning that such had been the result heretofore.

Mr. VANCE. I was reading these authorities to rebut the false idea which gentlemen on that side are constantly instilling into the minds of the country, that the reduction or the removal of the duty on wool would destroy the wool-growing industry of this country. That is my object, and I read these prices for that purpose.

In 1872, I believe it was, the duty on hides was repealed, and it was supposed that that would affect the cattle-growing industry in this country. The duty on hides bears a great deal of similarity to the duty country. The duty on hides bears a great deal of similarity to the duty on wool. The clip of the wool from the sheep is an incident of the sheep-growing business, and the taking of the hide from the slaughtered animal is an incident of the cattle-growing industry, and the value per hide is much greater than the value per clip of wool. The average per hide is estimated by the Bureau of Statistics at $5 for every slaughtered beef, and the total value of the hides of cattle slaughtered in this country is estimated by the same bureau to amount to about $43,000,000, whereas the wool clip amounts to about $70,000,000. It would be reasonable to suppose that if either the repeal or reduction of the duty on wool would destroy or affect injuriously in any way the sheep-growing industry, a parallel might be found to the cattlegrowing interest of this country by the reduction of the duty upon foreign hides; and yet we find that the duty on foreign hides was scarcely felt when it was removed. So great became the competition, so wonderful an impetus was given to the leather trade and the tanning industries of this country that the competition of the home marning industries-of this country that the competition of the home market became so great that the repeal of the duty was hardly noticed, and in a short time the price of hides in New York became higher than it was when the duty was in existence. The gold price of hides in New York from 1860 to 1872, the date when the duty was repealed, was 18.6 cents per pound, and the gold price in New York from 1872 to 1885, after the duty was repealed, was 22.1 cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. Now the Senator is arguing that the imposition of a duty reduces the price, is he? I understand the Senator to be now arguing that the imposition of a duty reduces the price of a service.

arguing that the imposition of a duty reduces the price of an article.

Mr. VANCE. Sometimes it does, and I think it will in the case of wool. In the case of hides the facts are that the price in New York became higher in a very short time than the price was before the repeal of the duty, by reason of the increased home demand. So of wool. A full supply of the kind of foreign wools desired would greatly increase the demand for those produced at home.

Mr. DAWES. I am interested in this wool discussion. Did I understand the Senator to say that he thought the putting of the duty on wool would advance the price of it?

Mr. VANCE. Or decrease the price of wool?

Mr. DAWES.

Mr. VANCE. I certainly think it will not decrease it to any injurious extent. That is what I was trying to show. You are of opinion that the removal of the duty would drive our sheep out of the country.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator in likening it to the duty on hides to answer the Senator from Iowa that the imposition of the duty would decrease the price of the wool.

Mr. VANCE. Would decrease it?

Mr. VANCE.

Yes.
The imposition of the duty at present, I say, does not Mr. DAWES. Mr. VANCE. inure to the benefit of the wool-growing industry so much as to the destruction of the consumers of woolen goods, for the reason I have given and which I cited in the testimony of Mr. Sampson and the memorialists of Secretary Manning.

Mr. DAWES. Did the Senator mean to say or does he now mean to say that the duty on wool has the effect to increase or decrease the price of it?

Mr. VANCE. In my opinion the repeal of the duty on wool would inure as the repeal of the duty on hides did, to the benefit of the producers of hides and the consumers of leather goods.

Mr. DAWES. I was asking as to the effect of the present duty upon the cost of wool. Has it the effect to increase or decrease it?

Mr. VANCE. The present duty on the cost of wool, as I endeavored to explain when I opened my remarks, made the consumers of this country pay 8½ cents per pound more than the present price.

Mr. DAWES. The question was—

Mr. VANCE. And therefore the manufacturers of wool in this country could not compute with the English German or French manufacturers.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator's pardon, but I have not been able to make him understand my interrogatory. My interrogatory was whether the present duty has had the effect to increase or decrease the whether the present duty has had the elect to increase or decrease the price of the American consumption?

Mr. VANCE. I think, if it was possible to explain it to the Senator, that it has had to some extent both effects. It has prevented the development of the woolen manufacture in this country, which would increase the price of wool, and yet because it kept out cheap wools from this country to that extent it increased the price of the domestic article.

Mr. DAWES. It would be an interesting process to convince me that it had the effect both to increase it and decrease it. Ishould like to have the Senator try that experiment on somebody else more intel-

Mr. VANCE. If I can find a sane man who really believes that a tax imposed upon anything cheapens the price, then I will undertake the Senator and receive him as a catechumen. Perhaps I can make myself a little clearer as I go along, if the Senator from Massachusetts will give me his attention. As I have shown that the repeal of the duty upon hides did not decrease the price of hides, but that the impetus which it gave to the home demand maintained the price fully, I wish also to show what effect it had upon the balance of the beef after the hide was taken off.

Of course I have no means of getting at the prices of fresh beef from year to year in New York, but mess-beef, put up in barrels for exportation or for commerce, was sold in 1872 in New York at \$8.75 $\frac{8}{10}$  per barrel, and in 1885 it was \$11.06 $\frac{2}{10}$  per barrel, showing that the repeal of the duty upon hides had not tended to destroy but rather to encourage the cattle-growing industry of this country. In 1873 leather was worth in New York 25.2 cents per pound. In 1885, after the repeal of the duty upon hides, leather was worth 19.8 cents per pound. Perhaps the Senator may get a little light into the idea that I have in connections. tion with these wool duties.

Mr. DAWES. I can not see yet how it affects it both ways at one and the same time.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will listen one moment, I think-Mr. DAWES. I do not see how he can bring it up and down at the same time without leaving it about where it wa

Mr. VANCE. I thought the Senators on the other side were well ccustomed to that in this bill.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VANCE. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator has been alluding to the price of hides and the effect of the duty, and the removal thereof. Has he collated the price of hides for a number of years before and after that change in the tariff? I desire to assure him that I have examined it with great care, and it is a fact, as I understand, that the price of hides for five years after the duties were removed was higher than it was the five years before.

Mr. VANCE. Is not that what I have been showing to the Senate? Mr. CHACE. Then the Senator has been showing also that the duty upon wool makes the wool lower for the farmer.

Mr. VANCE. That I am showing that to repeal the duty makes wool lower to the farmer.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know that I am required constitutionally to invest the Senator from Rhode Island with understanding. If that is my duty, I will give it up right now. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHACE. The Senator would have a work.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator would have a very great job, for he does not have enough understanding in this case to invest anybody with understanding. Mr. VANCE, That is very evident. I did not say that it would reduce the price of wool to the farmer.

That was the line of the Senator's argument undoubt-Mr. CHACE.

Mr. VANCE. I set out with the observation that the tariff had nothing to do with the decrease or increase of the flocks of sheep.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or the price of wool?

Mr. VANCE. Or the price of wool, for the simple reasonMr. CHACE. Now the Senator has conceded the point, a Now the Senator has conceded the point, and yet all these weeks he has been talking about what an onerous tax it was upon the consumer.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, it is an onerous tax, but the farmer does not get the benefit of it. The consumer of the woolen goods is the victim in this cas in this case.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator answer me one question? I want to know what he is going to do with all the speeches he has been making for the last fortnight, if it is true that the duty does not increase the price of the American article?

Mr. VANCE. When I am told that the duty does not increase the price of the American article, of course I am referring, whatever the Senator from Massachusetts may be referring to, to the sheep industry in this country. Does the Senator understand that which depends when causes other than the tariff? upon causes other than the tariff?

I was going on to show that leather was worth in 1873 25.2 cents per pound in New York. In 1885 it was 19.8 cents per pound. So whilst the price of hides increased, the price of leather decreased. In 1873 the price of shoes was $1.617 per pair. In 1885 the price was $1.214 per pair. What more desirable ends could political economy hope to establish than these?

Mr. ALDRICH. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a cuestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. VANCE. Oh, certainly; certainly.

I understand, then, by analogy the Senator thinks that taking off the duty upon wool will increase the price of wool for the farmer and decrease the price of woolen cloth?

Mr. VANCE. That is my position, sir, if I understand it; that if we unshackle the woolen manufacturers in this country and enable them to buy those wools in Europe which they absolutely need to admix with the wool of American growth, the impetus given to the woolen manufacturers in this country and to the growth and production of wool in this country will be the same as was given to the leather trade by the removal of the duty on hides. That is my posi-

Mr. ALDRICH. That the woolen manufacturer would be able to pay an increased price for wool and still sell his product at a lower

Mr. VANCE. The woolen manufacturer, then, would get the wool, whatever the price may be, as suggested by the law of supply and demand, which he can not now get in consequence of these specific duties. I ask what more desirable thing could political economy propose to this end than the increased price of the raw material, the decreased price of the manufactured article, and, at the same time, the maintenance of wages of those engaged in the manufacture?

During this period of low wool, of free-trade prices, from 1846 to 1860, the price of all other great products of this country was well kept up at the same time. Wheat had an average price in gold from 1846 to 1860 of $1.46<sub>18</sub> per bushel. From 1860 to 1885 there was an average price of $1.36 a bushel. Cotton had an average price in gold from 1846 to 1860 of 9.8 cents a pound, and from 1875 to 1885, 11.8 cents a pound, and pound 2 cents higher. Cotton was longer in recovering from the inflaabout 2 cents higher. Cotton was longer in recovering from the infla-tion of the war than any other article.

There can be no doubt in my mind that the repeal of the duty on raw wool will give such an impetus to all of our woolen manufactures that the price will be so well maintained that the farmers' flocks will not be decreased, whilst the price of woolen goods which clothe our people will be greatly reduced, and there will be additional labor given to all persons engaged or proposing to engage in the manufacture of woolen goods. In this opinion I am glad to know that I am sustained by the chairman of the subcommittee. In 1870, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], then a member of the House of Representatives, used the following language in the tariff discussion:

I will tell the gentleman how, in my own judgment, the wool-grower will be benefited. As the law now is the tariff upon fine wools of a character not produced in this country is 100 per cent, upon their cost. The tariff upon woolens of the same class is only about 50 per cent, so that the finer woolen goods are imported, and not the coarser fabrics. Before the tariff of 1867 our manufacturers of fine goods mixed foreign fine wools with our domestic product, and thus were able to compete successfully with the foreign manufacturer of similar articles.

But being prohibited from importing this class of wools, these fine goods can not now be produced in this country so cheaply as they can be imported. Consequently mills that were formerly engaged in producing those goods have been compelled to abandon business or manufacture the coarser fabries. If they could afford to manufacture those fine goods they would make a market, which we do not now have, for our fine wools to be mixed with other fine wools of a different character from abroad. This want of a market, as I understand, is the reason why our fine wools now command so low a price; there is no demand for them at home and we can not export them in competition with fine wools grown in other countries.

And so on

I do not think there can be any doubt in the world as to the truth of that proposition. The fact is, a reduction of the duties upon wool, or free wool, is so manifestly the policy of the manufacturers of this country, as well as of the people who have to consume their goods, that it is a wonder to me that any of them can hold out for these enormous duties.

The only explanation that I have been able to find for the absurdity, or the anomaly, to say the least of it, of the proposition is in the fact that they say the votes of the wool-growers are absolutely necessary to maintain the duties upon the woolen goods after they are manufactured. In other words, they are afraid to break the pool. Says Mr. Joseph Truitt, a witness who appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance:

Free raw material is the pioneer of free goods, for we can not expect that the wool-grower will consent to a policy of protection which embraces everything he buys and excludes every article which he produces and wants to sell.

That is precisely the condition which the farmers of this country have been in ever since the inauguration of protective-tariff duties in our country. They have to submit to a duty upon everything which they have to buy, whilst they have no duties upon anything which they have to sell.

Mr. President, no nation of any commercial importance in the world so far as I have been able to ascertain, taxes raw wool. England, of course, has raw wool free. France, by her general tariff; Belgium, Germany, Austria, Italy, all have free wool for the use of their manufacturers. The nations of Europe which have a small duty upon wool are urers. The nations of Europe which have a small duty upon wool are Russia, Spain, Roumania, and one or two other insignificant commercial countries of Europe; and I must not forget to mention that the country whose policy Senators on that side so much admire, and of which they are endeavoring to secure the imitation of the American people, China, imposes a heavy duty upon raw wool.

There was once a Senator from Massachusetts who could perhaps have appreciated the position that I have assumed this morning better than his successor seems to have been able to do. His name was Wilson, and he was once Vice-President of the United States. In 1857 in giving his vote for a tariff which put all wools worth less than 20 cents a pound upon the free-list, and which imposed a duty of only 24 or 30 per cent. upon the remainder, he used the following language:

The manufacturers, Mr. President, make no war upon the wool-growers, They assume that the reduction of the duty on wool, or repeal of the duty altogether, will infuse vigor into the drooping interest, stimulate home production, and diminish the importation of foreign woolen manufactures, and afford a steady and increasing demand for American wool. They believe this policy will be more beneficial to the wool-growers, to the agricultural interests, than the present policy. The manufacturers of woolen fabrics, many of them men of large experience and extensive knowledge, entertain these views, and they are sustained in these opinions by the experience of the great manufacturing nations of the Old World.

Since the reductions of duties on raw materials in England, since wool was of the Old World.

Since the reductions of duties on raw materials in England, since wool was admitted free, her woolen manufactures have so increased, so prospered, that the production of native wool increased more than 100 per cent. The experience of England, France, and Belgium demonstrates the wisdom of that policy which makes the raw material duty free. Let us profit by their example. If our manufactures are to increase to keep pace with the population and the growing wants of the people; if we are to have the control of the markets of our own country; if we are to meet with and compete with the manufacturers of England and other nations of Western Europe in the markets of the world, we must have our raw materials admitted duty free or at a mere nominal rate. We of New England believe that wool, especially the cheap wools, manilla, hemp, flax, raw silk, lead, in,brass, hides, linseed, and many other articles used in our manufactories can be admitted duty free, or for a mere nominal duty, without injuring to any extent any considerable interest of the country.

When I listen to these words and then listen to the words of those gentlemen who have succeeded Mr. Wilson, I say to myself, "How are the mighty fallen!" No better argument can be given this day by any man who is denominated a free-trader than there was given by the former Senator from Massachusetts, the late Vice-President of the United States.

This bill at the very outset demonstrates the shrewdness of the intellects which framed it. On wools of the first class worth only 30 cents a pound, they raise the duty from 10 to 11 cents, while on the wools worth over 30 cents a pound they reduce it from 11 to 10. Now, let us see what they make by that. They increase the wool worth less than 30 cents per pound, of which class there were imported last year 22,607,000 pounds. They reduce on the next class, worth over 30 cents per pound, from 12 to 11 cents, of which only 17,586 pounds were imported. By this they give up $276 and receive $226,000. Is not that a pretty shrewd Yankee trade?

On wool valued at less than 30 cents a pound they increase the duty from 20 cents to 22 cents per pound, whilst on the washed wool, worth over 30 cents per pound, they reduce the duty from 24 to 22 cents per pound; but whereas of the former, on which they increase the duty, there were 383,275 pounds imported, of the latter, on which they reduce, there were only 2,000 pounds imported. They can make a very good trade indeed by giving $40 in exchange for $7,665. That is the way the schedule runs. They reduce where the reduction amounts to nothing. They increase where it amounts to a great deal.

The House hill, for which this Senate conception is a substitute, pro-

The House bill, for which this Senate conception is a substitute, proposes to reduce this enormous weight of taxation that presses upon the American people for their woolen clothing to the extent of $18,677,844, to say nothing of the very great reduction that must follow upon the manufactured articles of a domestic character in this country by reason of the enhanced price. The Senate substitute proposes to increase this entire schedule—I have not the time to follow it item by item—$4,-748,636, to say nothing of the great rate of increase which must necessarily follow as the enhanced price of the domestic article.

Now, when are these infants to attain maturity? When will these infant industries for which the people of America are taxed be able to stand alone? When will they escape the cutting of teeth and cholera infantum and all other ailments to which childhood is incident, and be able to stand unprotected? When in the history of this Government has one of them ever yet said it had enough? The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] told us the other day that they were all infants and that the whole nation was an infant.

That declaration, I suppose, was preliminary to the proposition to continue this tax indefinitely for the future. Never as yet has one said that it had enough. I had supposed from the fostering which the manufacturers and their friends gave to them that there were some articles at least that were able to stand alone. We were told in regard to American saws that they were sold in the streets of London under the noses of the greatest English manufacturers of that article, yet the duty was increased but the other day by the Senator from Iowa upon

We were told that American carpets are made cheaper and better than any other people in the world make them, and that we are able to undersell and compete with every other people in the world. the other day a higher duty was put upon carpets. The same thing was done with leather goods. I thought it had been conceded on all hands that we could equal the world in the production of leather goods. But the leather infant had not a leather medal voted to him, but an increase of duties in solid cash.

So it goes, Mr. President, and if I had the time and if the Senate had the time (but unfortunately this debate is limited and I will have to hurry through), I think I could be able to show, schedule by schedule, that in every item most iniquitous and outrageous increases have been made upon articles which are the common use of the poor of this country. And to show that these things are not the vaporings of rebel brigadiers, I wish to read once more from the same debate in 1870 in the House of Representatives and call attention to the words of the Senator from Iowa on wool and woolen goods. He said:

Let me call attention, in the next place, to wool and woolen goods. And I will say with regard to the duty on wool and woolens that I regard it not as an intentional fraud, but as operating as though it were a fraud upon the great body of the people of the United States. I allude to the woolen tariff, so called, of 1867, a law by which the average duty on woolen goods is certainly not less than 60 per cent. of the value we import; a law the effect of which has been to materially injure the sheep husbandry of this country.

If that law which the Senator from Iowa so eloquently and so properly denounced then was a fraud, or in the nature of an unintentional fraud, what would he, if I could put him upon his voir dire, style this bill which came from his own hands, where the duties are increased the most outrageous manner, especially on those things which bear upon the poor?

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from North Carolina say that the rates in this bill are increased above the act of 1867?

Mr. VANCE. Many things are

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator point me to one item.

Mr. ALLISON. Not one single item.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are largely below the rates which were imposed by the act of 1867.

Mr. VANCE. Then if they have not been increased beyond the law of 1867 (and I have not time to examine it now), I join with the Senator in denouncing it as an unintentional fraud at least

The paragraph of this bill which provides for the duty on woolen cloths, paragraph 354, says:

354. Woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 35 cents per pound and 40 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 60 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

I have some samples of woolen cloth here, classified according to this section. Here is an article of woolen cloth [exhibiting] manufactured in England, 50 inches wide, 18 ounces, which is sold in England at 32 cents, with a discount of 2.8 cents off, making 29.92 cents, the duty on which is 49.84 cents per yard.

There is about 150 per cent. duty on that sample. So it runs through about a dozen samples of various kinds of cloth, some of woolen, some of shoddy, some partly wool and some partly cotton, all, however, fairlooking and heavy cloth; and the duties are increased upon the article as the value is decreased, and the duty is decreased upon the article as the value is increased. If there was anything in the act of 1867 worse than 150 per cent. on this cheap cloth for the use of the poor, then surely the Senator from Iowa was right, and it was a fraud

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from North Carolina understand that the Senate substitute increases the rates of duty upon that class of goods above the existing law?

Mr. VANCE. That is the question I was talking about, so far as I understand it. I say that the specific duty has the effect to make these duties heaviest upon the goods used by the poor—the cheap goods, in other words.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that the provisions of the bill do not change the existing law in that regard.

Mr. VANCE. The bill changes it by classification, as I have undertaken to show

Mr. ALDRICH. Not on the class the Senator is now alluding to; the bill does not change the existing law at all.

Mr. VANCE. It changes it in various places in the classification, and

Mr. VANCE. It changes it is for the worse.

Mr. ALDRICH. The rate of duty upon the lower class of goods to which the Senator is now alluding and of which he has exhibited samples remains unchanged in the bill, I repeat.

Mr. VANCE. We propose to change it, if we possibly can, and have these duties reduced. I will accept the challenge of the Senator, though. I hope before the wool schedule is disposed of to be able to satisfy the Senator that he is mistaken; that in every instance where there has been a change of classification it has worked a change in the ad valorem rate of duty, and consequently to the disadvantage of those who use the cheaper class of goods. There is every provision made in this free-list, and, in fact, throughout the whole schedule, for the convenience of the rich.

It is carefully provided everywhere that their interest shall not suffer by overtaxation, but the common people of this country who have to be clothed, and who have to do that by the sweat of their own brows, have no favor in this bill. It is the worst, so far as I have been able to determine, that has ever been proposed to the American Congress; and instead of decreasing the duty upon those articles in which the constituents of the Senators on that side are interested there is an increase every time, and whatever little decrease there is comes from something they are not interested in.

I find I am unable to continue any longer in the discussion of this wool question, and I will bring my remarks to a close, promising that during the course of the debate I will undertake to expose some of the sections and paragraphs of the bill which I think operate most hardly and deserve most reprobation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the discussions on this bill, some of which have been very entertaining and instructive. I now propose as briefly as I can to submit some general observations on it within the hour allotted for general debate.

In the first place, it strikes one who has read the Constitution of the United States as a little singular, at least, that we are now engaged in the consideration of a bill which did not originate in the House of Representatives as the Constitution requires, but which was from the first to the last word in it framed by a committee of the Senate. It is true it is called an amendment to the House bill. Possibly, technically speaking, it is an amendment, but it is that kind of an amendment which proposes to strike out, to destroy all that originated in the House of Representatives, and to substitute a new bill in its place.

I say possibly it might be considered technically as an amendment of the House bill, but when we consider the object and purpose of the insertion of that clause in the Constitution which declares that all bills to raise revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, it will be seen that we have but used the House bill as a mere jurisdictional fact. Without the passage by the House of Representatives of some bill on the subject of raising revenue no man would contend that the Senate had a right to consider any bill upon that subject. We therefore accept the action of the House, not as the basis, as the Constitution intended we should, of our action, and proceed to perfect that bill, to amend it, but we accept it simply as a jurisdictional fact which allows us to originate a bill according to our own notions, and to enact that bill into a law.

During the two weeks in which I have listened to the debate upon this bill I have heard no allusion made to the House bill except to contrast it with the bill now before the Senate. The Senate bill is the text or the body upon which we are acting. We are offering amendments to that, and voting for and against amendments to it, and we are not to that, and voting for and against amendments to it, and we are not proposing or voting upon amendments to the House bill as the Constitution requires. It is true when we get through with this interesting operation of amending our own work, when we have discussed and voted upon amendments to the Senate bill (and it is called a Senate bill in this debate), then we will in one act alone vote upon it with reference to the House bill. That act will be performed when the question comes up, will we substitute this new bill of the Senate for the House bill? That is the amendment which we propose to give to the House bill under the Constitution of the United States—to destroy it and create another in its stead. and create another in its stead.

I shall therefore in what I have to say speak of this Senate bill as the foundation of our action here, regarding simply the House bill as the jurisdictional fact which permits us to go on and consider the bill now before the Senate.

I do not propose to go into any lengthened or critical examination of the bill. There only remains a little over an hour of the time allotted by the Senate for general debate. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and probably other Senators desire to speak within that time, so I shall be as brief as I can.

There is only one aspect of this subject to which I shall have time to allude. We are now considering a bill originating in the Senate, a bill confessedly and avowedly highly, not to say enormously, protective. Numerous votes taken in the Senate show that no other sort of bill can receive the sanction of this body. So whatever may be my opinions, and they are very decided, upon the propriety or the impropriety of passing a protective tariff, I am confronted with the fact, which every Senator here knows is true, that we are considering alone a protective bill and can not under any circumstances proceed to a final vote favorably upon a bill for revenue.

Some complaints have been made that Southern Senators who are opposed to protection believe that in passing a protective bill the peculiar interests of their States should be taken care of. I am opposed to a protective tariff further than such incidental protection as may result from a fair adjustment of revenue duties. To that extent I favor it, and no further.

But when we proceed, as I have shown we are proceeding now, avowedly for the sole purpose of constructing a protective tariff, it is material to inquire what is the duty of Senators opposed to protection. Is it merely to vote and protest unavailingly against all protective features which benefit interests outside of the States in which they reside? These protective features have already been passed by the Senate, already have received the approbation of a majority of the Senate. We therefore know that they will on the final vote receive the approbation of the Senate, and so far as the Senate can make them will have the force and effect of law.

What, then, is the duty under such circumstances of a Senator who is opposed to protection? His first duty is to resist with all his power the passage of such a bill; but in the process of its construction, in the machinery through which it goes, in the amendments offered and voted upon during its passage, it seems to be his duty to make it fair, uniform, and equally protective to all parts of the Union and to all the interests of the people. Otherwise, sir, he would surrender to those who believe in the protective policy the sole benefit, if benefit there may be, arising from protection, and will fail to take the necessary and essential steps to compensate the neglected interests for the burdens unjustly imposed on them.

Mr. President, I believe a protective tariff to be unjust. I believe it to be unfair to the interests which not only are not protected, but which are made to bear the burden of the protection given to others. I believe it casts upon those interests which do not come within the protective features an unjust and onerous burden. Do we make it more unjust or less unjust when we make the protective features universal? In other words, are those of us who believe a protective tariff is unconstitutional and unjust in its operations upon those who are required to bear the burdens of the protection given, when we are acting in constructing a bill confessedly protective, to strive to make it uniform, just, and equal to all parties, or are we to surrender all the benefits of protection to one class of interests, and to submit without a struggle to all the burdens imposed upon other interests?

My answer to that question is this, that resisting a protective tariff, doing all we can to defeat it, yet when we are confessedly constructing one, and when every Senator here knows that we can construct no other, we should strive to make it fair, make it equal, make it just in all its parts with reference to all the interests which exist in this coun-Certainly, sir, it can not be more unconstitutional because it is equal and fair, for the Constitution itself declares that it was ordained to establish justice." It can not be more unjust, but must be more just when it is made equal and fair to all men and to all interests.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him, believing, as he does, that to levy or increase a tax not for revenue, but for purposes of protection, is unconstitutional and wrong, if he can justify participating in such wrong or in such violation of the Constitution? In other words, is he willing to accept a part of the stolen goods because others are receiving them?

Mr. GEORGE. That is putting it pretty strongly, Mr. President, calling them "stolen goods."

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly what I mean, and I want to put it strongly.

Mr. GEORGE. But, Mr. President, to answer the Senator from Tennessee is easy. I oppose protection as unwarranted by the Constitution, as unjust to the interests which must bear the burden of protection, as unjust to the interests which must bear the burden of protection, and as giving to the favored interests an undue and unjust preference; I oppose it with all my power; and yet when I see, when I am certain it will be adopted, I strive to make it less unjust, less unequal, and therefore less unconstitutional, by extending the benefits to those who are compelled to bear the burdens.

I hope that is an answer to the Senator from Tennessee. If protection be robbery, as denominated by the Senator, and I will not dispute that proposition, is it right, is it just that the robbed person shall not by the same color of law be enabled to recoup, to get back some of that which has been unjustly taken from him? So if I had my way, if my voice could prevail in constructing this Senate bill, manifestly unjust, confessedly for the protection of a portion of the interests, a part only of the industries of the people of the United States at the expense of another portion, I would make it protective all around. Where we can not have a protective duty I would make it a protective bounty.

Mr. President, agriculture is made to bear the burdens of this protective system. It is only in a very few instances, it is only here and there that protection can be given by tariff duties to the agricultural interests of the country. The cotton-producers of the South, the wheat-growers of the West, the meat-producers of the West, are compelled to pay the enhanced prices made necessary by a protective tariff in order to increase the gains of manufacturers; and why, if that be so, should they not, carrying on their own business with all the competition which the world brings out against them, and having the additional burden put upon their shoulders, the unjust burden, I might say the iniquitous burden, of being compelled to contribute to swell the fortunes and the gains of the favored classes, be allowed to receive back what has been taken from them in order to make the law just and fair and equal? Why should not they receive also their share of the benefits of protection? I would vote to amend the Senate bill by giving a bounty of 1 or 2 cents a pound for every pound of cotton raised in the United States; not because I believe that the paying of a bounty to the producers of cotton is what we ought to do if taxation be otherwise fair and equal, but because it is certain that nothing but a protective system can receive the sanction of the Senate. The cotton-raisers are made to bear a large portion of the burdens of that system, and it is but right and fair that, being thus compelled to contribute to the prosperity and advancement of others, they should be allowed to receive as a compensa-tion for this burden their just share of this system which must inevit-

That, sir, is my doctrine, and whoever may dispute it may stand strictly as he may think up to principle, but whoever may advocate it will not abandon any principle.

I resist a protective tariff. I resist it because I believe it to be unjust, because I believe it to be unequal, because it takes from one man a part of his property and transfers it to another. I regard it to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States. But when you are going through with the process of imposing on the cotton-producers and the sugar-producers and the rice-producers and the wheat-growers and the pork-raisers of the country an unjust burden levied for the purpose of enriching a few favored industries, will it be less constitutional, will it be less equal, will it be less just, if in the same act by which you transfer from the pockets of agriculturists of this country a portion of their gains to favor a few, that at the same time you transfer from the favored few a part at least of the unjust gains thus acquired and replace it in the pockets of those who have been deprived of it? If

mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now, because I must get through in order to allow the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to speak.

I do not mean to say that a bill thus framed is right. I do not think we ought to pass a protective law taking from one man and giving it to another, and then taking it from the other and giving it back to the man whom you had previously robbed. I admit that is wrong, but I say it is more nearly right when you take from the farmer a portion of his hard earnings and transfer it to the manufacturer in order to make the manufacturer's gains larger; if also at the same time you transfer from the pockets of the manufacturer a portion, to use the language of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], of the stolen goods to the true owner. Can it be wrong to compel a wrong-doer to make restitution? Is it a violation of the principles of him who opposes robbery or theft to compel the robber or thief to restore the stolen goods to the true owner?

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I declined to yield to the Senator from New Hamp-shire [Mr. Blair] because I desired to make my remarks as brief as I could, in order that the Senator from Connecticut might speak within the hours limited for general debate.

Mr. PLUMB. I only wanted to ask a question which I thought perhaps would throw some light on the remarks the Senator has just made.

Mr. GEORGE. I will throw all the light on it that I can, and the Senator can throw on it his light at some other time. It would be unjust to the Senator from Connecticut if I allowed my time to be too far extended, as it will be if I submit to interruptions

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], Iunderstand, says he has no objection to the time coming out of his

Mr. HAWLEY. I have none, but 5 o'clock is the limit, and there are two or three after me who want to speak.

Mr. GEORGE. So it is that I want to be just and fair about the I declined to be interrupted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

I will waive my rights in the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two or three more who wish to speak.
Mr. PLUMB. I only wanted to ask the Senator at that particular point in his remarks, in case some one should pick his pocket he would consider himself justified in picking that man's pocket or some other man's pocket in order to recoup himself?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; but I will tell you what I would consider just. A law that authorized the Senator from Kansas to pick my pocket would be more just and more equal if I were allowed at the same time to pick the plunder back out of his pocket.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator vote for a law that Will the Senator vote for a law that would authorize him to pick somebody else's pocket on the ground that somebody had picked his own?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; but whenever you introduce a law here authorizing the Senator from Kansas or any one else to pick my pocket, I will vote as an amendment to that law that I be authorized to pick his in return, and when the bill comes to its final passage I will vote against it entirely.

Mr. BLAIR. How does the Senator justify the pocket-picking to the extent of the revenue?

Mr. GEORGE. I hope Senators understand me. I want you to understand that if you amend this bill so as to make it protective all around, on its final passage I shall then vote against it. I would frame it so it would be equal, so that if you pass any bill for protection it should not be partial and one-sided; but I would leave to you the responsibility of enacting it. And so with the law suggested by the Senator from Kansas. Whilst I would vote to make the law equal in the process of making it, when it came to be enacted I would vote against But if we are going to have the law for the Senator from Kansas, if you are determined to pass a law authorizing the Senator from Kansas to pick my pocket, I insist that you make it more just, more fair, more equal, by putting in the same law when you enact it that I shall pick his in return. I hope I am understood on that subject now.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] says I become a robber with the other man. No; but I shall stop his robbery by putting it in the law that he shall not make anything by it. I would destroy the protective system by making the benefits and burdens under it exactly equal. When that is done the system is destroyed. For it is of the essence of the system that there should be some—the great mass of the peoplewho are to be plucked by it, and the plunder thus gained bestowed on others. Destroy all opportunity for this and you destroy the system itself. And that brings me to the very essential point in this debate. Senators say, Mr. President, there will be no use of having a protective law of that sort. If you tax the cotton-farmer of Mississippi, the wheat-farmer of the West, the sugar-planter of Louisiana, in order to enrich a manufacturer, and then you tax the manufacturer in order to return to the wheat-farmer and to the cotton-planter that which was abstracted from them, there would be no use in passing the law at all, and I admit there would be none. Each would lose exactly this, the commissions, the cost, the expenses of taking the money out of the pocket of one tax-payer and putting it into the pocket of another taxpayer, and then taking it from the pocket of the tax-payer who received it and transferring it back to the other, and that is the point which is the reductio ad absurdum to which I wish to bring this argument.

How can you justly give to a man engaged in one sort of business a part of the gains of another, when the occupation of the last-named man will be made less gainful by the amount of the sum so abstracted? When you do that, what is the objection in justness and in fairness to taxing the beneficiary, the recipient, as my friend from Tennessee would -I do not say it-of these stolen goods, to make him restore them

So, Mr. President, when the Senators from Louisiana and the Senator from South Carolina were pressed about being in favor of protection for sugar and for rice, I thought without inconsistency they might have said, "You impose these unjust burdens upon us; you make our occupations less gainful, in fact, profitless, by the burdens you impose upon us, and we therefore ask that the damage to our business be recouped, by compelling those who have unjustly taken our money to restore it."

Mississippi its abspace health.

Mississippi, it so happens, has little interest that can be benefited by a protective tariff—very little. She has some factories, cotton and woolen, but they make that class of goods which are exported from the United States. So all the protective tariffs you may make in the world can never benefit the people of Mississippi. How, then, can you protect her? I know you will not impose a tax upon the property-holders of the country, upon the manufacturers, the railroad-men, and all that blessed sort of men, for the purpose of paying to the farmers of Mississippia cent or two cents a pound bounty on cotton. How, then, can you benefit Mississippi? I will tell you, and this kind of protection I claim here in behalf of the people of Mississippi.

M. Persident there are several ways of protecting industries under

Mr. President, there are several ways of protecting industries under the tariff. You may protect by putting a tax upon an article which the industries produce—that is protection—or you may protect a manufacturer by discriminating in his favor, by letting in free the articles which are the manufacturer's raw material, as in the case of wool; that is also strictly protection. If wool is admitted free of duty, it is protection in favor of the manufacturer. So in the adjustment of the tariff you may give an incidental protection to an industry when you do not tax the necessary instruments of carrying on that industry

The farmer could be benefited, could receive a little of the benefit of this system, if you would take off the tax on agricultural implements. But no, you will not do that. You make the farmers pay upon all they use either in the production or cultivation of their crops or in preparing them for market, or in supporting comfortably themselves and their families. But there is a protection which I ask the Senate to give to the people of Mississippi, to give to the people of the South. I heard the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], the other day, speak in glowing and in eloquent terms of the great future of the South if we would go into manufacturing. You all heard the very eloquent and able reply of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke] upon that subject, in which he told the Senate how rapidly we were progressing in that direction.

Now, when you lay all these great burdens on us to assist your manufactures, will you not help us to build up ours? You say that manufactures ought to be encouraged so that they will grow up all over the country. As I have shown you, it is not a benefit to us to impose a protective duty upon the articles we now manufacture in the South. But there are modes in which you can help to build up manufactures in the South, and one of those is an amendment which I intend to offer at the proper time, to be inserted on page 186, after line 2470, in the free-list:

All machinery for the manufacture of cotton or of cotton and woolen fabrics, or for the manufacture of bagging for the covering of baled cotton.

If you are in earnest, if you desire to build up manufacturing in the South, why tax us exorbitantly for the machinery which we desire to purchase and employ in the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods? Some Senator, I forget whom now, has painted here with some eloquence and force the many advantages the South had if she would go into the manufacturing of cotton and woolen goods. I admit that. I admit that if the South had a fair chance under this protective system she would manufacture in some shape or other a large portion of her crop, thereby increasing its value enormously both in the domestic and in the foreign markets

I made this proposition in 1883, and I was almost laughed out of court by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I believe the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], with the suggestion that foreign cotton-machinery was of no account; it was clumsy, it was not as good as our machinery; but yet, notwithstanding that, in less than five days afterwards a proposition was made by, I believe, the Senator from Rhode Island to raise the tariff upon a particular species of manufactures upon the ground that the machinery to manufacture that particular article of goods had to be imported and pay a duty.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator, I think, errs in attributing to me any remark upon the subject. I do not remember having made one.

Mr. GEORGE. I may, but my recollection is that such remarks were made by the Senator from Massachusetts and by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I said anything on that subject. If I said anything, I should have asked the Senator why he did not manufacture his cotton-machinery himself.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that question was put to me by the Senator from Rhode Island, and I made the answer then that I give now: First, we have not the capital nor the skilled labor to manufacture machinery. We are to a large extent in an embryo state, so far as manufactures are concerned. We have really and truly, as to cotton manufactures, infant industries, and so with reference to this, and it would be just as reasonable to ask me the question why we did not manufacture this machinery in the South as it would be for me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Rhode Island, "Why do not you grow your cotton and your sugar in Massachusetts and Rhode Island?"

So, now, Mr. President, I appeal to Senators. They know our condition; that was depicted the other day by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke]—the devastation of war, the destruction of all the capital which had been accumulated in our section for one hundred years all gone; and now, in the struggle for resuscitation, when we want to establish factories with our limited means we find a bar in the shape of a high protective duty upon manufacturing machinery. I ask Senators if that is right. In raising cotton we submit to all the taxation you impose upon us. We receive nothing in return. We want to manufacture. We are destitute to a large extent of capital necessary to compete with New England, and we ask that we may be allowed to introduce into our own section the instruments by which we may go into the manufacturing business

But if you will not do that, then I will ask you to take just one little step to aid us, and that is the amendment which I will offer if the other is voted down, as I suppose it will be, putting on the free-list "all machinery for the spinning of cotton into yarn." If that shall pass it will be easy without a very large amount of capital that a large proportion of the cotton crop of the South shall be spun into yarn for export as well as for sale to the Northern manufacturers.

I understand that in England one mill spins cotton and another mill weaves it into a cloth. I understand in this country probably the spinning and the weaving are all done in the same factory. In the South, under the new order of things, nearly every cotton gin is run by steampower. If we could get the spinning-machine it could be easily attached to the power used in ginning the cotton and the cotton converted into yarn. Now, when we ask that, what is the answer we receive? When the value of our cotton crop could be doubled, when labor could be found for many women and children who are unfitted for labor in the cotton-fields under a Southern sun, what will be the answer to that? It will be, I fear, "If we allow that, some man in the North or somewhere else who makes cotton-spinning machinery will not make the profit that he otherwise would."

Now, Mr. President, I submit it to Senators if in equating the benefits and the burdens of the protective tariff they will not make that concession to those who would, if they had the means, engage to some extent in manufacturing and thereby build up an infant industry or help to build up an industry which would double the value of our exports of cotton. This would be some compensation for the burdens imposed on us

I yield the floor to the Senator from Connecticut. Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish we had agreed upon an equal division of the time or had made some better arrangement. I find no fault with our respected friends on the Democratic side who have taken two hours and a half of the three.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I think in view of the fact that the whole time allotted was taken up by two Senators on the other side, it would be a wise thing to extend the time for a recess until We have agreed to take a recess from 5 to 8. I suggest that we take a recess from 6 to 8. That will give us ample time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the order for a recess from 5 until 8 this evening may be modified and stand as an order for a recess from 6 o'clock this evening until 8 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. With the understanding that there be no vote taken between 5 and 6 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, but to-night we will vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the intention is to limit debate to ten-minute discussion after 5 o'clock? Is that extended to 6?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. General debate until 6 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. At 6 o'clock the Senate will take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening. Mr. CULLOM. And no vote will be taken before that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No vote will be taken before that Mr. HAWLEY withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CHACE. I understand that my friend, the Senator from Vermont, wishes to offer a few remarks. I trust he will be allowed to do so.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, let me say that I have an engagement at my house at 6 o'clock, and I did intend to occupy fifteen or twenty minutes, not having occupied much time in the debate hereto-fore. I therefore ask that I may have the privilege to-morrow morning of occupying fifteen or twenty minutes in some general remarks on the bill. I ask manimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning he may be permitted to address the Senate upon the pending question for twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. Not more than twenty minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not to exceed twenty minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] alluded again to-day to the report of Consul Schoenhof, nominally consul at Tunstall, England, in regard to textile manufactures. The other day he used the following language:

I know him to be a man of high character and very considerable ability in the investigation of financial and commercial questions, and I have every rea-son to believe that what he has stated in his official report can not be success-fully contradicted, and that if it could be successfully contradicted it would have

Now, he alludes again to-day to this report in regard to worsted manufactures. We can not so well criticise his report in regard to woolen and worsted manufacture as in regard to the cotton, because, happily for us, in his report on the cotton manufacture he has given us absolute figures and quoted authorities. Therefore I propose to analyze his report on the cotton manufacture for a few moments; and inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina stands forward as his sponsor I desire, by way of premise, to ask him a few questions, as I want to be enlightened a little. I find in looking over this report, on page 242, that Mr. Schoenhof says:

The spinning prices for No. 33 is 75 cents, for No. 37, 84 cents per pound, and for No. 39, 93 cents.

The Senator having quoted those prices, I should be very much obliged if he would explain to us what that means. What is it? What does he mean by that? Does he mean that that is the spinning price in England?

Mr. VANCE. The Senator has my remarks before him. I have not them present, nor have I the report to which he is alluding.

Mr. CHACE. It is the report in No. 93, Consular Reports, page 242.
Mr. VANCE. I will say that I have not that report present nor my remarks that I made the other day on the question.

Mr. CHACE. I have read to the Senate what the consul says. He

The spinning prices for No. 33 is 75 cents, for No. 37, 84 cents per pound, and for No. 39, 93 cents.

What does he mean by it? What is it?

Mr. VANCE. Without having the remarks present before me I can not understand the Senator's question. Certainly it is not a pound— 84 cents a pound for spinning. I think it can not be that.

Mr. CHACE. Here it is in cold print.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will proceed with his rem

If the Senator will proceed with his remarks I will hunt up my speech and see what I did say.

Mr. CHACE. This is a report that was used very lavishly on the stump during the last campaign to convict "these robbers" under the protective tariff. The Senator from North Carolina quoted this matter in his speech.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator read from my remarks or from Schoen-hof's report?

Mr. CHACE. I am now reading from Schoenhof's report. I quote from Schoenhof and quote from the Senator's speech also. He will find He will find in the RECORD on page 527 what I read from his speech.

As the time is very short and we are going to take a recess at 6 o'clock, and I perceive it is occupying a good deal of the time of the Senator from North Carolina, I think I will proceed to analyze this report myself.

The amount of it is that that statement is nothing short of a pure absurdity. There never was in the last twenty-five years anywhere on the face of this earth where it would cost that sum of money to spin a pound of No. 33, No. 37, or No. 39 yarns.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if I made any such statement? I can not find it in my remarks if I did.

statements of the consul in the language which I have read, and said they could not be successfully contradicted, and he vouched for him.

Mr. VANCE. I indorsed the general character of that gentleman

mr. VANCE. I must about matters on which he was treating.
Mr. CHACE. The Senator says this "official report can not be successfully contradicted" or, if it could have been done, "it would have been done long ago."
Mr. VANCE. I think I said all the matters which I set forth. If there is anything in the report that I did not read I do not remember anything about it and am not prepared to speak of it, but I would take his general statement of fact as quick as that of any man.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator from North Carolina informed the Senato to-day that it was impossible for him to make the Senator from Rhode Island understand anything in regard to this matter, and I venture the opinion that that was a most excellent reason, because he did not know anything about it himself, and it is very evident he does not know anything about this case. A more utter absurdity never was put in cold print than appears here in this report from the State Department in regard to the cost of spinning yarn. Why, Mr. President, you can buy the yarns all spun for half those figures anywhere. In Great Britain you can buy them for a good deal less than half.

Mr. VANCE. Perhaps the Senator has come agrees a misprint.

Mr. VANCE. Perhaps the Senator has come across a misprint. Perhaps he has mistaken a decimal mark for a comma.

I invite the Senator to come over here and look at it. That is what I was talking about. The Senator has Mr. CHACE. Mr. VANCE. the report before him and I have not, and the Senator has the statement all his own way. Mr. CHACE.

I suggest before the Senator attempts to vouch for auother report that he had better provide himself with one and examine it and see if there are any misprints in it.

Mr. VANCE. I have one on my table which I will bring up after the rece

Mr. CHACE. I hope the Senator will, and I hope he will explain to us what that means.

Mr. VANCE. On what page will it be found?
Mr. CHACE. On page 242, near the bottom of the page, and I recommend the Senator to pore with his midnight oil over it and see if he can illuminate it-the Senator from Wisconsin suggests his surplus energy. Here is No. 39 yarn, No. 40 is a little finer, and I hold in my hand the report of the market from the Oldham Chronicle, published in Oldham, England, a place within 15 miles of Burnley, where the mills are that this consul is making his report about. This quotes No. 40 yarn as selling at 8\frac{3}{4} to 8\frac{1}{8} pence. That is about 18 cents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was this consul appointed?

Mr. CHACE. Soon after this Administration came into power. By the way, I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this man is consul at Tunstall, but he seems to have had a sort of roving commission to go all over England and hunt up free-trade facts, and he has spread himself and been spread very largely by the State Department.

Mr. VANCE. It seems he has found something, also. The statement I made the Senator has not found it convenient to touch, relative to the price of the spinning of cotton in the two countries.

Mr. CHACE. I suggest to the Senator that he abide in patience a few minutes and perhaps I may reach that yet. But I want to ask the Senator another question now. I find on the top of the same page, or rather commencing at the bottom of the page before, in speaking of print cloths-the Senator talked about those the other day, and I do not know but I would better ask him a question about something he can answer. I will drop that and I will read from the Senator's own remarks. Here he publishes a letter in which the writer speaks about brown sheetings

Brown sheetings is mostly 4 yards wide and 3 yards to the pound.

Those are goods made down in North Carolina. I wish the Senator would tell me where those are woven. I should like to send somebody down there to look at them.

Mr. VANCE.

Brown sheetings 3 yards wide? This says "4 yards wide and 3 yards to the pound." Mr. CHACE.

Mr. VANCE.

Four quarters wide. It says "4 yards wide." Mr. CHACE.

Mr. VANCE. Four quarters of a yard wide. That is evidently a misprint—\frac{3}{2}, \frac{5}{2}, \text{and } \frac{3}{2} is the designation of the cloths. The Senator must remember that I do not own a factory and do not run one, and therefore am not acquainted with the minutiæ and technicalities of the

Mr. CHACE. Well, we will put that down as a misprint. I want to see now as to this Consul Schoenhof, whose report can not be contradicted. He is speaking about print cloths; he says 64 square—Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator designate that expression that he has just commented upon of mine?

Mr. CHACE. I beg pardon, I did not hear the Senator. Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator point out that expression that he

Mr. CHACE. On page 527 of the RECORD, in a letter, the Senator quoted from somebody down there who knows all about this business and has written him a letter which he has published. It is part of the Mr. CHACE. No, but the Senator from North Carolina indorsed the evidence brought in to show the dreadful operations of this robber fariff, and I thought I would like to have explained how they make sheetings

4 yards wide. Mr. VANCE. The explanation of that is, I suppose, that the writer alluded to cloth four-quarters of a yard wide.

Mr. CHACE. Four quarters of a yard wide!

Mr. VANCE. Four quarters in contradistinction to cloth of three uarters. If the Senator's comments are not any better than that, I think we might as well go to dinner, for we are wasting time.

Mr. CHACE. He says these goods are known as print cloths. are 64 by 64, that is so many threads to warp and filling. In Switzerland they are a little finer cotton. The width is 13 inches in America and England and 70 centimeters in Switzerland. What does that 13 inches mean?

Mr. VANCE. It means a foot and 1 inch. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHACE. I am glad to be advised. A foot and I inch! Well, Mr. President, that is about the gauge of the ordinary free-trade argument—just about a foot and 1 inch. [Laughter.] That is not quite as good as the four quarters—not quite. Nobody ever manufactured a 13-inch print cloth in my opinion in this world anywhere, certainly not in this country. If there is anything that is well known, if there is any article of trade and commerce that is well understood when you speak of it, what it is and what its characteristics are, it is print cloth, both in this country and abroad. Print cloths in this country are woven 28 inches wide and not 13 inches wide. He says further on:

We have therefore here a fair basis on which to proceed. Still,

Still, upon so simple an article, and with all the features of similarity, quite a number of disparities exist which make a comparison difficult and call for explanation.

That is the explanation I want the Senator from North Carolina to give me. I will proceed a little further, and there is some truth here, a little, not enough to save it, but there is a little truth in what he says here. He does admit that in the manufacture of print cloth in Great Britain they spin the yarn finer than the manufacturers in this country spin it, but he mistakes that somewhat.

Now, I wish to say for the information of the Senators that it is the fineness of the yarn in the manufacture of cotton goods that costs, and to illustrate it so that Senators may appreciate it, I have made a calculation of the length of a pound of yarn spun into different numbers. This matter of the numbering of yarn is purely arbitrary. It is not regulated by statute anywhere that I know of, but it has been a long-established custom to estimate yarns by their numbers. That is, they take a pound of cotton and spin it 840 yards long. That is called No. 1. That is a skein. It is spun into one skein and that will be No. 1. It is spun out to twice 840 yards, and ten times that, and so on. A skein of No. 1 yarn is about half a mile long; a skein of No. 30 would be spun out about 14 miles long; a skein of No. 40 would be about (not giving the exact figures) 19 miles long, and a skein of No. 100—and there is a great deal of 100 yarn made in this country—would be a pound of cotton spun out about 47 miles in length; and 532 pounds of it, which is only a little more than a bale of cotton, would reach around the earth.

That will give Senators a little appreciation of the additional cost to manufacture a pound of cotton into fine yarn over and above what it That will illustrate how unfair and dishonest is in the coarse yarns. and dishonorable this Schoenhof has been in comparing the English print cloth with the American print cloth when I tell you that the yarns in the English print cloth, the average number is about 42, making the goods lighter or more yards to the pound. This is all set out here, and he gives the figures. I will read them before I get through. The English spin the yarn finer and the goods are treated with China clay and starch, etc., and they sell them for honest cotton goods, as some free-trade arguments palmed off on the market.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And then sometimes marked "China."

Mr. CHACE. They do that in China. We are met with it all the time. They make these poor goods up with some cotton and some starch and China clay, send them to China and put on American stamps, and we suffer for that.

Now, I come to the statement of waste. Here is a most extraordinary statement. Bear in mind that this document was used on the stump last fall to prove what robbers we were. It gives an account of one mill; this is on page 243. He states that the waste was  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and then he says in another mill it was 8.18 per cent. Farther along he makes an entirely contradictory statement. He says:

A manufacturing merchant of Manchester, who controls a variety of mills, and who has made a profound study of the cotton industry, gives me the loss in waste for strict middling N. O. as 10 per cent., middling N. O. as 13 per cent., and low middling, 15 per cent.

Now, I wish the Senator from North Carolina would tell us which of

Now, I wish the Senator from North Carolina would tell us which of these three statements we are to take. Is it 5.5 or 8.18 per cent., or is it 15 per cent, or what is it? It makes a very great difference to these calculations.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator knows all about spinning and manufacturing cotton. That is the Senator's occupation, and I suppose he is especially at home at that. I ask him if the waste is the same in all will be a supposed to the same in all suppose the same in all the same in the same mills and under all treatments?

Mr. CHACE.

Oh, no.

Then is there anything unusual in the variation of Mr. VANCE. waste which the consul gave there—the different statements from dif-ferent persons of the waste in different mills? Is that not an evidence of his care in making his statements rather than the contrary?

Mr. CHACE. I should think not. It would be my impression that it was not. If the Senator will take that report and go to any practical manufacturer in this country or in any other and ask him if he really believes there ever was a cotton-mill in this world that made cotton goods which had 5 per cent. waste, the man would laugh at him. It is an utter impossibility. It never was done in the world, and can not be done.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] the other day in speaking of an account brought in here called it a "cooked account." This is cooked, badly cooked. He does give us a little credit. Further along he says:

Though in American print cloths the cheaper kinds of cottons are used, yet there seems to remain still a greater percentage of net waste than in English mills, which probably will find explanation from our spinners, and which I can not venture to give.

It is well he should not "venture" any farther.

He says that in Lancashire the cost of power and taxes is .418 of a cent a pound. He says at Lowell the cost of power and taxes is .568 of a cent a pound. Over on page 246 he says, and he has it in two columns, that in Lancashire power and taxes cost .418 of a cent a pound, and in Lowell power and taxes cost .298 of a cent a pound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does he explain that?

Mr. CHACE. No; I should think he could not. The man does not

Mr. CHACE. No; I should think he could not. Ine man does not live who can give an explanation of it.

Now, Mr. President, I go on a little further and here he attempts to give the spinning cost of these goods in Lancashire at Burnley and in Lowell. Here are comparative tables. He says he got those figures from a mill in Lowell. I happened to find out what mill he got them from. I have access to the accounts of that mill. In the first place he makes a comparison of power and tax. He evidently does not know what he is talking about, but I can see where he makes the difference. In one case he is talking about power and taxes for spinning yarns In one case he is talking about power and taxes for spinning yarns alone, and in the other case for both spinning and weaving. But every man who knows anything about it knows that the power and taxes on the weaving department amount to only a very small fraction of the power and taxes on the whole process of manufacture; but the poor, simple soul has divided them by two, and the State Department has published it for him.

But the extraordinary thing is that the Lowell mill is a water-mill. On page 245 he calls it "water-power and taxes." There is no waterpower in Lancashire, no water-power at Burnley, and yet he is comparing the cost of a steam-mill in Lancashire, where there is no water-power, with that of a water-mill in Lowell. The water runs down by gravity and it does not cost anybody anything. It is no expense whatever. Is that an honest comparison?

That man Schoenhof is an intelligent man undoubtedly. I have no doubt he is a very shrewd man, but I think he is altogether too shrewd, when he is comparing the cost of water-power in America with steam-power in Great Britain, to make out that it costs more to manufactwere there than it does here; and I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that three-fourths of all the print cloths made in this country are made by steam-power, and I think I might enlarge it very much and say nine-tenths, but I wish to be strictly within bounds. I will guaranty that three-fourths of them are made by steam-power in this country

Why should this man, in making this comparison, if he wished to be fair and honest about it, compare the cost of water-power in this country with the cost of steam-power in Great Britain? As the Senthat one mill, or, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] says, was he acting under instructions? Was he intending that this should be "cooked," or is this a misprint? [Laughter.]

The next item I find is "repairs and depreciation." The repairs and depreciation in Langeships he was a tire to the of a content of the cooked.

and depreciation in Lancashire he puts at six-tenths of a cent and the "repairs and depreciation" in Lowell at .475 of a cent.

I have another report here of this same consul, in which he makes some very fortunate comparisons for us. He seems to have a spell of candor on him at this time. He says:

Generally speaking, then, and taking the above as a basis, a decided advantage seems to be in the hands of the British manufacturer from a competitive tage seems to be in the hands of t point of view.

1. Cost of construction is lower.
2. Cost of machinery is lower.
3. Cost of management is lower.
4. Cost of supplies.

Further back he says the cost of interest is lower. Now, what is "depreciation and repairs" except the wearing out of machinery and replacing that which costs more in this country than it did in England? The whole mill costs more over here, every part of the mill costs more; and yet this wonderful consul tells us that you can replace the parts of that mill in this country for less than you can in Great Britain because he says the "repairs and depreciation" amount to six-tenths in Lancashire and .475 in Lowell. That is a little less than five-tenths. Everybody knows who knows anything about it that that is not so. The consul's own statement shows that it is not true. It is absolutely false; I will not say intentionally so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A mistake.

Mr. CHACE. I accept the suggestion. It is a mistake, or perhaps a misprint.

If it will not interrupt or disturb my colleague, I should like to read for the information of the Senate a statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] himself in this discussiop, which is even more remarkable than the statement of Mr. School Nof. He says:

In America one weaver attends 6‡ looms, whilst in England the same weaver would strend 4 looms. In America the average earning per loom per week of the operative is $5.08.

Well, 62 looms, which would be an average earning for the American weaver of $34.20 per week, or $5.71 a day.

In England the average earning per loom per week of the operative is $5.

That is $20 a week for a weaver on the other side against $32.29 for the operative on this side. And then the Senator from North Carolina Showing a difference of only 8 cents in the aggregate earnings of the two.

I do not know which is the most remarkable part of that statement, that the girls at Fall River earn on an average $5.71 a day, or that there is only a difference of 8 cents in the aggregate earnings, when the statistics show a difference of $14.29.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a misprint!
Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, that is another misprint.
Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator oblige me by designating where those remarks may be found?

Mr. ALDRICH. On page 528 of the RECORD, near the top of the page. I beg my colleague's pardon for interrupting him.
Mr. CHACE. I am very glad that my colleague has brought out that fact.

The next item we find in this wonderful report in the comparison between the two countries is the item of "carriage." That is John Bull all over. In this country we should say "transportation." The transportation, or carriage, as they call it in Lancashire, is eighteen one-hundredths of a cent, and in Lowell, according to this, it does not cost anything. That is very remarkable. The Lowell manufacturer buys his cotton of the Senator down in North Carolina, or of his constituents, or of the constituents of the Senator from Texas. He transports it all these thousands of miles and then transports his goods back; he buys his fuel at the mines in Pennsylvania and transports it all the way East, or if he buys it in Boston transports it from there to his mill in Lowell, transports his goods to market, and yet by some sort of leger-demain this consul makes him do it all for nothing!

Perhaps it was necessary to put it so in order to make the figures foot up right. But if the Senator from North Carolina will explain how it is that mill-owners in Lowell can buy their coal, transport it to the mills, buy their supplies and transport them to the mills, and then have their merchandise conveyed to market for nothing, I will wait to have him do it. Here it is in the report. I should like to have that explained. There is no cost of carriage in Lowell, no cost of transportation! I pause for a reply.

Mr. VANCE. When I get the report upon which the Senator is commenting this evening I shall endeavor to reply to his heart's content. I can not undertake to do it while he holds the report in his hands and I have it not.

Mr. CHACE. This is the report which the Senator and other Senators on that side have been quoting from. Here is another item at the bottom where it says "addition." Addition of what? I do not know whether it is for the cost of book-keeping or what it is. "Addition" is only nine one-hundredths of a cent, to be sure, but I do not know what the addition is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He was a beginner in arithmetic.

Mr. CHACE. On page 246 he says:

We can approximate the expense

I want Senators to notice these words, "approximate the expense". We can approximate the expense by taking the English additional cost for weaving print cloth as a guide. This, I was told by an expert in the business, is covered by five-eighths to three-fourths of a penny—

Rather a wide difference thereon a pound of print cloth, or about 13 cents.

Let it be borne in mind that this man is making a statement running out into the thousandths of a cent per pound, and yet he approximates and talks about its being 12, and puts in some items that do not belong in it and leaves out items in the other account that do belong in it, and calls this an approximate estimate, when he is figuring to the thousandths of a cent; and he winds up at the top of the page and says, "We have nearly covered the same items." He says:

I have to repeat that though we have nearly "covered" the same items, still the modifications in each item are sufficient that the result may be somewhat altered when comparison can be made item for item in each branch.

That is on page 247. I should like the Senator to make a note of that "about the same," because the Senator has denied that there is any material difference between wages in this country and in England. I worse need of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; I have not denied that. Mr. CHACE. What did the Senator say?

I said, as I have always understood from Mr. Edward Mr. VANCE. Atkinson and others, that the earnings of the American worker were very much greater, but that the output was so much greater that it made the labor cost to the American and to the English manufacturer very nearly the same. That was my statement. Does the Senator from Rhode Island deny that?

Mr. CHACE. The Senator from Rhode Island understood the Senator to say a very different thing from that.

Mr. VANCE. Does he deny the fact which I have stated, that the labor cost in the two countries is very nearly the same?

Mr. CHACE. Why, most certainly I deny it.

Mr. VANCE. That is the candid way to do it.

Mr. CHACE. Now I will put up Schoenhof against Schoenhof.

Mr. CHACE. Now I will put up be a second of the second of that the State Department issued it in a little leaflet like this [exhibiting], so that our free-trade friends might have it. He gives, on page 207 of Consular Report No. 70, a table of wages in the two countries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the date of that?

Mr. CHACE. October, 1886. Here are wages in New England and Lancashire. He says:

It is not due to direct spinners' wages, which are about the same, but to a higher general cost as held against this most profitable working mill, and would not all, it seems, be above, and even somewhat below, the cost of English mills not so advantageously situated or organized.

But in this table he says that the average earnings of mule-spinners in New England are $10.38; in Lancashire, $5.83 to $7.29.

Mr. VANCE. The average weekly earnings? Mr. CHACE. The average weekly earnings.

That is what I said. You are talking about wages Mr. VANCE. and I am talking about earnings.

Mr. CHACE. Here he says it is not due to direct spinners' wages.

Mr. VANCE. No.

Mr. CHACE. There can not be any evasion of that term. Spinners' wages, which are about the same as given in this report No. 93, this campaign document. This was issued before the election, and used before the election, and you have been using it here on the other side, and here is one in which he uses the expression "the average weekly earnings." Is not that wages? What are "weekly earnings" but wages? "Mule-spinners $10.38 in New England; $5.83 to $7.20" or $7.29; it is blotted in the copy I have, and I can not see which it is, but it is not material. There is Schoenhof against Schoenhof. I should like to have the Senator explain to us the difference between wages and earnings. What is the difference?

Mr. VANCE. The favorite method of the protectionist is undertaking to show how much more the people earn in this country by their work than they do in the old country—is to compare their pay per diem when it is per diem, but not when it is per piece. When the spinning or weaving is done by the cut or by the yard, we say that the additional output of the American workman makes his earnings much greater, while his per diem pay, if reduced to the day, would not be much larger than in England. That is what I have been trying to make the Senator understand is my position.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator explain the difference between a man's earnings and his wages?

man's earnings and his wages?

Mr. VANCE. There is no di

Mr. VANCE. There is no difference practically.

Mr. CHACE. I should think not.

Mr. VANCE. When you speak of paying him so much by the day, as you always do in contrasting it with the old country, of course that is different from wages. You pay him so much by the day, but if you pay him so much by the week then it is a very different thing, as a matter of course.

Mr. CHACE. That is not so in this case. But I must hasten on,

Mr. President, because there are some other very extraordinary things here to which I want to draw attention before I get through. I find on page 208 of this same report he speaks about spinners. He says:

Girls are paid 90 cents a day for 896 spindles, ten hours' spinning and number

That is in Massachusetts.

He says:

They spin 1,792 pounds at $540, which was equal only to three-tenths of a cent a pound.

I have figured that all sorts of ways, and I can not figure it out. I should like to have the Senator explain what that means.

Mr. VANCE. I give it up.

Mr. CHACE. You give it up.

Mr. VANCE. Wait until I get hold of the document, and I will give the Senator all the information I can. I never saw a man in

Mr. CHACE. He says further, however, in this report that he can not submit the same qualities of goods. He says:

It is a very difficult matter to obtain goods manufactured in different countries alike, on account of the width and weight.

Mr. President, my time is nearly to a close; I shall seek a further opportunity to analyze this under the ten-minutes' debate, because it s a very interesting matter. I understand that the Secretary of State has sent a communication to the House of Representatives, asking that a special appropriation of $10,000 be made to pay this man for these

I want to say before I leave the floor that that report bears within itself the internal evidence of having been purposely fixed to mislead and deceive the public.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the bill (8. 3732) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida, having been presented to the President of the United States January 5, 1889, and not having been returned by him to the House in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his signature.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 3864) to increase the pension of Mrs. Sue B. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3866) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to examine certain claims of persons who owned or occupied buildings on the Springs Mountain reservation, which had been condemned by the Hot Springs commission and after-wards burned, and to fix a reasonable value for each of said buildings from the evidence now on file in the Interior Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not want to debate the question. I just want to make a statement. I am still paired, but if the Senators from Pennsylvania have an idea that their best interests will be conserved or those of their constituents

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator from Virginia that debate is not in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not debating. I mean to withdraw my statement that I will stay with the committee, sir.

Mr. WALTHALL. My pair having been transferred by the arrangement just stated by the Senator from Colorado, I desire to be recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Col-QUITT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote nay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of the absent Senators.

Mr. HOAR. Is that in order when a quorum is present?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN.

I think we can have a vote now. We shall not get a vote now. We shall fail on Mr. EDMUNDS. pairs just as we did before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the third paragraph of Rule V

The Secretary read as follows:

3. Whenever upon such roll-call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presence of a quorum having been ascertained, the Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Vermont can not now be entertained.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Stewart] is absent, and I announce his pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Yoorhees], so that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] can vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the roll will be called upon the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North

Mr. HARRIS. It appearing that there are forty-three Senators present, a quorum, I ask unanimous consent that the demand for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn. The record has been made by two roll-calls already so far as the Senators present are concerned. In that way we may proceed with the business before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out all after line 1381, in paragraph 340, page 142, down to line 1448, paragraph 353, page 144, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all grades and kinds of wool; wools on skins; top waste, slubbing waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes similar to them in character or description, composed wholly or in part of wool or worsted; woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, flocks, and wool waste not otherwise provided for in this act; and noils, a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise a point of order. I do not desire to cut off the Senator's amendment, but the paragraphs which he proposes to strike out have not yet been read, and I think they should be read. There are some amendments that may be offered to the paragraphs. Of course it will be in order, after we have reached paragraph 354, for the Senator to have a vote upon his amendment. I only wish to have an orderly proceeding respecting these various paragraphs and amend-

Mr. SHERMAN. An amendment to perfect the part proposed to be Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Texas proposes to strike out a number of paragraphs none of which have been read. I submit that those paragraphs should first be read.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well, I shall withhold the amendment until the paragraphs are read.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senate now proceeding under the ten-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Secretary will read the part of the substitute reported from the Committee on Finance which was passed over, beginning with paragraph 341.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

341. Class 1, clothing wools; that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes 2 and 3.

342. Class 2, combing wools; that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

343. Class 3, carpet wools and other similar wools: Such as Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Expt, Syria, and elsewhere.

344. The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

345. The duty upon wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

346. Wools of the first and second class, and all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, 11 cents per pound.

Mr. Allison. In line 1419 I move to strike out the words "and

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1419 I move to strike out the words "and second" before "class," and at the end of the paragraph to add "wools of the second class, 12 cents per pound;" so as to read:

Wools of the first class, and all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, 11 cents per pound; wools of the second class, 12 cents per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What punctuation should appear before the second amendment, after the word "pound?"

Mr. ALLISON. A semicolon.

The two amendments will be treated

The PRESIDENT protempore. The two amendments will be treated as one question, if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out, in line 1420, as the text now stands, "eleven" and to insert "ten," and to strike out "twelve"—I understand that to be the amendment of the Senator from Iowa-and insert " ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa by striking out in his proposed amendment the word "twelve" and inserting "ten."

Mr. VEST. I made that motion because the Chair suggested that the two questions be considered as one.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator prefers, I shall confine myself to the mo-tion I first intended to make, which is to strike out "eleven," in line 1420, and insert "ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can be both treated as one question.

Mr. VEST. For all practical effect one motion does as well as two, because the same vote will reject one as well as the other.

The effect of this proposed amendment to the existing law is to increase the duties upon the two classes of wool named (provided the amendment of the Senator from Iowa just offered by him does not prevail) $239,073.89. Of course if that amendment prevails the increase of duty will be just so much larger by 1 cent a pound upon the second class of wools, which is now 11 cents in the text of the Senate substi-

The whole effect of the text as it stands is to make the duty upon clothing and combing wools, if in the grease, 11 cents, and if they are washed, 22 cents; and if scoured, 33 cents, without distinction as to value. This is an increase, as I have said, of $239,073.89 in duty without taking into consideration the last amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa

In consideration of the fact that two years ago the National Association of Wool Growers expressed themselves entirely satisfied with the provisions of the act of 1883, which is the existing law, and with a unanimity scarcely ever seen before in so large an interest came to Congress with that request, it is most extraordinary that these changes and increases are made. In 1886 the National Association of Wool Growers, through their secretary, Mr. Hayes, sent to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives the following statement:

The association which I represent-

Said Mr. Hayes, who was a witness-

The association which I represent has been at great pains to ascertain the sentiment of the national woolen industry upon the question of traiff revision. Upon the publication of the paper before you setting forth their policy, in the months of October and November last, they sent copies of that document to every known wool manufacturer in the United States, except wool-hat manufacturers, with a request that the recipient would express his approval or disapproval of the policy therein set forth, and that if he approved he would sign and forward to the office of the association a communication to the following

To the Secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers:

SIR: The undersigned, manufacturer of — at —, in the county of — and State of —, employing — sets of cards (or — wool combers) hereby declare — approval of the policy, in relation to a revision of the tariff set forth by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, in response to a circular of Hon. Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, of July 18, 1885.

The features of the policy set forth in that response which — especially approve are:

approve are:
First, That there shall be no change at present in the existing wool and woolen tariff, nor a general tariff revision at the next session of Congress.
Second. That in case of any revision of the tariff, so long as a duty is imposed upon wool, it is indispensable for the prosperity of the woolen manufacture that the present system of compound duties upon woolens should be strictly resintained.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator— Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to finish this document? Then I will yield.

Mr. HOAR. I wanted merely to ask the Senator to repeat—it was not distinctly heard on this side of the Chamber-what he said about the satisfaction of the wool-growers with the woolen tariff.

Mr. VEST. I am just reading the paper. Mr. HOAR. To what act does the Senator refer; the tariff act of 1883?

Mr. VEST. I refer to the act of 1883, which is the existing law.
Mr. HOAR. That is all I wanted to know.
Mr. VEST. This is the statement which they sent to the wool manufacturers in the United States and the wool-growers. This is the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers.

Mr. TELLER. Not wool-growers.
Mr. VEST. They are woolen manufacturers. Some of them, I suppose, are wool-growers. The paper proceeds:

That in case of any revision of the tariff, so long as a duty is imposed upon wool, it is indispensable for the prosperity of the woolen manufacture that the present system of compound duties upon woolens should be strictly main-— further authorize the attaching of — name, with others, to such a memorial as may be made to Congress by any considerable number of wool manufacturers, embodying the above propositions.

Respectfully, yours,

Now follows the number of signers to this instrument, amounting to 954, and in all the States of the Union from Arkansas to Wisconsin. Mr. Hayes proceeds to say:

In all, 354 establishments, employing 4,837 sets of cards (the set or series of cards being the unit of measurement of the capacity of a woolen mill), and 319 combers (the comber being the unit of measurement of the capacity of a worsted mill), not to mention the large number of manufacturers included in this list who do not employ cards or combers, but are engaged only in the more advanced processes of manufacture.

To what extent do these manufacturers, nearly a thousand in number, represent the national industry of manufacturing wool?

Mr. Hayes proceeds to say that this is the largest, most unanimous, and united expression of opinion that has ever been had from any similar interest in the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands

Mr. Hayes to say that those are the wool-producers, the wool-growers?
Mr. VEST. They are the woolen manufacturers.
Mr. TELLER. That is quite a different thing from the statement the Senator made.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator said "wool-growers."

Mr. VEST. Then I used the wrong word; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. These are the manufacturers of wool, and not the

Mr. VEST. Exactly; it is the manufacturers, and I intended to say "manufacturers." If I used the other word it was done inadvertently. Mr. Hayes is secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

Mr. DAWES. Was.

Mr. VEST. Or was. If Senators would speak one at a time, I might not be induced to use the wrong word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that as debate is proceeding under the ten-minute rule and each Senator can speak but once on any question, interruptions are liable to result in embarrassment and confusion.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, I use the word this time advisedly. I say the wool manufacturers of the United States came to Congress and solicited that the present law of 1883 should remain unchanged upon the statute-book; and yet in the face of that expression of opinion and that desire the majority of the Finance Committee now come in with increases upon manufactured goods of over $4,000,000 in this woolen schedule—more than $4,000,000 over the act of 1883.

But that is not remarkable in view of the fact that these same woolen manufacturers in January, 1878, sent a petition to the Committee on Ways and Means, asking for the admission into the United States of foreign wool free of duty, and I ask that this be inserted in the RECORD without consuming my time in reading it:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers of woolen goods, respectfully represent that for several years past our industry has suffered great and general depression. Many failures have occurred, many mills have stopped, and many others continue to run without adequate remuneration to their owners. We believe that one great cause for this widespread depression is to be found in the present high rates of duty on wool. These duties, ranging from 45 per cent. to 85 per cent. on our raw material, increase the cost of our fabrics in a corresponding ratio above the price of similar foreign goods.

To compensate for this increase the tariff of 1867 attempted to levy a duty on manufactured woolens which should balance the duty on wool and give in addition to the American manufacturer an advantage, we believe, has been very imperfectly realized. High cost of our fabrics has limited consumption and entirely prevented exportation, while low-cost foreign goods have forced their way into our markets through both legitimate and illegitimate channels.

The great shrinkage of values which has occurred has not only affected capital, but it has seriously impaired the ability of consumers to pay the high prices contemplated by the tariff. The number of those who can afford to purchase at a given price is lessened. A sluggish demand and an over supply are the natural consequences.

a given price is lessened. A sluggish demand and an over supply are the natural consequences.

To meet this lessened ability of consumers and to establish the woolen industry on a firm basis of prosperity lower prices based upon lower cost are absolutely necessary. The wool manufacturers see this necessity; they have struggled with some success to adapt themselves to it; they will succeed completely whenever they are permitted to select their raw material in the markets of the world on the same terms as their foreign competitors.

On the other hand, the wool-growers have not realized from the high duties on wool the advantage they expected. The depressed condition of the woolen industry has given them a poor market, and the prices of all classes of wools grown in this country have been, on the average, no higher than under lower tariffs. The production of fine wools has absolutely declined, and we venture to express the hope that the wool-growers are beginning to discover that the prosperity of the industry which consumes their product is a condition which must precede and accompany their own prosperity.

For the present we content ourselves with declaring as our deliberate conviction, that the tariff of 1867 has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has not promoted the interests of the wool manufacturers; has n

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly. Mr. MITCHELL. If it is all true, as stated by the Senator, that the wool manufacturers came here saying that they were satisfied with the tariff of 1883, and they also came here and asked that wool be placed on the free-list, it can not be said with much propriety that the committee is standing with the manufacturers, can it?

Mr. VEST. The first petition was sent here in 1878. The next petition was sent here in 1886. The first petition asked for free wool. The last petition asked for the same duties imposed by existing law, the act of 1883. But we find the Republican party, without regard to the wishes of these manufacturers, who are the best judges of what is necessary to protect the woolen manufacturers of the United States, for some purpose or other disregarding these experts as to their own interests and imposing these enormous duties, and continuously refusing from 1878 to put wool upon the free-list at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken ten min-

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has not made much progress in his investigation of the tariff question if he does not know that the woolen manufacturers are a very different body of men from the wool-growers.

Mr. VEST. I reckon I know that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The woolen manufacturers would no doubt like to have wool duty free, and they would no doubt like to have the rate fixed by the law of 1883 kept on wool, but the wool-growers have protested largely, continuously, and vociferously from that time on to this hour, and they stand to-day protesting against the injury to the great wool-growing interests of this country.

Mr. President, my colleague owes his seat in the Senate to the dissatisfaction of the wool-growers of Ohio at the action taken in 1883. The Republican party was beaten in our State in the election of a Legislature and in the elections that followed for two or three years, on account of the discontent caused by the act of 1883. The wool-growers of the Senator's own State, and of every State in the Union, have protested against it from that time to this.

Only the other day an intelligent body of men representing the woolgrowers' associations of the United States, having delegates from fif-teen or sixteen of the States which produce the largest quantity of wool in this country, protested against it, and appeared before us and asked for more than the Committee on Finance (a majority of them, at least) were willing to give to the wool-growers. Therefore the Senator's statement falls to the ground.

This duty on wool is founded upon the broad proposition that the producers on the farm have the same right to the protection of their industry as the producers in the workshop, and your tariff law could not stand a moment upon any other principle. All forms of industry in this country are entitled to protection, and when the farmers are separated from the mechanics and manufacturers and the miners, then, as a matter of course, the whole system will fall to the ground.

As to the increase of this duty 1 cent a pound, that makes it only on one item equal to the tariff of 1867. It replaces the duty on combon one item equal to the tariff of 1867. It replaces the duty on comoling wools at 12 cents a pound, as it was prior to the act of 1883. In regard to the clothing wool, it is only 11 cents a pound, so that it is still less than it was before the act of 1883. This is but a faint effort to undo a wrong that was done in 1883.

The Senator talks about high duties. Why, Mr. President, the duties on these wools are low. If he will only look at the tables before him he will find that the average rate of duty on wools under the existing law is but 25.97 cents. On some grades it is higher, especially on one grade of clothing wool, which reaches to 47.55 cents. Taking the three grade of clothing wool, which reaches to 47.55 cents. Taking the three chief grades that are contained in these schedules, the duty now is 25.97 cents. This is an increase of 1 cent a pound on clothing wool and combing wool, and probably from  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound on carpet wool. It is perhaps more on carpet wools, because the rate is now only 24 cents. So this is a slight effort to undo a wrong that was done in 1883.

I am prepared with ample statistics to show that the effect of the act of 1883 has been to reduce the number of sheep in this country 10,000,-000; in my own State more than a million and a half. It has reduced the production of domestic wools in this country 60,000,000 pounds, and probably has done more harm than any single act or measure con-

But it is not necessary to go into these statistics, because the Committee on Finance have in a very slight degree and sparingly endeavored to undo a part of the mischief done by the act of 1883. Now, what the manufacturers demand on this question is quite a different thing. They have nothing to say about this proposition, however. Their interests and those of the wool-growers are naturally opposed to each other in one sense, but they have acted in concert together, and I believe the modifications made by the Committee on Finance will be satisfactory to wool-growers and woolen manufacturers in regard to the duties on woolen goods.

When we come to them we can discuss them. They are not larger than they ought to be, in my judgment. It is not the object of the wool-growers to reduce the duties on manufactured goods. They want to see woolen manufacturers succeed and prosper in this country, and they do not object in the slightest degree to give them that degree of protection which will maintain the woolen industry of this country. There is no industry more important to the people of America and to the people of any country in the world than the wool-growing industry.

No country can be considered independent of foreign nations unless it grows wool and provides not only food but clothing for its people, and this sheep industry is more valuable than any other because it provides both food and clothing. From the first dawn of civilization to this hour no industry has equaled in importance and solace to mankind the growth of sheep. Of all the domestic animals, although humble, cowardly I may say, yet it is the most valuable. We can do humble, cowardly I may say, yet it is the most valuable. We can do without the horse and the cow better than we can without the sheep; and the act of 1883, in my judgment, which produced so great an injury to this important industry of our country ought to be recovered from as soon as possible.

My answer, therefore, to the Senator is that he is attacking the duty which is the lowest on the whole list, and he is attacking the duty which is most vital to the people of our country. When the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] said that a certain Southern production ought to be advanced in rate, that he thought the rate prescribed by this bill would endanger it, and it was stated to us by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Gibson] that the quantity of rice raised in this country had increased from 25,000,000 to 155,000,000 pounds, I was then in favor of making some increase and giving them that degree of protection on this rice industry that they desire.

But that rice has now a duty of 113 per cent. The committee propose to reduce it to 50 per cent., and that duty even as proposed to be reduced by the committee is very much higher than the duty on wool. On the statements here made when submitted to the Committee on Finance I have no doubt, when they have time to consider the subject, they will be willing to make some modification of their recommendation wherever they find that they are in error. This modification was made upon the demand of the wool-growers without distinction of sec-This modification was tion or party, because this wool-growing industry is probably the only one that is uniform throughout the United States.

There are sheep grown everywhere, from the hills of Vermont to the plains of Texas, and to the broad uplands of Nevada and California. It is an interest in which some twenty to thirty States are interested. It is an interest which affects more than one million of farmers in this country. Compared with the manufacturing interest it is wide-reaching and broad. It is conducted by farmers, and the yield, though small on a single farm, makes the aggregate of 330,000,000 pounds of wool, about two-thirds of all our domestic supply.

If the wool industry is protected the farms of America will yield enough to make all our clothes, our blankets, and our carpets, and every other portion of woolen manufactures. There is no difficulty anywhere in the United States in raising sheep, no difficulty in producing wool, varying in quality from the finest fleece of Saxony, worth when secured and prepared for the machine sometimes almost a dollar a pound, down to the lowest and coarsest and weakest fiber on the plains of the West.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I can not allow the statement which has been made, that the manufacturers of the country are in favor of free wool, to go uncontradicted. It is not true that in 1876 or 1880, or at the present time any considerable portion of the woolen manufacturers of the United States were or are in favor of the abolition of the wool duty. Notwithstanding the great temptation which was offered to the woolen manufacturers by the provisions of the Mills bill, and notwithstanding the disadvantages which a heavy duty upon wool places upon them, they have remained true to the principles of protection, and are in favor of an adequate duty being placed upon wool. I think it is due to the woolen manufacturers of the country that I should say this for them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the particular amendment now pending. I have no doubt it will be gratifying to many farmers engaged in a small way in the growth of sheep to have some duty upon wool, but every cent you put upon wool comes out of the great mass of the people who have to provide clothing for themselves and their families. I shall content myself with this reference to this particular item of the bill. I desire simply to express my opinion about the bill generally.

I think, Mr. President, if the ingenuity of man had been taxed to the utmost extent to devise a scheme the purpose and effect of which was to increase the profits, to fill up the coffers of a particular class of men in this country at the expense of the great body of the people of the United States, it could not have succeeded better than it has in the form of this bill.

There is no time now to enter into the discussion of the details of the bill, but from the discussion which has taken place, as well as the investigation which I have been able to give, the details of the bill sustain and carry out the position which I have announced, that human ingenuity could not have devised a scheme better calculated to promote the manufacturing interests of this country at the expense of the great body of the people.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] and other gentlemen who have gone into an examination of the details deserve the thanks of the country for exposing this measure, notwithstanding I apprehend nobody expects it to become a law at the present session. As it, however, has emanated from the Republican members of the Finance Committee and is sustained by the entire Republican membership of this body, it is fair to presume that it furnishes the basis of the legislation upon taxation which is to ensue in the next Congress when both branches of Congress and the executive department will be in the possession of the Republican party.

It is only in view of that fact that the discussion of this question at the present time, in my opinion, has been justified, and I say again that those gentlemen who have exposed the dangerous character of the bill in the examination of the details have deserved well of their country in showing what the Republican party, when in full possession of this Government, intend to do in reference to the taxation of the people

Now, sir, I venture the assertion that, examining this bill, carefully examining the general scheme and plan of the bill as well as its details, it is not possible to arrive at any other conclusion than that it has been framed specially for the manufacturing interest of the country, and with a reckless, I will not say a criminal, disregard of the interests of the great body of the people.

Why, sir, in my opinion, there has been no consideration given to the wants and necessities of the consumers of these articles. The great animus of the whole measure is to increase the protection of the protected classes, and that is done by the oppression of the people who consume the products that are thus protected. Sir, standing here in my place, I do not hesitate to say that no more indefensible legislation was ever perpetrated.

In almost every tariff bill that has been under discussion since I have had the honor of a seat in this body there has been some respect paid heretofore to the wants of the great masses of the people; but what do we hear now? We hear that protection is the panacea for all evils. Give us protection and a reacting influence will come back to benefit measurably the consumers of this country! Tax the people first and trust to the beneficent operations of this protective system to indemnify the people hereafter after the tax shall have been paid! I do not believe in any such scheme as that.

Now, as to the general plan of your bill, what does it mean? You propose taxation, but what relief do you give to the people? You propose to take the tax off tobacco. I say that not one fourth of the people of this country use tobacco in any form. The women and children are excluded from the tobacco-users, and therefore you propose to relieve but a small portion and not exceeding one-fourth of the people of this country, if it would even have the effect of giving them relief.

You propose in that item to relieve not more than one-fourth in order that you may cut down the revenues of the country and keep up the necessity for high taxation upon imported goods. Then I say it will not reduce the cost of tobacco. When I first came to the Senate the tax on tobacco was 32 cents a pound. It was reduced to 24 cents, subsequently to 16 cents, and now to 8 cents, and I say from personal experience (because I indulge somewhat in the use of tobacco in various forms) that you can not buy a plug of tobacco at any retail store in the city of Washington at any cheaper rate than you could when the tax was 32 cents a pound.

You can not buy as good a cigar to-day as you could then, notwithstanding the tax has been reduced. So I say the consumer will derive no benefit, neither do I believe that the man who produces tobacco will be benefited by that provision. The great interest in this protection is the interest of the manufacturer.

Mr. President, take any other provision of the bill. Take the whisky clause. You propose to reduce the taxation upon whisky that enters into the production of medicines, etc. Who will get any benefit from that except the manufacturers? Do you suppose you will be able to buy a dose of medicine, or any cosmetic, or anything else any cheaper simply because you have taken the duty off alcohol that enters into the arts? Not one particle of relief will be found in that clause to the tax-payers of the country, and not one particle of benefit will the consumers derive from that remission of taxation. It is another scheme to reduce the revenues of the Government so as to keep up the necessity for high taxes on imported goods.

You may go through this whole bill, and I say again it is framed with that particular object and will have that practical effect and no other.

Now I turn to the committee's report. They say first that there should be a great reduction in the revenues of the country, and while they have said that they have said nothing about the relief of the people from the enormous burden of taxation on imported goods. The whole plan of the bill from beginning to end is to favor special interests, without any particular regard to what it may cost the consumers of the goods manufactured and protected under this bill.

without any particular regard to what it may cost the consumers of the goods manufactured and protected under this bill.

Because we have resisted these high and onerous taxes we have been charged with being free-traders. Sir, I deny it. What is a free-trader? Who is a free-trader? Is it the man who believes that he ought to buy in this country every article without the imposition of any tax upon it? That is a free-trader. But no Democratic Senator, and not even the President of the United States, who has been charged with being a free-trader, and no Democratic convention in any part of this country has declared for any such policy. On the contrary, we are in favor of raising a large part of the revenues in this country from the duties on the importations of foreign articles, but we do not believe you have got the constitutional right or that it is sound policy or wisdom to lay those duties so high as to make them prohibitory, and I go further and say that you have no constitutional right to make those duties so high that they will limit importations.

You have a right to lay duties to the revenue point, but when you undertake to limit the revenues from any article by the imposition of taxation you have no authority under the Constitution to do it. You have the right, as I before remarked, up to the limit of revenue to impose your duties if you think it proper to do so, but you have no constitutional right to prohibit the introduction of foreign articles or to restrict or to limit the importation of them by onerous taxation.

I remember a few years ago reading a speech of a distinguished gentleman who once occupied a seat on the floor of the other House, S. S. Prentiss; and he was a great protectionist, openly avowed himself a protectionist to the fullest extent, and he said there was no constitutional power in Congress to prohibit importations or to lay duties higher than was necessary to raise the revenues necessary for the Government. He said he would have—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, nothing has proved so signal a failure in this warfare which has been inaugurated against the industries of this country as the attempt to detach the woolen manufacturers of the country from the support of protection by the bribe of free wool. Great expectations were raised as to the possible success of this war by detaching in detail one industry after another from the support of protection by a promise of free raw material, and this warfare began with a special attack in this line.

The first recommendations that came under this Administration for a reform in the tariff were directed exclusively to the wool and woolen interests. Circulars were sent out to all the woolen manufacturers of the country; missionaries were sent into the North and into woolen manufacturing districts, and meetings were called of the manufacturers, and the benefit to them was held out that would result, as was supposed, from having their wool free. I heard one of those engaged in this modern warfare upon industries express his great surprise more in this than in anything else, that the woolen manufacturers refused to take the bait. He told me in conversation that it was expected by this offer that the woolen manufacturers would accept it and thereby abandon the entire doctrine of protection, and, as he expressed it, "to my amazement, not more than two or three of all the woolen manufacturers have stood by us in this attempt to secure free wool for them."

In 1867 the present relations between the tariff upon wool and the tariff upon woolens was fixed upon the principle then recognized and maintained all the way through till now, that the successful manufacturer of woolens in this country could never be unless the woolen manufacturer could depend upon the American product for his supply. The proper relation between them has been kept up on the principle that to maintain successfully the woolen manufacture the woolen producer must be maintained in this country. No one thing was seen more clearly by the sagacious and wise and far-looking manufacturer of woolens than this, that the moment he became dependent upon the foreign wool-grower he had no assurance that he could maintain successfully his manufacture a single year.

The Mills bill, which had upon it free wool and free tin, was reported in the House, and the effect upon the market abroad for those two articles was instant. Tin went up; wool went up. They had an idea that the market speedily in America was to be theirs in both these articles, and they could command the price; and our woolen manufacturers saw very soon through this scheme, and it is a tribute not only to their conviction of the justice of the principle of protection but to their sagacity that they saw it and refused to take this bait which was held out to them.

They stand by the wool-growers both upon principle and their own interest. It is as much their interest to stand by the protective principle applicable to the wool-grower as it is when applied to their own manufacture. The producers of everything that can be produced in this country must have the market, and they must all stand together. The American producers of every article possible of production in this country are seeing more clearly every day that the cause is a common cause, and no scheme that will detach one at a time of either the manufacturers or the producers from this common effort of theirs to preserve and urers or the producers from this common effort of theirs to preserve and maintain and amplify American markets is going to succeed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, wool is a commodity produced by the farmers of this country. Much has been said about their interests and about the injustice that is done them by our tariff laws and by the manufacturers. I think they are entitled to their fair share of protection, and as wool is one of their principal products they are entitled to be protected on their wool; and I think a great many Democrats in my own party, who are honored members of it, have seen probably my own party, who are honored members of it, have seen probably within the last few months the mistake that was made by some of our leaders on that question.

It has frequently been said, how can it be accounted for that the Republicans gained so heavily in the rural or agricultural districts? think it was because they marched to the music of the bleating of sixty millions of sheep.

Take the farmer who has only fifty head of sheep. If the duty on wool is 12 cents a pound he knows what his clip will be, and he makes his calculations. He knows about how much he is to receive by that tariff; and when you propose to strike it down and not to relieve him of other tariff burdens he resents it, and in my opinion there were thousands of as good and pure Democrats as there are in this broad were thousands of as good and pure Democrats as there are in this broad land who went to the polls and voted the Republican ticket or staid away from the polls and did not vote the Democratic ticket because of the provision in the Mills bill that places wool on the free-list.

There is much in the Mills bill that I approve. There is much in it that I do not approve. The same, I may say, is true of the substitute reported by the Senate Finance Committee. I do not approve in the Mills bill those provisions which put the productions of the farmers generally on the free-list, and that is one of the important features of that bill. I have before me a list of items produced by the farmers, a table showing the rate of tariff, the amount of the importation of each class, and the amount of tariff paid into the Treasury upon it, and I beclass, and the amount of tariff paid into the Treasury upon it, and I believe these are all articles in which the farmers have an interest, or which are made by the farmers. The list is as follows:

Farmers' products made free by Mills bill.

It will be seen from this table that the aggregate of these articles foots up $39,365,080.13 worth in the importations of last year, and they paid a duty of $11,111,187.56 into the Treasury. This was protection to the farmers in all those items. The Mills bill transfers them all to the free-list. I believe this bill as reported by the Finance Committee here puts most of these articles on the dutiable-list, and I prefer those provisions that put them on the dutiable-list, and to that extent I prefer the bill reported by the Senate committee, and I vote for the tariff on wool because I believe the farmers are entitled to that protection, and I shall vote for the proposition to raise it to the extent proposed by the chairman of the committee.

One word before I sit down in reference to the remark made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] about rice. I thank him for his kind expression in that regard, and think if he will look into the subject carefully and discover the cost of producing rice, the cost of preparing the land necessary for the crop, the contingencies that befall the crop, and the further fact that the planter in Georgia pays for his labor fourteen times as much as the rice-planter in China pays, the Senator will be willing to permit the present tariff on rice to stand as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] to the amendment

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 347, line 1425, after the word "pound,"
I move to strike out the words "two and one-half" and insert "four."
Mr. VEST. What paragraph is that?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Three hundred and forty-seven, which will be read as proposed to be amended.
The Chief Clerk read the paragraph as proposed to be amended, as

347. Wools of the third class, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, including charges in such port, shall be 12 cents or less per pound, 4 cents per pound.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out in that paragraph the word "class" in line 1422.

Mr. ALLISON. I have offered an amendment to that paragraph, to strike out "2½ cents," in line 1425, and insert "4 cents," in behalf of the committee.

Mr. VEST. That is an increase, then, of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1425, it is proposed to strike out " $2\frac{1}{2}$ ," before the word "cents," and insert "4," so as to read: "4 cents per pound."

Mr. VEST. That is an increase of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents upon the text of the bill, from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 cents a pound.

I am obliged to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] for reminding me of the difference between the woolen manufacturers and the woolgrowers. It is not to be expected that a Democrat can understand the plain vernacular of this country, and although I come from a State which has been in the past one of the largest sheep-growing States in the Union and has now a very large number of sheep within its limits, the Senator was kind enough to remind me what a wool-grower was in contradistinction to a wool manufacturer.

But the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] relieved me of any difficulty growing out of my misuse of a single word, when he stated here, what is an open secret and has been known for years and repeated here and elsewhere over and over again, that a combination was made in 1867 between the wool manufacturers and the wool-growers, and that combination has been preserved since that time with remonstrances and protests and attempts on the part of the manufacturers to escape from it, but without success, and to-day it exists in the United States by virtue of a political necessity and nothing else.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] read the whole of it this afternoon in the testimony of Mr. Sampson, in which he stated that he believed that wool ought to be upon the free-list, but he said we could not afford to do it, because the Republican party might lose the votes of the wool-growers of the country.

Now we are told by the Senator from Massachusetts that the manufacturers stand with the wool-growers upon principle. I read here the petition to Congress of 984 manufacturing establishments represented in one petition, and I could read here, if my time permitted, to the exhaustion of my ten minutes, the evidence of the manufacturers that wool ought to go on the free-list, and the reason they give for it is because, not as the Senator from Ohio says, we can raise all sorts of wool in this country, but the weight of authority is overwhelming that we can not raise the fine wools that are necessary in the manufacture of the finer cloths.

Even my distinguished friend from Iowa gave the reason for it, and gave it so succinctly and so distinctly that there can not be any doubt in regard to it. He gave that identical reason, that the foreign wools were absolutely necessary in order to enable American manufacturers to compete as to the finer cloths.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator, I suppose, now is quoting what I said

Mr. Allingor.

The some twenty years ago.

Mr. VEST. In 1879, March 24. That is only ten years ago; and that is nothing in the life of a politician, especially a Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. And the statute has not run in its favor yet.

Mr. ALLISON. What was said then related to combing wools.

Since that time we have become great growers of combing wools, so that what applied then does not apply now, I will say to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I want to make one inquiry as to the rule. Do these interruptions come out of my time?

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has once stated that as each Senator can speak but once and for ten minutes only on any question, interruptions are liable to result in confusion and embarrassment.

Mr. VEST. I do not interrupt anybody.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon of the Senator and of the Chair, and will not interfere with the Senator further.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I repeat that if these manufacturers are in full accord and upon principle stand with the wool-growers of this country, they have got the most remarkable way of demonstrating and showing that fact that has ever been known to mortal man. They swore under oath before the committee that they believed that foreign wool ought to come into this country upon the free-list, and they swore that only one-half the wool that was necessary to the wool manufacture of this country is produced in the United States. They say that 300,000,000 pounds of the foreign import are necessary in order to enable them to compete. Are we to-day making the finer cloths that are necessary to the rich and luxurious?

I saw the other day, and I have it in my pocket, I believe, a statement that the newly-elected Republican governor of Maine recently sent to Germany for uniforms for his staff to be made out of German cloth, costing $250 to the uniform. And yet that gentleman was elected upon the platform of protection to the wool-growers of the United States and the woolen manufacturers of New England. So it goes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment. The Chair announces to visitors in the galleries that manifestations of applause or disapprobation are in violation of the rules of the Senate. The Chair is confident that the suggestion will prevent a repetition of the disorder that has just occurred. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VEST. I do not read as a general thing from newspapers unless they come from the highest authority. This is the Lewiston Evening Journal, owned exclusively, I believe, by an ex-governor of Maine, and a distinguished member of the House of Representatives, one of the most ultra-protectionists within my knowledge, and this is my authority for the statement that the newly-elected governor of Maine sent abroad to Germany because he could not find in the United States cloth which was of sufficiently fine quality in order to put it upon his staff. Here it is:

In Lewiston the governor and staff will be entertained by Worombus En-

Military tailors B. F. Haley & Co., of Newmarket, N. H., were at the Augusta House last evening and measured the staff for uniforms, Mr. BLAIR. They are Democrats.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but they were not Democrats who sent for the uniforms. That is the point. The article proceeds:

The uniforms will be of the finest imported German broadcloth with full gold trappings and trimmings, and will cost about $250 a uniform. Mr. Haley comes to Augusta next week, at which time the uniforms will be fitted.

It is very evident that Governor Burleigh's military staff will be able to carry him through quite a stege.

Mr. President, we can not produce in this country, it seems, the fine cloths which are necessary to suit the luxurious military or civic taste of the distinguished people in New England; and yet we are told by the Senator from Ohio that this country can produce all the wool of all the qualities necessary to enable the American manufacturers to compete with the foreign manufacturers.

Mr. SHERMAN. We produce the finest wool in the world.

Mr. VEST. The finest wool, says the Senator, in the world, but the manufacturers say not, and I can produce their testimony taken before the committees of the other House and of the Senate. If they are to be discredited simply because they are manufacturers, why, Mr. President, they are American citizens. But besides that, like all these other manufacturers, they are consulting their own self-interest. It you will show me a manufacturer in this country who has any aesthetic or philanthropic object in regard to the tariff, I will show you a white crow. They are all actuated by one single object, and that is to make money for themselves.

The whole of this tariff system is simply a game in which the question is, who shall get most by virtue of his being a partner of the Government under this system?

Now, are these woolen manufacturers making money? Why, sir, the testimony is overwhelming that the wool manufacturers of the United States to-day are not making money to anything like the extent that money is made by the cotton manufacturers of the United States. I have here a statement which I commend to Senators on the other side, especially my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, who took me to task because I spoke of the profits made by the cotton manufacturers of New England. Cotton is free; there is no duty on it.

It is true it is produced in this country. There is no tariff on it and the New England manufacturers simply take it with the transportation cost on it from the Southern States. But the cotton manufacturers are flourishing. The statement I refer to is taken from the Providence Evening Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Senator's ten minutes have expired.

Mr. VEST. Then I will put it in on the next heat. Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am very glad that my friend, before he closed, showed the source of his authority to be the Providence Journal, formerly Republican, now Democratic, or more properly perhaps denominated as a Mugwump paper, as his authority. Now let me say a few things in regard to this wool business that will probably relieve my friend from much trouble.

He says the manufacturers of woolen goods in the United States are in favor of free wool. I have seen many of them before the Committee on Finance, many of them in private intercourse; I know many of them in the East, and with the exception of five or six among the prominent manufacturers of woolen goods in the United States, they are thoroughly in favor of a fair and reasonable and liberal duty on wool.

There can be no controversy about this matter, because I have heard from these gentlemen in their associated capacity, in which they state that here and there a man who believes that free wool would give him some advantage, or that he would make his articles at a lower cost, says that he would like to have free wool. But the manufacturers are shrewd men, they are able men; they know that free wool in this country would compel them to go to the markets of the world to purchase all the wool necessary for their supply, and if they were compelled to do that they would lose all the advantage they now derive from the production of three hundred and odd millions of wool for the home market.

The Senator says we can not produce fine wools in this country. He is mistaken there, and utterly mistaken, I will say to him. There was a time when it was not profitable in this country to raise anything but the coarser fabrics of wool; but about twenty years ago, about the time of the passage of the act of 1867, in Vermont, Ohio, and some other States, they commenced raising the finest merino wool in the world, importing from England and from other countries the stock from which it came, and now we produce in this country, it it conceded on all hands, the very finest wool in the world, without exception.

Strange to say, when the act of 1867 was passed there were scarcely strange to say, when the act of 1867 was passed there were scarcely any of these long-wool sheep, called the combing-wool sheep, in this country, but no sooner was the protective tariff imposed by the act of 1867 than the American Yankee imported this class of sheep, and now the combing wool is cheaper than the clothing wool. To my personal knowledge, and probably the knowledge of gentlemen on that side of the Chamber, we are producing now the finest Scotch wools and the various wools of long fiber denominated combing wool of the second

And really the improvements are so remarkable in this country that Englishmen are coming here for stock. They raise mostly the combing wool. It is called, therefore, the English wool. But now we have finer merino wool in the United States of America than is raised in Spain, the parent country of the merino wool, and finer combing wool than is raised anywhere else.

There is a difficulty in manufacturing broadcloths, but it does not lie in the wool but in the manufacture. They have not yet adopted the fine methods of the French, German, and English manufacturers, but they are rapidly approaching them, and I have seen woolen goods in this country—woolen cloths—that were as good as any that can be made anywhere. But, as a matter of course, it is the fashion to wear foreign imported clothes of the most expensive character.

As to the "pride, pomp, and circumstance" of the gentlemen on the staff of the governor of Maine who wanted to go to England or Germany for their goods, they are no worse for this than the Senator from Missouri. He is always a finely dressed gentleman, and I warrant you he is dressed in English clothes. If he chooses to buy imported goods and is willing to pay a liberal price for them, and willing to pay the duty without growling, and therefore indulges in this vanity that these self-styled aides-de-camp of a governor of Maine indulged in, that is all well and good. But if you give to the wool-growers of this country the same average rate of duty that you give others, they will not only get the finest growth of wool but more of it.

The difficulty heretofore in this country has not been on account of

The difficulty heretofore in this country has not been on account of fine wools, but carpet wools. It was shown that in New Mexico and other places they do raise carpet wools to a certain extent, but it was more profitable to raise the finer class of wool. Therefore, our manufacturers scour the werld to get cheaper and coaser wool for the purpose of manufacturing carpets—wool strong enough and good enough for that purpose—and those wools are brought here, wools that cost only 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, or 12 cents a pound in foreign countries, because they are coarse and cheap, but the fine wool can be supplied in America, and I think the coarse wool will be in a short time.

This proposition is simply to cure a defect in the old law of 1867.

This proposition is simply to cure a defect in the old law of 1867. Under the old law of 1867 when wool was washed the duty was doubled. But that duty did not apply to every carpet wool or combing wool. Why? Because at that time we did not have any combing wools in this country, and it was the policy to encourage their importation and growth. Therefore there was omitted in regard to wool the provision that doubled the duty on washed combing wool and carpet wools. Those goods are now introduced at the single rate and the minimum rate, and this is only an effort to apply the rule that where the wools are advanced by washing they shall pay a higher rate of duty.

The duties here are not enough. I at least, in the interest of woolgrowers, have demaded that the same rate be applied to combing wool and carpet wool, but it was thought best not to make any radical distinction in the existing rate, and therefore the wool-men were compelled to yield, but got on carpet wools an advance of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  on one grade, and 3 cents on another grade. That is all they could get, and they had to be content. But I say that these rates on the two lower classes of wool are too low. The same rule applied to clothing wool should be applied here, that when advanced by washing and doubled in value it should be doubled in duty. That is now amended somewhat by this scant amendment, insufficient in character.

I hope the House of Representatives when it comes to this bill will mete out the same measure of justice to the farmers that is now measured out to the manufacturers. When the wool is advanced from an unwashed state and doubled in value I hope the rate of duty will be doubled. This is an endeavor to get something in that direction.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the Senator says that the manufacturers are in favor of free wool, but he must recollect that when gentlemen on this side of the Chamber down beingin favor of free trade they men on this side of the Chamber deny being in favor of free trade they are always reminded that their arguments lead directly to free trade. The same thing, sir, can be said of all the wool manufacturers. Although they deny being in favor of free wool for the reason assigned by Mr. Sampson, of Boston, that the votes of the wool-producers are absolutely necessary for those who desire to keep the duty on manufactured wool, yet all their arguments lead directly and inevitably to free wool.

One of the strange things connected with our history and our circumstances seems to be our greatness coupled with our weakness and our inability to do anything.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true.

Mr. VANCE. We are always told that an American workingman is the best in the world, and I believe it; we are also told that Yankee machinery is the best in the world, and I believe that. We are also We are also told that the output of work in given times and under given circumstances in America is always best.

The Senator has told us that we raise the best wool in the world and that we have the finest country in the world for raising wool and for producing almost everything else, and I believe all that. And yet, sir, the moment that one of these inferior men from Europe makes his appearance in competition with us, we knock under. [Laughter.]
You recollect what Scotty Briggs said to the parson. Said he, "Somehow or other, Parson, whenever you hits out with your left, I hunts grass." [Laughter.]

Whenever a pauper attempts to compete with us in anything, then we need the protection and the prayers of the church. [Laughter.] Before the echo of our boasting has died away we commence crying the inability of this country to compete with anybody in the manufacture of or the doing of anything!

Now, sir, our country is so great that it can not afford to raise cheap wool! Then, in the name of common sense, does not political economy dictate that we should raise our fine wools and apply them to the puroses for which they are fitted, and buy the cheap wool of foreign countries to which Providence has not been so liberal?

Mr. President, this is a great subject. The interest in it has reached from one end of this country to the other. It has aroused, as I have been informed, even the rustic muse, and I have been furnished with an effusion of that muse, with the request that I lay it before the Senate. It is designated-

A girl with one stocking—a protective pastoral. Composed and arranged for the old spinning-wheel, and respectfully dedicated to that devoted friend of protected machinery and high taxes, the Senator from Rhode Island.

[Laughter.]

It begins somewhat in this way, Mr. President:

A GIRL WITH ONE STOCKING-A PROTECTIVE PASTORAL.

[Composed and arranged for the old spinning-wheel; and respectfully dedicated to that devoted friend of protected machinery and high taxes, the Senator from Rhode Island.]

Our Mary had a little lamb, And her heart was most intent To make its wool, beyond its worth, Bring fifty-six per cent.

But a pauper girl across the sea, Had a small lamb also, Whose wool for less than half that sum She'd willingly let go.

Another girl, who had no sheep, Nor stockings, wool, or flax, But money just enough to buy A pair without the tax, Went to the pauper girl to get Some wool to shield her feet, And make her stockings not of tax, But both of wool complete.

When Mary saw the girl's design, She straight began to swear She'd make her buy both wool and tax, Or let one leg go bare.

So she cried out "'Protect' me from That pauper's sheep wool free, If made to keep both her legs warm What will 'encourage' me?"

So it was done, and people said Where'er that poor girl went One leg was warmed with wool and one With fifty-six per cent.

VIII.

Now praise to Mary and her lamb Who did this scheme invent, To clothe one-half a girl in wool And one-half in per cent.

All honor, too, to Mary's friends, And all protection's acts; Who cheaply clothe the rich in wool And wrap the poor in tax!

[Laughter.] [Laughter.]
This pastoral, sir, I commend seriously and earnestly to those gentlemen on that side of the Chamber who have raised the duties on raw wool to begin with, and who, as I hope to be able to demonstrate as we progress in this bill, have raised the price of every article made of wool which is in use by the poor of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion to amend the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

343. Wools of the same class, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 12 cents per pound, 6 cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. On line 1429 I move, on behalf of the Committee on Finance, to strike out the word "six" and insert "eight," so as to read "8 cents per pound." Mr. VEST. I move, sir, to strike out "eight" and insert "five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five cents per pound.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Ohio made the issue squarely in both of his addresses to the Senate, that in the United States we could produce all classes of wool necessary to the manufacture of all sorts of cloth. I have before me the testimony, taken before the Senate Finance Committee, of Mr. John L. Hayes, on behalf of the National Associa-tion of Wool Manufacturers, and his statement is emphatic. He says:

Committee, of Mr. John E. Hayes, on behalf of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, and his statement is emphatic. He says:

Lest we drift insensibly into the dangerous doctrine of restricting the importation of wool, let us consider the practical impossibility of this country's supplying all the varieties of wool necessary for an advanced manufacture. The farmers of the country grow wool without the slightest respect to the wants of manufacturers. They grow the sheep which can be raised and bred most cheaply, produce the heaviest fleeces and wool fetching the most remunerative price. Fortunately the necessities of the farmer and manufacturer have reacted upon each other in creating a wool, with a demand for the same, which is most profitable both to the farmer and manufacturer.

This wool, essentially of merino blood, but possessing peculiar characteristics derived from our soil, climate, and methods of culture, is known as American fleece. This wool, of unsurpassed excellence for its purposes, supplies the great bulk of the raw material consumed in our mills. Its possession by America is a priceless inheritance. Its destruction, by an abolition of the wool duties, would be a national sacrilege.

It is needless to say that these wools do not supply all the wants of an advanced manufacture. We need fine wool for broadcloths and face goods like the wool from the Saxons or old merinos. Fifty years ago the hills of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and even New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut, swarmed with sheep of this race. The highest prize given for fine wool at the great London Exhibition was awarded to wool grown in Tennessee.

In the Pan Handle district of Pennsylvania and Ohio the Electoral race, producing wools equal in fineness and softness to those of Siberia and Germany, has been developed, acclimated, and hardened. But these priceless flocks have been permitted to be absorbed into the coarser American merinos, and it is believed that scarcely a thousand remain as relics of the Electoral blood, whic

I will not emulate the Senator from Ohio by giving personal experience, but I know that prior to the war in the State of Missouri these merino sheep, brought there from Pennsylvania and from Virginia and West Virginia, then old Virginia, were permitted to come there and mingle with the ordinary sheep of the country until this fine Electoral breed, of which Mr. Hayes speaks, has ceased to be known.

Now, the Senator says, if his remarks amount to anything, that the tariff has protected the farmers of this country and increased the production of wool. I have bern though I will not take the time to duction of wool. I have here—though I will not take the time to read it—the report of the Statistical Bureau, giving from 1867 to 1883 inclusive the production of wool in the United States.

In 1867 we had the highest wool tariff we have ever had—the tariff to which the manufacturer and the wool-grower both look back with regret. In their evidence they express the opinion that if they could get back the tariff rates of 1867 there would be an Elysium in this country as to the wool interest. Let us see the effect of the highest tariff in 1867:

Wool produced in the United States

	Pounds.
1867
1869	162,000,000

A falling off of 6,000,000 pounds from 1867, when the law was enacted, to 1869, two years afterwards. The production in the United States in 1870 was 160,000,000 pounds, a falling off of 2,000,000 pounds

	Pounds.
1871	150,000,000
1872	158,000,000
1873	170,000,000
1874	181,000,000
1875	192,000,000
1876	200, 000, 000
1877	208, 250, 000
1878	211,000,000
1879	232, 500, 000
1880	240, 000, 000
1881	272,000,000
1882	290, 000, 000

Showing that the tariff had nothing to do with the production of wool in the United States.

I have in a pamphlet, prepared by Mr. Patterson, of Pittsburgh, the most intelligent and correct exhibits of the wool industry and production, and the prices of wool, that it has ever been my fortune to encounter. I have not time to read, of course, all that he says on this question, but I will ask that a portion of it be inserted in my remarks. Of course I desire to put it in some sort of authorized shape. I will read his conclusion. He says:

It is plain beyond all question that the price the wool-grower receives for his clip is not regulated by the tariff, nor by the tariff in connection with the price of foreign wool of the same grade. He sometimes receives better prices when the tariff is low than when it is high; he sometimes receives much more than the foreign price, with duty added, and sometimes less.

The official tables carry out that statement of Mr. Patterson abso-Intely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How do you account for it?

Mr. VEST. It is not for me to account for it. I am here fighting an increase of prices, and when the assertion is made that a high protective tariff increases the production of wool in this country, I give the tables to show that it does not, but that after the tariff of 1867, which is the paragon of perfection with the wool-men of the country, the production of wool went down in the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—
Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator know—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?
Mr. VEST. No, sir; I can not. I must decline to yield to anybody; my time is limited.

Mr. MITCHELL. I dispute the facts stated by the Senator. I say that the production of wool increased.

Mr. VEST. I propose now to make good my statement that the cotton manufacturers of the United States have progressed in profits and in dividends far beyond the wool manufacturers of the country, though cotton has no tariff on it and wool has had the tariff of 1867 and then the tariff of 1883.

My friend from Massachusetts stated some time ago that the cotton manufacturers of New England were making on an average a profit of 5 per cent. Here, Mr. President, is a table of dividends and of profits up to December, 1888, which I desire to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. What is that?

Mr. VEST. It is a statement of the Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to take up my ten minutes in reading

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I object to it going in the RECORD.
Mr. VEST. Then I will read as much as I can of it and I will read no more

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take the best part.

Mr. VEST. I want the Senator from Vermont to understand that if he is discourteous enough to consume my ten minutes by asking me to read a statement of this sort, I shall not comply with it; that is all. Here is the report. The total capital on which dividends were based amounts to $17,358,000.

Mr. HOAR. Where? What capital:
Mr. VEST. The Fall River manufactories. What capital? What business?

Mr. HOAR. A single company?
Mr. VEST. This statement is headed, first, "Comparison of the mill-stock prices of the year"—up to December 31, 1888; then the quarterly dividend, then the year's stock business. Here are the different manufactories.

Mr. HOAR. Are you talking about cotton or wool?
Mr. VEST. About cotton. I take it that these are all cotton manufactories.

If the Senator had done me the honor to listen to me for even a minute he would have found out that I stated that cotton paid no import duty, and yet these cotton manufacturers are in a much more prosperous condition than the woolen manufacturers of the country, who are buying wool from abroad to mix with American wool and paying this duty on it.

Mr. DAWES. Did you think it would make any difference if they did not?

Mr. VEST. I think the experience with hides, as soon as we put hides on the free-list, and with the cotton business when cotton is admitted free, and when the only extra is the cost of transportation from the cotton States

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Senator be allowed to proceed to read the paper. Mr. VEST.

If the Senator wants it read he can have it read. Mr. EDMUNDS. I will ask it to be read. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator be permitted to read the paper. Mr. SHERMAN. I must call attention to the fact that the Senator can not speak twice on the same point.

Mr. CHACE. I am perfectly well aware that the question of the dividends of cotton manufacturers of Fall River, or whether they make any dividends, has nothing whatever to do with the duty on wool, but inasmuch as the Senator has introduced that table, I desire to say (for I am perfectly familiar with that statement, I know all about it) that a great many of these establishments have run year after year without making any dividends at all.

Some of them have sunk their whole capital and have had to pay in anew, to be reorganized. Many others have had to enlarge their capital, to call in new capital, and others still have paid but very small dividends, and some of the mills I think in that city have paid no dividends at all. I submit therefore that it is not fair to publish here an article which was put in that paper on purpose to be used during the campaign as a free-trade argument to show that there should be no duty put upon wool.

I know my friend from Missouri does not mean to use this thing in a wrong sense; I know he does not mean to strain this, but it is not the first time that the Senator from Missouri has been misled by that paper.

Mr. VEST. That is just published; it was not in the campaign. It has only just been published.

I can not help that; we have just had a campaign and it is a reprint of old campaign material; it is a new thrashing of old straw. I do not wish to occupy the whole of my ten minutes, but I say that it is unfair to cite recent dividends of these mills, for they have run year after year, many of them making no dividends at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now withdraw the objection that I made to my friend from Missouri putting in the RECORD any statistics that he likes. My objection at that moment was that I wished to hear him state what those statistics were, in order that we might understand them, but as he has not had time to do it in his ten minutes I withdraw the objection

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter desired by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] to be inserted in the RECORD will be so inserted if there be no objection.

The matter is as follows:

[From "Superiority of Democratic Administration," by D. F. Patterson.]

If no market is as nonows.

[From "Superiority of Democratic Administration," by D. F. Patterson.]

A comparison of the prices with the rate of duty prevailing at the time will conclusively show that the home prices are not regulated or apparently affected by the rate of duty, either alone or in connection with the foreign prices.

The act of June 10, 1826, imposed a duty of 15 per cent. on wool not costing over 10 cents per pound, and 30 per cent. on wool costing over 10 cents in 826, 40 cents in 1827, 45 cents in 1828 and 1829.

The act of January 2, 1830, provided a duty of 4 cents per pound, and 45 per cent. ad valorem in addition; which was increased to 4 cents and 50 per cent. ad valorem in addition; which was increased to 4 cents and 50 per cent. ad valorem on the act of June 20, 1830. The New York and Boston price in 1830 was 55 cents, and 71 cents in 1831.

The act of July 14, 1832, provided a duty of 4 cents per pound and 40 per cent. ad valorem on wool costing over 8 cents per pound, while wool not costing over 8 cents was admitted free of duty. During the operation of that act the New York and Boston prices were as follows, to wit: Fifty-six cents in 1832, 63 cents in 1833, 64 cents in 1834 and 1835, 67 cents in 1836, 63 cents in 1837, 50 cents in 1838, 57 cents in 1839, 1842, provided a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem on wool not costing over 7 cents per pound, and 3 cents per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem on wool costing over 7 cents per pound. The New York and Boston prices in 1842 were 43 cents; 44 cents in 1844; 42 cents in 1845; 38 cents in 1846.

The act of December 5, 1846, provided a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem on imported wool. Under the operation of that act the New York and Boston prices in 1850; 47 cents in 1851; 47 cents in 1852; 59 cents in 1853; 49 cents in 1854.

The prices received by T. M. Patterson, in Washington County, Pennsylvania, were 35 cents in 1851; 47 cents in 1852; 50 cents in 1853; 49 cents in 1854 in 1856 in was 50 cents.

creept the product of British North American creept the white was activited faces. The New York and Boston price in 1855 was 46 cents; in 1856; twas 55 faces.

The act of July 1, 1857, provided a duty of 24 per cent, ad valorem on wool costing over 20 cents per pound, and admitted all other foreign wool free. The New York and Boston prices were 53 cents in 1857; 45 cents in 1859; 59 cents in 1859; 54 cents in 1859; 55 cents in 1850; 55 cent

50 cents in 1873 and 1874; 48 cents in 1875; 40 cents in 1876; 42 cents in 1873; 37 cents in 1878; 35 cents in 1879; 48 cents in 1880; 42 cents in 1881; 41 cents in 1882; T. M. Patterson received 50 cents (about 44, gold) in 1872, 1873, and 1874; 42 cents (gold, 37) in 1875; 35 cents (gold, 37) in 1876; 36 cents (gold, 37) in 1876; 36 cents (gold, 37) in 1876; 36 cents (gold, 37) in 1876; 30 cents in 1881 and 1882.

The London price reached 33 cents in February, 1872, then suddenly dropped to 25 cents in 1881, and 1872; 45 cents in 1880; 40 cents in 1881 and 1882.

The London price reached 33 cents in February, 1872, then suddenly dropped to 25 cents in 1881, and 1874; in 1876 it varied from 29 cents; to 25 cents; in 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879, from 27 cents to 22 cents; from September, 1879, there was a gradual advance from 22 cents up to 30 cents in 1881, 1880 eprice was never below 23 cents nor above 25 cents; in 1882 the price was 26 cents steadily throughout the year.

The act of March 3, 1883, struck off the ad valorem duties provided by the act of 1887, on classes I and 2, and modified the rate so as to make the duty 10 cents per pound on wools costing 30 cents or less, and 12 cents per pound on wools costing over 30 cents. Wool of class 3, costing 12 cents or less, duty 24 cents per pound, and 5 cents on wool costing over 12 cents.

The New York and Boston prices under the operation of that act, which is the law now in force, have been as follows, to wit: Forty cents in 1883, 35 cents in 1884, 31 cents 1885, 30 cents in 1885, 32 cents in 1885, 32 cents in 1886, 32 cents in 1886, 33 cents in 1887, in 1886 the 32 cents, in 1884 the section of the 1887, in 1886 the 32 cents, in 1884 the section of the 1887, in 1886 the decline continued until it reached 19 cents in September, and avanced to 20 cents in 1884 cents, until the latter part of the year it reached 23 cents, in 1885 the decline continued until it reached 19 cents in September, and avanced to 20 cents in 1887 to 1883, the price of wool exceeded 50

The conclusion is irresistible that it was not the duty that gave the wool-grower 15 to 17 cents above the cost, duty paid, of foreign wool in 1869, and 3 to 4 cents below the foreign price, duty added, in 1837. If foreign competition in wool was so dangerous as partisan alarmists would have the wool-growers believe, why was not the country flooded with 33-cent foreign wool in 1869, when the home price was 48 cents?

It is play beyond all custion, that the price the wool-grower receives for his nome price was 48 cents?

It is plain, beyond all question, that the price the wool-grower receives for his clip is not regulated by the tariff, nor by the tariff in connection with the price of foreign wool of the same grade. He sometimes receives better prices when the tariff is low than when it is high; he sometimes receives much more than the foreign price with duty added, and sometimes less.

COMPARISON OF MILL-STOCK PRICES OF THE YEAR,—THE QUARTERLY DIVI-DENDS,—THE YEAR'S PRINT-CLOTH BUSINESS,

There is usually a boom in the print-cloth business in Presidential years, at least such has been the case since 1872, and 1888 has proved no exception to the rule.

The Fall River mills have been running at full clip, and have turned off 8,863,000 pieces of goods. The demand has been in excess of this enormous production, and perhaps never in the history of manufacturing has the average stock left in manufacturers' hands from week to week been so light, while the year closes with the market here stripped of goods, and with the mills oversold some 120,000 pieces. The estimated stock in the country Saturday, December 29, was but 14,000 pieces, as compared with 221,000 pieces in 1886.

The mills in this city have contracted to deliver 157,000 pieces for January.

pieces in 1886.

The mills in this city have contracted to deliver 155,000 pieces for January, 129,000 pieces for February, and 110,000 pieces for March, while April and May deliveries foot up some 30,000 pieces more. The highest price at which 64 by 64 goods have been quoted during the past twelve months has been 4 cents, the lowest 3½ cents, and the average 3.8085 cents.

The following table gives a review of the year's business in Fall River, the prices mentioned being the quotation at the close of each week:

DIVIDENDS.

For the year ending December 31, 1888, the Fall River mills have paid in dividends to stockholders $1,710,790, as compared with $1,427,990 in 1887, an increase of $282,800. This amount of money does not represent the actual earnings, as in many instances debts have been wiped out and a portion of the profits applied to improvements. The following list, prepared by Messrs. G. M. Haffards & Co., shows the per cent. in dividends declared by each corporation during the various quarters:

The American Linen Company has paid $90 on a share. It paid $55 for 1887. The Bourne Mills have paid 16 per cent. as compared with 14 per cent. last year. The first three dividends declared by the Border City Manufacturing Company were paid on a capital of $800,000 and the last on a capital of $1,000,000. The Davol Mills have paid 2 per cent. on a capital of $300,000.

The corporation was reorganized May 7. Stockholders in the Troy Cotton and Woolen Manufactory have received $100 on each share, par value of shares $500; $85 on a share were paid last year. A few of the mills have declared what are called extra dividends. The Stafford skipped its last dividend. It has been robbed and is building a new factory. The total capital on which dividends were based amounts to $17,358,000, and dividends averaged 9.85 plus per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I will try to take up the subject of wool for a moment and will try not to occupy one-half of my time.

I will continue the reading concerning what followed the tariff act of the 2d of March, 1867. I will begin where the Senator from Missouri did and will go through the list which he had not time to read. I read, I believe, from the very same paper that he did, as he has kindly loaned the book to my friend from Massachusetts, and so to me. I leave off the smaller figures so as to save time:

	Pounds.
1867	168,000,000
1868
1869	162, 000, 000
1870	160,000,000
1871	150,000,000
1872	158, 000, 000
1873	170,000,000
1874	181,000,000
1875	192,000,000
1876	200, 000, 000
1877	208, 250, 000
	211,000,000
	232, 500, 000
	240, 600, 000
1881	272,000,000
1882	290,000,000
1883	300,000,000

So it will be seen, reading the very statistical table that my honorable friend read, a part of that, the final result or the final following, call it result, as a consequence or not, the thing ran up instead of running down. Therefore the argument of my honorable and distinguished friend would fall upon his theory.

But how does it happen that we have so much zeal upon this subject if the statement of the Senator from Missouri be correct (as he believes it to be, I have no doubt) that the tariff upon wool, as he stated it has no effect when the price of wool that the farmer is to get believes it to be, I have no doubt) that the tariif upon wool, as he stated it, has no effect upon the price of wool that the farmer is to get for his production? If it has not any effect, what has anybody to complain of in putting up the duty? I should be glad to have somebody tell me that, for if putting the duty down does not hurt the farmer, why will putting the duty up hurt the manufacturer?

It is in the long run, as everybody knows, a question of demand and supply, and the cost that the manufacturer or wearer of woolen goods has to pay for his commodities is just as the price of land may be in Connecticut $100 an acre and in Missouri $50, and the farmer in Connecticut and the farmer in Missouri having exactly the same number of sheep of the same kind and the same breed, the Missouri farmer can raise his wool cheaper by the difference between the value of the land which is necessary to keep those sheep on than the farmer in Connecticut can. Then it will depend upon the market for wool, the demand and the supply, as to whether the farmer in Connecticut or the farmer in Missouri will make the greater or less profits. That is what

So it seems to me, if my honorable friend is right in his supposition that the tariff makes no difference, he and his friends on that side are wasting a vast deal of valuable time in trying to prevent a change which, on his theory, can not do anybody in the world any harm.

But my honorable friend says that the Americans have run out in their capacity to produce the finer grades of wool; that the art is lost and that the finest of wools are no longer produced in the United States. I beg to assure him that I know in the rough and mountainous country of Vermont the original breeds in great numbers are still produced in all their fineness, and still grow better than when they came half a century ago from France and Spain.

They are infinitely better than they were then, and better, as I believe, than anywhere else on the face of the globe except as they are reproduced in the high territory perhaps of Missouri, certainly in the higher Western region that is best suited for these fine wools, and in California, that go out over all the world, to the English colonies of Australia, giving the means of producing the grades of wool that are the finest in the world. Ship-load after ship-load every year, coming from my little State, not to mention all the others that raise similar sheep, goes to Australia and to English and other colonies and foreign countries in order that the improved quality of wool that the United States has produced from this original French and Spanish stock may be again reproduced all over the world.

It is useless, therefore, to say that the United States are incapable of producing on three-quarters of the wool farms of the country, taking the mountains of North Carolina and South Carolina as well, and the plains of the great West from the north to the south, where the climate is not low and damp, wool as fine as can be grown anywhere in Cau-casus or elsewhere on the face of the globe; and it only needs that on the principle of helping each other we should help this industry which affects the farmers (of whom so many of our friends on the other side have professed, and I have no doubt with sincerity or what they think is sincerity, to be the friends) who make up the great majority of the people of the United States. I am amazed, therefore, that our friends who have been talking so loudly about the farmer should now turn around and say that he shall not have this protection upon his wool.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison]. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1429 it is proposed to strike out of the amendment "eight" and insert "five;" so as to read:

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1429 it is proposed to strike out the word "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Mr. VEST. I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Vermont, when he states that the statistical tables bear out the assertion that the tariff has affected the production of wool in the United States, that this conclusion is manifestly incorrect and can not be deduced from those conclusion is manifestly incorrect and can not be deduced from mose statistics, but entirely the opposite conclusion is irresistible. If the tariff increased the production of wool, then after the enactment of the high tariff of 1867 that production ought to have increased.

Those tables show that it did not increase, but that it fell off in 1868, 1869, 1870, and 1871. It is very true that up to 1883 the production of wool had increased to 300,000,000 pounds, but look at the vest increase in the population of this country. Look at the increase vast increase in the population of this country. Look at the increase in every other product of the country. Look at the large area of sheep land that had been opened up. Look at the immense State of Texas, where the sheep culture, as the State had become populated and the western and southwestern counties had been turned into sheep-raising counties, added to the crop of wool in this country. And in Cali-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield? Mr. VEST. It will come out of my time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask just one question. It will take only a moment.

Mr. VEST. The Senator can speak in his own time.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri declines to yield, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VEST. Has not everything else in this country increased be-tween 1867 and 1883? There has been a general and rapid increase in product. But when Senators on the other side say that a high protective tariff increases the production of wool, and I point to the fact that after the enactment of the high protective tariff of 1867, at first apparently a legislative protection to the wool industry of this country, the production of wool fell off, of course I shall be met with some reason connected with the product of wool in these respective years which is local in its character.

If the tariff has that effect, why did it not overcome these local and sporadic influences and give us a gradual increase from that time on? The figures do not sustain that allegation. That is all I propose to say about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The causes which led to a decline in the production of sheep and in the price of wool in this country for the years following 1867 are well known to those who are familiar with the industrial history of the country. The American civil war produced a cotton famine, which led to a greatly increased consumption of light woolen fabrics the world over. The war itself created an abnormal demand for clothing, and accelerated the great increase in the dem and for This was followed by an abnormal increase in the production of wool in every wool-producing country of the world.

In 1866, after the close of our war, it became apparent that cotton was to resume its natural place as one of the leading fibers for producing the cloth for the clothing of the people of the world. The close of ing the cloth for the clothing of the people of the world. The close of hostilities here not only stopped the abnormal demand for clothing for the Army, but threw upon the American market a large amount of cloth which had been manufactured into clothing for our troops.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of wool?

Mr. ALDRICH. Out of wool. The Government of the United States sold, as I remember, more than 3,000,000 overcoats at one time.

These things together nearly brought about a collapse of the wool-producing industry of the world. The fact that prices declined in the United States and that the wool production of the United States fell off was not owing in any sense to the tariff of 1867, but to the causes which I have alluded to.

The decline in the prices of wool in England, Germany, Australia, and South America was very much greater than it was in the United States, as can be very easily shown by a statement of the relative prices between the years 1867 and 1870. The recovery of prices here was very much more rapid and took place at a very much earlier period than in any of the other countries to which I have alluded.

I think it is safe to say (and this statement will be verified, I think, by any one who will give the subject careful investigation) that the tariff of 1867 saved the wool industry of the United States from total and absolute collapse; and as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] very well says, it put hundreds of millions of dollars into the pockets of our farmers.

There was one other cause which led to the great decrease in the number of sheep in the United States in the years following 1867. During the war, when the prices of wool were abnormally high, sheep of an inferior character had been produced in various parts of the United States as sheep, growing was profitable without regard to the amount of the clip, and without regard to the inferiority of breed.

When the war closed and this great decline in the prices of wool took place (because the decline commenced prior to the adoption of the act of 1867), the retention of these inferior sheep throughout the United States was no longer profitable and they were sold for mutton. Almost coincident with this, or growing out of it, more attention was paid to the breeding of merino sheep in Ohio and in various parts of the coun-The inferior sheep were exchanged by the farmers of the country for sheep of the merino blood.

All of these facts taken together produced the state of affairs to which the Senator from Missouri has alluded, and they had no relation whatever to the adoption of the act of 1867, which actually saved the wool industry, as I have stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the fact referred to by the Senator from Missouri is a conceded, well-known fact. It has often been commented upon in the Senate, and is known to every wool-grower and woolen manufacturer in the country.

After the tariff of 1867, it so happened that in Ohio and in nearly all the wool-growing States the number of sheep declined, and the quantity of wool clipped for two or three years decreased to some extent, as the Senator has stated. That led to one of the most remarkable facts in sheep production that ever happened in this or perhaps in any other

The tariff of 1867 for the first time gave to the farmers an inducement to raise fine wool. Then a duty was imposed of 10 and 12 cents a pound on clothing-wool, and the same duty on combing-wool, which is a higher rate of duty than ever before, so far as my recollection goes, provided in the tariff law. The result was that the common sheep of the country were gradually superseded by merino and the English blooded wool. Valuable animals in Vermont, where this industry had been early started, bore almost fabulous prices, I think running up to thousands of dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some sheep were sold for $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Vermont says, $4,000 or $5,000 was paid for valuable animals. They were carried to Ohio and to the West. Up to that time Ohio raised what was ordinarily called the common merchant wool of the country, mainly founded upon the common breeds of the country, and these fine-blood sheep were sub-stituted in place of the others. The English sheep began to be cultivated, and the result was that in a very few years the growth of sheep in this country increased rapidly and enormously. The figures read by the Senator do not continue down to the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I read all the Senator from Missouri had in his

Mr. SHERMAN. Up to the time when the tariff act of 1883 was passed the number of sheep in this country (and it is shown by the census table) had reached over 50,000,000, one to each inhabitant. In Ohio, the statistics of which I am more familiar with-and there the sheep statistics are made a part of the returns of the proper officers of the State—they had 1,800,000 sheep in 1867, and in 1883 they had 5,000. 000 sheep. In 1867 they had nothing but the common sheep, while in 1883 they had as good sheep as any in the world. They then commenced supplying the West with these valuable animals, and at that time we had reached 5,000,000 sheep, all of them very valuable.

Then another result occurred. Instead of the fleeces yielding 2 or 3 pounds on an average, they yielded 7, 8, and 10 pounds to the fleece, so that every sheep represented a value of three or four times as much, counting the quality and counting the yield of the fleece.

Another remarkable result occurred. When the tariff was interfered with a considerable reduction was made on the duty; not so large as one would suppose, but about 20 per cent. of the ad valorem duty was wiped away. The reduction was 20 per cent., if I remember aright.

one would suppose, but about the process of the would suppose, but about the process.

Mr. ALLISON. Ten per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. The duty was reduced 10 per cent., and the result which immediately followed was the decline of sheep-growing not only in Ohio but in the United States, so that in five years the number of sheep had decreased nearly one-third. The number of sheep in Ohio was reduced from 5,000,000 to 3,700,000, and the number of sheep in the United States was reduced from 50,000,000 to 44,000,000, and the the United States was reduced from 50,000,000 to 44,000,000, and the loss of the clip on the sheep that were thus grown was a loss to the people of the United States of $60,000,000 a year.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senator from Ohio pointed that out

in 1883

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; that was a matter fully and fairly discussed. The result that has happened is that taking off this protection, taking away from the farmer the inducement to raise these expensive and fine flocks, reduced the number of sheep in the United States and in Ohio nearly one-third. It reduced the clip to 60,000,000 pounds; so that we are now far behind what we were in 1883, and the loss to the people of this country, in a recent estimate which I have seen made up, has been over $300,000,000.

It is an amazing loss. If that protection had been seen that the lost of the people of this country.

It is an amazing loss. If that protection had been continued from 1883 to this time, instead of having now 40,000,000 sheep in the United States we would by the natural progress of the previous years, have come up from 1880 to 100,000,000 sheep, and instead of 320,000,000 pounds of yield we would have had probably 600,000,000 pounds from American sheep. That is more than all the wool now produced in the United States, and all the wool that is now used for carpet purposes.

Mr. President, this question that we are now discussing, although it is only a matter of a few cents a pound, is a matter of infinite importance to the people of the United States. I believe that the passage of this bill and the adoption of these paragraphs, inducing the farmers again to turn their attention to sheep-raising and wool-growing, will be of more service to our countrymen in all parts of the Union, in Texas as well as in Ohio, and in all the country West, than any other features of the bill.

My only regret here is that the Committee on Finance were not willing to give to this industry the protection it ought to have. They ought to have given for washed wool 5 and 10 cents instead of 4 and 8 cents, as is proposed here. They ought to have given on combing wool twice the amount of the duty on washed wool. But the committee were not prepared to make any radical changes here

I am sorry they did not, because I believe if the subject was discussed Senators on both sides would see that whatever might be said in regard to the duty on woolens, the wool industry ought to be protected, and our farmers ought to be encouraged not only to increase the number of their sheep, but to improve the quality of the sheep. There is no doubt that on our Western plains we could produce all the sheep needed in the

It is sometimes asked, Why give this large protection? Why need wool be protected? It is because wool comes into competition with the cheapest production of the most inferior races of mankind. Wool is produced wild in Australia, in South America, in Russia, in all the vast plains that are almost uninhabited. But now if we continue the old system of improving our sheep, as a matter of course we shall overcome these difficulties and we can finally export wool.

I look upon this proposition as extremely important, and I hope there will be no further delay about agreeing to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison].

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.
Mr. ALLISON. Before passing from paragraph 348 I move to strike out "same" and insert "third;" so as to read: "Wools of the third

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk. In line 1426 it is proposed to strike out the word same "and to insert "third;" so as to read:

Wools of the third class, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to object to the amendment?

Mr. VEST. No, sir. I rise to speak to it.

I wish to say simply a few words in reply to the Senator from Ohio, who ascribes to the tariff act of 1883 the decrease in the number of sheep in his State from 1883 until the last year, which I believe was the time he fixed, from 50,000,000 to 40,000,000. I think that was his statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. The number has decreased to 44,000,000. I stated that the number of sheep now estimated to be in the United States is 44,000,000.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator to say there had been a large decrease in sheep in his State.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, from 5,000,000 to 3,700,000. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] has the figures showing the decline in the whole country.

Mr. TELLER. In 1887 the total number of sheep was 43,544,755.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was within the figures. In Ohio we know what Mr. Shekman. I was within the figures. In Ohio we know what it is, because it is returned every spring by the auditor of each county, and each particular tax-payer is bound to make those returns. I know there the number has decreased from a little over 5,000,000 to three million seven hundred and some odd thousand.

Mr. VEST. The Senator ascribes that to the reduction of duties in 1883 from the tariff act of 1867.

Mr. SHERMAN. It commenced then.

Mr. VEST. Is not that decrease of sheep in the State of Ohio to be ascribed to the increase in the value of land? That has been the case in Missouri.

When I went to Missouri, which was a good many years ago, I found one single gentleman with a flock of 8,000 sheep in Pettis County, Missouri. In 1857-'58 he sold those sheep to a syndicate in Texas. No tariff had anything to do with that sale. He sold them because the Missouri Pacific Railroad was built through that county and the increase in the value of his land made it entirely unprofitable for him to devote it to sheep.

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to that is that in Ohio our lands have not increased in value in the last year on account of the rivalry of Western lands, and I suppose it is so in all the Eastern States.

Mr. VEST. That has been the case with us west of the Mississippi River. No tariff has affected the deportation of sheep from those States to Texas and California.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But take the whole country.

Mr. VEST. In the whole country there has been a decrease in the number of sheep, because in the older States the raising of sheep has been abandoned to a very great extent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But why?

Mr. VEST. Because it was no longer profitable, owing to the price of land. The tariff had nothing to do with it. The question was when a man's land had gone up to $50, $60, $75, and $100 an acre, whether he could not devote it to a more profitable use than to raising sheep. That has been the cause of it, and the decrease in the United States has come largely from the same cause.

It is true that there have been a great many lands opened up to sheep culture in California and Texas, but the increase there in the number of sheep has not made up for the change in the other States throughout the Union.

Now, I wish to make one other remark and I am done with this paragraph. I neglected to make it before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think it to be true, inasmuch as we all appear to be satisfied that the quantity of sheep in the United States, and so the production of wool, decreased after 1883, that the importation of foreign wools, raised in whatever way, increased in just the same proportion substantially?

Mr. VEST. I do not know but that that is to a certain extent true. Mr. EDMUNDS. To the full extent.

Mr. VEST. As I understand this question, all the American wools require so much of the foreign wool to be mixed with them in order to produce the qualities which the manufacturer finds most profitable. Mr. EDMUNDS. But that would not quite answer my question, if

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the wools were required to be mixed after 1883, they were required to be mixed before 1883 in exactly the same proportion. Therefore, if the American production of wool decimed and 1883 and the foreign importation of wool increased after 1883, it would seem to follow that something had happened which led to the encouragement of foreign industry and to the discouragement of home indus-

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest doubt but that the foreign importation increased because the population of this country increased. The market was enlarged, and it was necessary to have more wool brought from abroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The increase of population would not lead to a decrease in the production of American wool.

Mr. VEST. The decrease in the production of American wool grew, in my judgment, out of the fact that the lands increased in value and there was a change in the raising of sheep from one section of courtry to the other. As a matter of course, the importation of foreign wool increased because the manufacturers were compelled to import it to meet the demands of the domestic market.

But what I wanted to say was this: The increase in this bill from 5 to 6 cents as it stands in the text was an increase of $544,000 in the amount of duty collected. Now, the committee have increased it from 5 to 8 cents, and on this single item alone, this single paragraph, the increase in the same proportion would be a million and a half dollars by raising the rate from 5 to 8 cents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if the Senator will allow me, if he is through, or if he will yield-

Mr. VEST. I will answer any question.
Mr. EDMUNDS. That only illustrates the proposition the protectionists have always insisted upon when on the subject of revenue; that if you increase the importation you do not get as much revenue, or may perhaps get more, as the case may be, than before. So the figures about the income that I got from the importations do not, it seems to me, support my friend's argument.

Mr. VEST. I thought we were here for two purposes: one of them was to decrease the surplus in the Treasury, the other was to decrease the cost of the necessities of life to the consumer; and I thought that we were all about agreed now that an increase of import duties increased the surplus, and that an increase of duties increased the cost to the consumer, for in the absence of my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHER-MAN] we have disposed of that question, and the Senator from Rhode Island says now that he is satisfied.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not agree to either of those propositions. Mr. VEST. My friend from Rhode Island says that he is satisfied that the average effect of a tariff is to increase the price to the consumer. Those are the two things that I am trying here to do, to decrease the surplus and decrease the cost to the consumer, and here we are in one item alone in this bill increasing duties a million and a half dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you reduce the duty on a million pounds of wool introduced during the last year by 10 per cent., that is to help the consumer by reducing prices, and therefore the increase of foreign importations, if you increase that foreign importation to a million and a half pounds which is 90 per cent. of what the duty was before, will bring you more revenue than you had.

Therefore, if the diminution of duty is to enable the American to buy foreign goods at a cheaper rate than he buys American goods, he buys the foreign goods in the place of the American goods that he bought before. If he does that it increases the foreign importation, which will outrun in point of the bulk of the total income from the duties the diminution that you make by the reduction on these tariff

My belief is that an increase of duties will diminish your surplus, and a decrease of duties, if it has any effect upon the consumer (as I do not believe in general it has), will increase the amount of the revenue as a total that you get into the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. In the discussion as to what has caused the decrease in the number of sheep produced in this country, I think it with the estand that that decrease are the well established to the ought to be stated that that decrease can not be well attributed to the changes made in the wool duties by the tariff of 1883. The tariff of 1883 reduced the duty upon the lower class of carpet wools half a cent a pound and upon the higher classes a cent a pound, and took off the 10 per cent. ad valorem. What the effect of that small reduction was of course I would not undertake to say absolutely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much would it all be, putting it into an ad valorem?

Mr. ALLISON. Half a cent a pound would be less than 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you took off 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. The carpet wools did not have the 10 per cent. ad valorem. We reduced the carpet wool half a cent on the lower grade, which was 3 cents, and upon the higher grade 1 cent. probably one of the causes.

I am not going to discuss that question with my brother Senators; but if we take the statistics from 1883 to the present time we shall find that there have been immense importations in the form of woolen cloths, and last year if we reduced to wool the importation of woolen cloths it would have amounted to 150,000,000 pounds of foreign wool that was imported into this country in the shape of woolen cloths, whilst the total importations of wool of every kind only amounted to about 100,-

Mr. ALDRICH. Eighty millions.
Mr. ALLISON. Eighty millions of carpet wools, nine millions of combing wools, and a few scoured wools.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That supports the argument of the Senator from

Mr. ALLISON. I am neither supporting nor disclaiming, but I want to say that it will not do, in my judgment, to assert that the whole of this depression results alone from the decrease in the duties upon wool in 1883. It results from the fact that we reduced the duty on woolen goods in such a way in that same tariff as enabled a large importation of woolen cloths and woolen fabrics to come into this coun-There can be no mistake about that, because if 150,000,000 pounds of wool come in the shape of woolen fabrics it takes away just that much of a market from our own wool-producers.

Now, the committee in this bill have undertaken, as far as we thought it was conservative and wise, to restore this wool duty, and we have also undertaken to readjust the duty on woolen goods, so that our woolen manufacturers will use our own wools and manufacture our goods rather than that these manufactured goods shall come into this country manufactured abroad.

That is the general statement which I wished to make in this connection respecting the amendments the committee have recommended.

After the tariff act of 1883 passed it had the effect to increase largely the importation of woolen goods under the name of worsteds and various other woolen goods. So the adjustment of the tariff of 1883 was such as to secure large importations of woolen goods, and wool also, but relatively of woolen goods much larger than of wool.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the reduction of the duty upon the farmer's product of wool did not help the American manufacturer.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; because the reduction of duty on the manufacturers was larger than on the wool.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.
Mr. ALLISON. I want to say another thing in this connection, and that is that there has been an immense increase in the production of wool the world over, notably in Australia, and there has been great depression in the price of wool the world over as well as in the United States. Wool has sold in the London market, irrespective of the duty, very much lower since 1883 than it sold for a great many years prior to that time.

There have been a variety of causes, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] so well stated, following 1867, which resulted in the depression both of the price of wool and of woolens. Woolen goods that in 1883 sold at $1.39 a pound without any duty, now sell for 76 cents a pound without any duty, showing an enormous decrease in the price of woolen fabrics since 1883, of course resulting from a depression in the price of wool.

So when we came to the readjustment of the duty, the committee found it necessary to make this relation as respects wool, in order to give the woolen producer in this country the home market for his wool, and he can not have a market abroad.

It is necessary for the wool-grower that the wool which is produced in this country shall be manufactured in this country, because the wool-producer can not find a market for the wool produced in this country in competition with the wool-producers of South America and the world besides.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, whatever may have been the cause it can not be denied that immediately after the passage of the act of 1883, not only the price of wool went down, but the price of sheep. Immediately, commencing at once after the passage of the act, sheep began to decline in price until there was a loss to the flock-masters of the United States in that item alone of more than $30,000,000 in the next three years, or at the rate of $10,000,000 a year.

I have no doubt a good deal of that arose from the great importation of woolens, but it was from the classification and lack of proper duty on woolen goods and the duty on wool both combined that destroyed or began to destroy the sheep industry of the United States.

The Senator from Missouri says that we can not raise good wools in this country. I want to say to him that it is a fact beyond question that we have produced the finest sheep in the world. It is a historical fact that we have sold sheep at higher prices than they have ever been sold in any portion of the world, that we have sent our sheep to all parts of the world where they raise fine sheep, that the finest flocks of Australia are bred from American sheep. Car-load after car-load has gone across the continent to be shipped from the Western coast to Aus-

This country is to-day the place where the wool-raising people of the world are looking for the finest blood and the finest wool, and that can not be denied and can not be gainsaid. When the Senator says that the high price of land in Ohio and other States has decreased the number of sheep in the country, if he will look at the statistics he will find that that is not true.

In the country where the land has not appreciated practically at all, the sheep have declined more rapidly than they have in the old States, notably in Arizona, notably in California, notably in Colorado; and in regions of country where the land has practically no value whatever and they pay nothing for their pasturage, the sheep have declined in number.

As to good sheep, they may be raised in that country and heavy fleeces; on some of the table-lands of that country to-day they are producing as fine wool as can be produced anywhere, and a fleece-master from Arizona told me within a week that he had sheared his entire flock at an average of more than 10 pounds per head, and that is good fleece anywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which is, in line 1426, to strike out the word "same" and to insert "third."

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

349. Wools on the skin, the same rates as other wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may pre-to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

350. Top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes similar to them in character or description, composed wholly or in part of wool or worsted, 30 cents per pound.

351. Woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, flocks, and wool waste not otherwise provided for in this act, 10 cents per pound.

352. Noils shall pay the same rate of duty as the washed wools or hair from which they are made.

353. All wools, and hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, which have been advanced by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or secured condition, not otherwise enumerated or provided for in this act, shall be subject to the same duties as are imposed upon manufactures of wool not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

Mr. REAGAN. At this point I desire to offer the amendment which I suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported. Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Texas that his amendment is one of importance, affecting the whole schedule, and there are a few amendments that are not so important further on. If he will allow us to dispose of these and then offer his amendment to-morrow morning and allow it to go over to-night, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; I have no objection to that course. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be in order after the reading of the rest of this schedale.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert as a new paragraph, after line 1448, on page 144, as follows:

353}. Woolen and worsted yarns, made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 50 cents per pound, 30 cents per pound; valued at more than 50 cents per pound, 38 cents per pound, and in addition thereto upon all the above-named yarns 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 354, as follows:

354. Woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 40 cents per pound, and not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 cents per pound and 40 per cent. ad valorem; valued at above 60 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1449, after the word "woolen," I move to insert the words "or worsted;" so as to read:

Woolen or worsted cloths.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ALLISON. In the same line, after the word "woolen" where it occurs the second time, I move to insert "or worsted:" so as to read; Woolen or worsted shawls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1450, after the word "manufactures," I move to strike out the words "of wool."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same line, after the word "description," I move to strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1458, after the word "forty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

Forty-five cents per pound, and in addition thereto 40 per cent, ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Before this is acted on—I do not wish to enter into any discussion, but I want to make a statement about the effect of this schedule; that is about all I can do anyhow—to point out the changes. This is a subdivision which has been created in this bill. Here is 35 cents.

the effect of it, leaving out the last increase made by the Senator from Iowa, which is 5 cents, in changing from 40 to 45 cents per pound.

This subdivision reduces the dutiable value line or criterion-I will say line-to 40 cents per pound at the present rates, and it raises those from 40 to 60 cents per pound at the present rates, and it raises those from 40 to 60 cents per pound in value to 35 cents per pound and 40 per cent.; if valued at 42 cents per pound it pays 123 per cent, duty; valued at over 60 cents per pound it pays 40 cents per pound and 40 per cent.; thus raising the average importation of all woolen cloths imported in 1887 of the class below 80 cents in value to 102 per cent. duty. The total increase on woolen cloths is $476,000.

On shawls the cheapest grades are raised over 100 per cent. and the duties on all shawls are increased nearly $50,000. On woolen manufactures another classification is made; the cheaper grades are raised over 100 per cent. by the proposed duty, and nearly $60,000 increase of duties is collected by reason of that. That is all I care to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 355, as follows:

The Unier Clerk read paragraph 500, as follows:

Mr. ALDRICH. An amendment should be made in line 1461. The word "worsted," where it occurs after "wool," should be stricken

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1461, after the word "wool," it is proposed to strike out "worsted;" so as to read:

Flannels, blankets, and hats of wool, composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 1469 there is a committee amendment.
Mr. ALLISON. In line 1469, after the word "forty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

Forty-five cents per pound and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem. Mr. VEST. I want to call attention to the fact that under this legislation blankets and hats are changed in classification and in the rate of duty. The increase is $286,980 by reason of these changes.

Upon flannels the increase is from 67 to 94 per cent., making upon flannels and woolens an increase of $30,000 annually. On blankets it is an increase from 69.36 to 95.22 per cent. This makes a pair of blankets that are worth, say, $3 cost $5.85.

Mr. ALLISON. We do not change the existing law in this paragraph at all until we reach the higher grades. What are called the cheaper blankets are not changed in this paragraph, nor are hats of wool. the Senator will turn to the existing law, he will see that this is an exact copy of it.

Mr. VEST. It can not be an exact copy of the e Mr. ALLISON. It is, excepting the last clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 356, as follows:

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 356, as follows:

356. Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, and goods of similar character or description, composed in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not exceeding 15 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 40 per cent, ad valorem; on all the above-named goods, valued at above 15 cents per square yard, 7 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 40 per cent, ad valorem; but such goods as are composed in part of silk, or which contain an admixture of silk, and in which silk is not the component material of chief value, and not otherwise provided for in this act, shall be dutiable at 11 cents per square yard and in addition thereto 40 per cent, ad valorem: Provided, That all goods of the character enumerated or described in this paragraph, weighing over 4 ounces per square yard, shall pay a duty of 40 cents per pound and in addition thereto 40 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move an amendment in line 1480, which I send to the desk

Mr. VEST. I want to call attention to the result of these changes in paragraph 356. The existing law is 35 cents per pound and '0 per The House bill makes it 40 per cent. ad valorem. cent. ad valorem. The Senate bill makes it 40 cents per pound, an increase of 5 cents,

Mr. HISCOCK. We change it from 5 cents per square yard to 6 cents per square yard, and the second clause, at 7 cents per square yard, remains at 7 cents per square yard.

Mr. VEST. I am speaking as to paragraph 356, "Women's and children's dress goods," etc.
Mr. HISCOCK. So am I.

Mr. VEST. This is an increase from 67.86 per cent., and the result of it is an increase of three-fourths of a million dollars annually in duties on the importations of 1887.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is, supposing the importations will continue the same as in 1887. I confidently believe that the importations will be very much less.

Mr. VEST. I suppose all we can make these calculations upon is on the basis of the importations of 1887. Of course all the balance is mere conjecture. We are bound to take those importations, and upon that basis this increase is three-quarters of a million of dollars and a lit-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa from the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1480, after the word "but," it is proposed to strike out the word "such" and insert in lieu thereof "all the above-named;" so as to read:

But all the above-named goods as are composed in part of silk, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Strike out the word "as" and insert "which."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1488, after the word "forty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

Provided. That all goods of the character enumerated or described in this paragraph, weighing over 4 ounces per square yard, shall pay a duty of 45 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

357. Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of like description, composed wholly of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of a mixture of them, II cents per square yard and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem; and all such goods with selvedges made wholly or in part of other materials, and all such goods in which threads made wholly or in part of other materials have been introduced either in the warp or in the filling for the purpose of changing the classification for duty, shall be dutiable at II cents per square yard and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all such goods weighing over 4 ounces per square yard shall pay a duty of 40 cents per pound and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1502, after the word "all," I move to strike out "such," and after the word "goods," in the same line, I move to insert "of the character enumerated or described in this paragraph;" so as to read:

Provided, That all goods of the character enumerated or described in this paragraph, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1503, after the word "forty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read, "shall pay a duty of 45 cents per pound." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I want simply to state that this is an increase upon women's and children's dress goods from 9 to 11 cents per yard and the ad valorem remains the same. In other words, it is an increase of 2 cents a yard, and that makes an increase of over three-quarters of a million dollars annually upon the importations of 1887, and that is without taking into consideration the increase made in the last amendment, in line 1503, from 40 cents to 45 cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee propose to strike out paragraph 358, as follows:

338. Clothing ready-made, and wearing apparel of every description, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, balmoral skirts, and skirting, and goods of similar description, or used for like purposes, knit goods, all goods made on knitting-frames, and plushes, and all pile fabrics, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, 40 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 45 per cent. ad valorem.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

358. Clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, knit goods and all goods made on knitting frames, plushes, and pile fabrics, and felts and felt fabrics not otherwise provided for; all of the above composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, 45 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I have not seen that section. Will the Senator from Iowa be kind enough to state to me what these changes are? I understand that you increase the duty from 40 cents a pound to 45 cents in line 1513

Mr. ALLISON. The only change in the original text of the paragraph is that we include "felt and felt fabrics not otherwise provided for," and change the rate from 40 to 45 cents a pound.

Mr. VEST. That is the way I understood it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. Mr. VEST. I wanted just simply to state what is the result of these changes; I do not want to engage in any argument about it. I want to state the changes as I have marked them. On knit goods not exceeding 30 cents a pound the existing law imposes a duty of 88.33 per

This bill makes it 258.33. Above 40 cents a pound the duty is raised from 65.20 per cent. to 145.70. Above 40 cents and not over 60 cents it is raised from 69.14 to 120.88 per cent. Above 60 cents and not over 80 cents it is raised from 69.62 per cent. to 102.70, and above 80 cents it is raised from 62.58 per cent. to 70.80, making an average increase on all these classifications of 70 per cent., and an increase on the importations of 1887 of $157,845.92.

Mr. ALLISON. What is that, the importations of 1887, of the character of goods the Senator describes, of knit goods?

Mr. VEST. The importations for 1887 were $689,009.38 in value on one and $1,908,453.74 on another class.

Mr. ALLISON. Of knit goods?
Mr. VEST. All these goods.
Mr. ALLISON. The Senator was describing knit goods and showing that there was an increase of the ad valorem rate. The knit goods comprised within this paragraph were not imported to the extent of $30,000 in 1887, or, in other words, the importations of 1887 will make an infinitesimal change.

I quite agree that if you have one or two importations-I think there was one of $9 upon that list—it is possible there would be a large increase of the ad valorem duty; but we have practically the market in this country for these knit goods now.

Mr. VEST. I did not undertake to say that that was the increase only upon knit goods. I took all the classifications. I commenced with knit goods and gave the duty upon them under the existing law, and then I took up the other classifications, and upon the whole I stated that it was $157,845.92.

Mr. ALLISON. Taking the whole paragraph, which includes the clothing ready made, there is an increase.

Mr. VEST. And balmorals. That is another classification.

Mr. ALLISON. Balmorals have gone into "innocuous desuetude." There are none imported.

Mr. VEST. The increase is from 67.72, on the cheapest of these goods, to 112.74 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Balmorals were inserted because they are in the tariff of 1867. I do not think there are any balmorals imported now.

Mr. VEST. On the next classification the increase is from 68.17 to 125 per cent.; on the highest, from 66.25 to 75. That is an increase all along the line. Balmorals are not included in this amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Balmorals are not included in this ame Mr. ALLISON. No. I forgot that we struck them out.

Mr. VEST. I did not know what was stated in the amendment. Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, in view of the importance of this schedule and the thinness of the Senate, and the fact that it is after 11 o'clock, that perhaps it would be as well to ad-

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow a vote to be taken on this paragraph, I shall not resist an adjournment.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not make the motion. I merely made a suggestion to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. VEST. We can finish this schedule if we go on.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing to go on.

Mr. VEST. Go on with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proc

The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read parargraph 359, as follows:

359. Cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel and goods of similar description, or used for like purposes (except knit goods), composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, 45 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I merely wanted to say that is an increase of 5 per cent. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

360. Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, dress trimmings, head-nets, any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic, buttons, or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, wrought by hand, or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of which wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals is a component material, 30 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 50 per cent advalorem.

361. Aubusson, Axminster, Moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, carpets woven whole for rooms, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 45 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1538, after the word "thirty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto 35 per cent, ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1532 I move, on behalf of the committee, to strike out "30" and insert "35."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 362, as follows:

362. Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 45 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1542, after the word "thirty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 363, as follows:

363. Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 30 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1545, after the word "thirty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto 35 per cent, ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 364, as follows:

364. Patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 25 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1550, after the word "thirty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 365, as follows:

365. Tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, 20 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1555, after the word "thirty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto 35 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I want to say, without taking up time, as to these increases which are all made to the text of the bill now by the committee that the evidence shows that in the manufacture of carpets the American manufacturers can compete with the world successfully. There is no industry in this country to-day that is in a more flourishing condition, and why these increases should be made here is to me simply mysterious.

I can not understand the reason. The foreign carpets are not coming in now and taking the market away from the domestic manufacturer. I was satisfied myself, as far as I could be satisfied with anything in this bill, with the text of the bill, but here is an increase now upon every one of these items.

Mr. ALLISON. The first statement made by the Senator from Missouri is true, that is, that our carpet manufacturers have the market. That is so true that a good many kinds of carpets are cheaper here than in foreign markets, particularly in London. So the testimony discloses. All these carpets made here are sold as cheap perhaps as they are in any other country. But having increased the duty upon carpet wools it was deemed just that we add 5 per cent. to the ad valorem upon carpet. That is the reason for the change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 366, as follows:

366. Treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetiau carpets, 12 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1559, after "thirty," I move to add "five." The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 367, as follows:

367. Yarn, Venetian, and 2-ply ingrain carpets, 8 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1561, after "thirty," I move to add "five." The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 368, as follows:

368. Druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, 15 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1565, after "thirty," I move to add "five." The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 369, as follows:

369. Carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other materials not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1568, after "forty," I move to insert "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 370, as follows:

370. And mats, rugs, screens, covers, bassocks, bedsides, and other portions of carpets or carpetings shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpetings of like character or description. And the duty on all other mats not exclusively of vegetable material, screens, hassocks, and rugs shall be 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1575, after "forty," I move to insert "five."

Mr. HISCOCK. Wait a moment; that is not right.
Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw that amendment; it is a mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment being withdrawn, the next paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read paragraph 371, as follows:

371. Endless belts or fells for paper or printing machines, 20 cents per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, having finished this schedule, with the exception of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas, unless some Senator desires to go on later, I will move that the Senate ad-

ROAD TO MOUNT VERNON.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will ask the Senator if he will allow me first to pass a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to pass Senate bill No. 3800, directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Verhon and making an appropriation therefor. I can only say that it is reported unanimously, and unless we can pass it early here it will not be worth our while to pass it at all, because they have such an immense Calendar in the House of Representatives. I ask unanimous consent to pass it this evening

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill named by him be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information. We do not know what it is

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read for information. The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct bridge to Mount Vernon, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no quorum here and it is not worth while to transact that business. It ought not to be asked at this hour of the night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection to the consideration of the bill, the Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 21, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved. LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. YARDLEY, until Tuesday, the 22d, on account of business. To Mr. Barry, for to-day, on account of important business. To Mr. Anderson, of Kansas, for one week, on account of committee work.

To Mr. Cox, for this day.

MRS. FANNIE A. BOYD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Anderson] asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 9963) to increase the pension of Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd, was passed on Friday night. The facts are that the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation to strike out $50 and insert $40, and the gentleman supposed that the amendment had been agreed to, whereas the House passed the bill without considering the amendment, and it has been enrolled granting a pension at $50 instead of $40. The gentleman desires to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, to have the amendment agreed to, and the bill passed as amended. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the vote will be reconsidered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended passed.

LIGHT-BOAT AND FOG-BELL ON OYSTER-BED SHOAL, NEW YORK.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (H. R. 10832) for the establishment of a light-boat with fog-bell on Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-boat with fog-bell be established at or near Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, opposite Rockland Lake Dock, New York, at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

The committee recommend, in line 3, to strike out the word "boat" and insert "house;" in line 4, to strike out the words "Oyster-Bed" and insert "Oyster-Beds," and in line 6, to strike out the word "ten" and insert "thirty-five."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?
Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order. ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (S. 3782) to amer an act entitled "An act declaring that certain water-reserve lands in the State of Wisconsin are and have been subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States,' approved March 3, 1875," approved September 10, 1888; when the Speaker signed the same.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that such bills as gentlemen insist upon having read in full be temporarily laid aside until all the States shall have been called and such bills as are not required to be read at length shall have been introduced. In this way gentlemen who desire to have their bills read in full will not lose their right, but can have the bills read at the conclusion of the call. I make this request because I, and I suppose other members, have matters which they wish to present this morning, and I think the arrangement I propose will answer the purpose of the gentlemen who desire to have their bills read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Dibble] asks unanimous consent that when members desire to have bills read in full such bills shall be laid aside until atter the completion of the regular call, and shall be then read at length if that is desired by the members introducing them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, how can we ascertain what bills are desired to be read?

Mr. DIBBLE. By each member offering his bill and stating that he desires to have it read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. PAYSON. I object to it in the form in which it is presented.
Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having bills to present may be allowed to file them with the Clerk. That will allow those of us who desire to do some business here this morning to do it.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Buchanan] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having bills to introduce which they do not desire to have read at length shall have the privilege of filing them with the Clerk for reference by the Chair in the usual manner. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. How will the reference of those bills be determined?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the usual way, by the Chair. At least that is the answer which the present occupant of the chair would give to the question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Buchanan]?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that that order will embrace also memorials and resolutions that are in order under the call?

MEETING OF RAILEOAD PRESIDENTS, ETC.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, introduced a resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to report to the House any and all information they may have touching the meeting of railroad presidents in New York on the 10th instant, and also the opinion of the Commission of the Commis sion as to the legal character of the plan agreed upon at such meeting,

The resolution was read at length, as follows, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

whereas, according to the late confession of Charles Francis Adams, president of the Union Pacific Railway Company, "the difficulty in railroad management does not lie in any act of legislation, state or national," but "does lie in the covetousness, want of good faith, and the low moral tone of those in whose hands the management of the railroad system now is; in a word, in the absence among them of any high standard of commercial honor," the real facts being, according to this same competent witness, in the same confession, that "the railroad system of this country, especially of the region west of Chicago, is to-day managed on principles which—unless a change of heart occurs, and that soon—must inevitably lead to financial disaster of the most serious kind," for, continues the same authority, "there is, among the lines composing that system, an ultra disregard of those fundamental ideas of truth, fair play, and fair dealing which lie at the foundation not only of the Christian faith, but of civilization. With them there is but one rule—that, many years ago, put by Wordsworth into the mouth of Rob Roy:

"The simple rule, the good old plan,

"'The simple rule, the good old plan, That he shall take who has the power, And he shall keep who can;'"

and
Whereas there was lately held in the city of New York a meeting composed of the presidents of the leading and trunk lines of railroads in the country, especially of the region west of Chicago, and of the bankers representing the leading banking interests of this country and Europe, the alleged leading purpose of which meeting was the enforcement of the act to regulate interstate commerce;

ially of the region west of Chicago, and of the bankers representing the leading banking interests of this country and Europe, the alleged leading purpose of which meeting was the enforcement of the act to regulate interstate commerce; and.

Whereas at said meeting, inspired and dominated by said controlling officers of the confessedly law-breaking companies, chiefly "of the region west of Chicago," with the conspicuously avowed purpose of maturing plans for enforcing said act and protecting these great and powerful corporations from wrecking at the hands of subordinate employés, it seems that the real object, if its proceedings were correctly reported through the daily press, was to perfect a plan which, under cover of the avowed purpose, means deliberate and sweeping violation of the spirit if not the letter of the most important provisions of said act, as by the terms of the agreement reached, as reported aforesaid, "one officer of each company will be held responsible for the strict maintenance of the rates and rules established by the association," which was created at said meeting, thus taking into their own hands the practical revision of the act, in harmony with the late suggestion of Mr. Adams that it "be so modified that contracts made among railroads, subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the division of competitive traffic at reasonable rates, may be binding in law," in this way giving direct application to the further declaration of the same author that "the railroad system must heal itself; no act of Congress or repeal of any act of Congress would greatly help it;" and

Whereas at said meeting Mr. Charles Francis Adams is alleged to have stated that "the report and plan of the organization, as now to be submitted, was read and discussed by the commissioners (meaning Messrs. Cooley, Walker, and Morrison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission) in detail," and that said "Commissioners were invited to criticise it," and that "they expressed a decided opinion that the plan state Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, directed to report in writing within ten days to this House any and all information it may possess concerning the action of said meeting of railroad presidents in New York City January 10, 1889, so far as the same related to the management of railway companies subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce act, to what extent and in what manner, if at all, said Commission or any of its members participated in discussing, criticising, or approving the "plan" of maintaining "rates and rules established by the association," and to accompany said report with a copy of the contract, agreement, or "plan" adopted at such meeting, and if no such agreement, contract, or "plan" is on file, the substance of such contract, agreement, or "plan," together with the opinion of the Commission as to its legal character, and its effect on the public, and as to what legislation is necessary to prohibit the form of contract, agreement, or combination for the prevention of competition, which was submitted at the New York meeting, if the same be not already prohibited by existing law. Also transmit, with said report, a list of the companies represented at said meeting and the names and official title of the persons representing each of said companies.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas it appears from the report of the Pacific Railroad Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, that the Pacific railroads, through their management, officers, and boards of directors, have for years constantly and persistently refused to comply with the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, March 3, 1873, and May 8, 1878; and
Whereas it appears from said report that in addition to the defant refusal of said companies to comply with said acts of Congress, the officers and managers thereof have squandered large sums out of their gross earnings in extravagant and unprofitable enterprises and in the payment of interest and subsidies forbidden by said acts of Congress, and have divided among themselves, in violation of law, enormous sums of money amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, in defraud of the Government and of the people of the United States; and
Whereas the directors of said companies have since the passage of theact approved March 3, 1873, divided among themselves and other pretended stockholders and creditors large sums of money as dividends and subsidies, which were not from the net actual earnings of said roads, but from moneys which should have been applied in liquidation of the indebtedness of said acts of Congress issued new stock, mortgages, pledges, and other incumbrances without the consent of Congress, thus squandering the funds of said companies, impairing their credit, and destroying the value of the United States lien upon the same; and divers unlawful transactions, included an enter rights, previously franchises: Therefore, be it Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House what steps, if any, have been taken by him to secure a judicial enforcement of said forfeiture, and if none have been taken, that he inform this House his reasons for not proceeding as directed by law.
Whereas tappears from said report that said companies, in order to avoid their just obligations to the Government, have unduly and fraudulently increased their indebtedness greatly in excess of the amount actually expended, and in turn have levied excessive charges upon the people tributary to said lines to pay interest and dividends upon said fictious and fraudulent indebtedness;

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

the RECORD. It is as follows:

Resoived by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That—Whereas the Government of the United States of America is based upon the democratic principle of equal and exact justice to all men and special and exclusive privileges to none; and

Whereas the present existing tariff legislation is based upon the aristocratic principle of special and exclusive privileges to a moneyed class and is the prolific mother and source of all the special legislation, both national and State, which has followed its adoption; and

Whereas we have now arrived at that time in the history of our common country when we must retrace our steps and follow in the paths marked out by the fathers of the Republic and adopt only democratic methods in democratic administration or move on in the maelstrom of revolution from which our institutions can never be rescued: Therefore,

Be it resolved, First, That the panacea for all our ills is to adopt without delay a series of repealing statuies, repealing all special and privileged class legislation.

Second. That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to report a bill to this House without delay repealing all existing tariff structed to report a bill to this House without delay repealing all existing tarif legislation.

Third. That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report, at the same time, a bill imposing a tariff of 42½ per cent. ad valorem upon all foreign imports into the United States, thus taxing all capital invested in foreign merchandise and imports alike, and at the same time affording the same protection to the raw wool and hide of the Texan in the Boston market which is given to the manufacturer of woolen goods and shoes in the State of Massachusetts, and protecting labor in all parts of the Union alike, and allowing every American to know the tax that he pays and the protection which a government of equal and exact justice to all men affords to every inhabitant alike.

DIVISION OF THE TERRITORY OF DAKOTA.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to submit at this time and have printed in the RECORD a joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota in relation to the division of the Territory of Dakota and the admission of each portion into the Union as a separate State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Dakota?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Territo-

It is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota in joint convention assembled. That the proposition to divide the Territory of Dakota on the seventh standard parallel is hereby indorsed, and that the oft-repeated expressions of the representatives of the people of Dakota of adherence to the cause of division are hereby renewed and reaffirmed.

That each portion of Dakota is entitled to membership in the Federal Union and should be admitted without further unnecessary delay, the southern half bearing the name of South Dakota and the northern half bearing that of North Dakota.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood it was ordered that bills should be handed to the Clerk, and they would be referred.

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. PERKINS. I handed in a bill, and I want it to appear that it was introduced.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to suspend the rules and pass a bill.

Mr. WARNER. It was my understanding, when I gave way temporarily to the gentleman from South Carolina, that I was to lose none of my rights in the order with reference to Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. If such was the understanding, the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri would be the regular order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will not make any controversy about that.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to modify the order heretofore made, and move to suspend the rules and pass the following order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion has been modified once at his suggestion. Is that modification withdrawn?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. There has been no second, and a second has been demanded.

Mr. WARNER. I ask that the following order be passed:

Ordered, That Thursday, January 24, 1889, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be, and is hereby, set apart for the consideration of House bill 19614, entitled "A bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and at 4 o'clock on said day the said bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments and upon ordering said bill to be read a third time and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House; and in case said bill shall not be taken up on said day, then this shall be a continuing order until one day shall be occupied as herein specified, and provided that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken in the House on the pending amendment relating to Union soldiers' homesfeads and an amendment to be offered by Mr. Payson to the town-site section of said bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second. Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered upon this order.

Mr. HOOKER. I object.
Mr. RANDALL. Is it understood that the Committee on Appropriations would have the privilege of moving to go into Committee of the Whole on that day?

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not so provide. understood the reading, it provides that that day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the purpose suggested, and therefore the only way in which the Committee on Appropriations could secure that day would be to raise the question of consideration against this bill, and then if this bill should lose its place on that day would have another day.

Mr. SPRINGER. There would be no trouble about that

Mr. RANDALL. With that understanding, I will not specified as the gentleman The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

The House divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 131, noes 35.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and there is a second. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WAR-NER] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my fifteen minutes until I hear from the other side. This seems to be a proposition that is well understood, and I do not see why time should be taken up in discuss-

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if that imperative order is made there will be no fair consideration of the bill, no reasonable opportunity to amend it. I wish therefore, if possible, to arrest the attention of the House to the effect that this bill "to organize the Territory of Oklahoma" may to the effect that this bill "to organize the Territory of Oklahoma" may have in securing and confirming to certain railroad companies a portion of that Territory. I can not believe that the bill was designed to accomplish any such result, and I will not and do not believe that the able gentlemen who are urging the passage of this bill have any such purpose in view; but I do assert that upon the law and facts, as they appear, if this bill as now framed becomes a law, and that law is carried into full officet certain railroad corresponding will secure several ried into full effect, certain railroad corporations will secure several million acres of the most valuable land of the Territory. At least that seems to be inevitable.

I will call attention to some of the acts of Congress enacted more than twenty years ago, in the midst of that most extraordinary period in our history when Congress was largely employed in granting lands to corporations, and greatly exhausted the public domain in such grants to such extent that even the Indian Territory was called upon to furnish lands to carry out that unexampled effort to monopolize the public domain.

The eighth section of the "act granting lands to the State of Kansas aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and telegraph line from Fort Riley, Kans., to Fort Smith, Ark.," approved July 27, 1866, and the eighth section of the "act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 27, 1866, contain grants of land in this Indian Territory.

It will be seen that each of those acts authorizes the construction of those railways substantially through the entire width of the Indian Territory, and one of them the entire width, as Red River divides the Indian Territory from the State of Texas.

The ninth sections of both of said acts are in the same terms, as fol-

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, not to exceed the ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act. Provided, That said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

The one grants to the corporation the alternate sections for 5 miles on each side of the railway, the other the alternate sections for 5 miles on each side of the railway, the other the alternate sections for 10 miles on each side of the railway. What is now known as the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, which now runs through the entire width of the Indian Territory, and was completed some years ago, as I understand the matter, holds the rights of the first-mentioned corporation, the tribes in the Indian Territory having agreed by the treaty of 1866 that two railroads one running worth and continued. by the treaty of 1866 that two railroads, one running north and south, the other east and west, might be constructed through their Territory, but granting only the right of way and nothing more, and the railway I have first named obtained that right.

On the 27th day of July, 1866, the President approved an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean." This railroad was to commence at or near Springfield, Mo., and extend westward to the Pacific. This was the other railroad which by the treaty of 1866 was to run through the Indian Territory east and west; but by that treaty only the right of way and depot stations were granted. But the act of Congress of July 27, 1866, contains extraordinary provisions. The railroad commencing at or near Springfield, Mo., and running westward to the Pacific Ocean runs 350 miles through the Indian Territory, and the second section of the act provides as follows:

The United States shall extinguish as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the Indians, and only by their voluntary cession, the Indian title to all lands falling under the operations of this act and acquired in the donation to the railroad company mentioned in this act.

The third section of this Atlantic and Pacific grant is as follows:

SEC. 3. That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, and munitions of war and public stores over the route of said line of railway and its branches, every alternate section of the public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad line as said company may adopt, and through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State, and whenever on the line thereof the United States shall have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated. propriated.

The one railway, the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, is constructed and in operation through the entire width of the Indian Territory north and south, with only the right of way, its valuable land grant still suspended until the Indian title is extinguished. The Atlantic and Pacific Railway is completed, and was before the forfeiture of its grant, westward to the Arkansas River. The third railway company I have mentioned, it is said, stands ready to complete its road through the Indian Territory as soon as the Indian title is extinguished. If the pending bill accomplishes anything beyond establishing a petty territorial government over the Public Land Strip of three and a half million acres of land—if it accomplishes in its final result anything more than this, it opens up this Territory to one of the most exasperating railroad "land grabs" that has ever aroused the just indignation of the American people.

Let us see how we stand. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, as I understand, completed their railway within the time prescribed by law. The Atlantic and Pacific had reached the Arkansas River before we declared the forfeiture of its grant. The Neosho Valley Railway Company, it is claimed, completed its road as far as it was able, under the terms of its charter, and is ready to proceed and secure its valuable land grant in the Indian Territory.

What is to be the result? Lands opened up, as is alleged, to actual settlers become the prey of railroad corporations, a monopoly of those lands the more exasperating as the grant was not needed to open up the country, and because the lands to be secured instead of being properly "wild lands," were and are worth from $20 to $50 per acre. that with millions of acres of these valuable lands at stake, gentlemen who claim the especial right to speak for the settler have made no sufficient provision to save them from the rapacity of the railroad corpo. The mere repeal of the two acts of Congress I have first men tioned amounts to nothing, for it is clear that the rights of these corpo rations are vested and only wait for these lands to become lands of the United States to become absolute. And yet it is clear as a question of honorable dealing that the people of the United States, if they must take these lands from the Indians, have a right to secure them to actual settlers, for no injustice is done in standing by the terms in which these railroad grants are made, even if the justice of the grants is admitted, which I do not admit. But to despoil the Indians for the benefit, in a large degree, of the railroad corporations is simply monstrous. If it was for the benefit of our landless people, and to secure them homes under the homestead law, the beneficence of the purpose might perhaps justify it.

But again on the 20th of April, 1871, Congress passed a still more extraordinary act authorizing the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company to issue its bonds without limit and mortgage

Its road, equipments, lands, franchises, privileges and other rights and property, subject to such terms, conditions, and limitations as its directors may prescribe.

Under this extraordinary power the Atlantic and Pacifice Railroad corporation mortgaged its entire property for $30,000,000. And the mortgagees, by eminent counsel who have appeared before the Land Committees of Congress, insist that the astounding claim that their mortgage covers the whole enormous conditional grant to that corporation, 350 miles in length and 40 miles in alternate sections in width, is clearly established and defensible under the acts of 1866 and 1871

If this claim has any foundation whatever it rests upon the extinguishment of the Indian title, which, strange to say, is the purpose of the pending bill.

The gentlemen who have framed this bill have manifestly not examined the land-grant railroad legislation of former years.

It had been hoped by the friends of the homestead law that in progress of time the western half at least of this magnificent body of land, all of it indeed not actually required by the Indians, a region large enough to form a great and prosperous State, could be secured to our landless people under the humane provisions of the homestead laws.

It was easy to accomplish that result by proper legislation. But other counsels have intervened and prevailed. Four years ago, as chairman of a committee which had visited the Indian Territory charged with the duty of inquiring into Indian affairs, I had reported to the House the propriety and policy of securing the western portion of this Indian Territory, a larger portion than is covered by this bill, for the settlement of our landless people. A bill was prepared at the instance of the President by the Secretary of the Interior to carry out a just and honorable and practicable method of securing these lands for the benefit of actual settlers; that bill I introduced, and it has been pending for four years, and has been defeated time and again by the friends of the pending measure.

If the President's views had been carried out white settlers before this would have occupied the land covered by the pending bill, and no fears would have been entertained that millions of acres of these valuable lands would inure to the benefit of railroad corporations without consideration. The friends of this bill demand its passage without any regard to result. I am not willing to run the risk of those three railroad corporations obtaining any portion of this land.

It is apparent that this bill will pass the House, and perhaps become a law, properly amended, and justice done to the Indians. I have no objection to it, for I think I first brought the measure into the House in the bill to which I have referred. But I protest against those railroad corporations appropriating millions of acres of land which rightfully belong to our landless people when the Indian title shall be extinguished. Four years ago I suggested to the House that the land should not become a part of "the public domain," but should be held in trust by the United States, so that it may inure to the benefit of actual I shall therefore, if I can, offer the following amendment to the bill. But how can I hope for its proper consideration if the imperative order proposed shall be adopted? The amendment I will propose is as follows:

Provided, That the Indian title shall not by this act be extinguished to any of the land in said Indian Territory mentioned in the eighth and ninth sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kans., to Fort Smith, Ark.," approved July 25, 1896, or to any land in the Indian Territory mentioned in the eighth and ninth sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River;" nor shall any provision of this act be construed to authorize the extinguishment of the Indian title to any of the lands mentioned in the said eighth and ninth sections of said act, or to any other land in said Territory which, by virtue of any existing law, would inure to the benefit of any railroad corporation on the extinguishment of the Indian title thereto; but all such lands shall be held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the tribes of Indians interested therein, and shall be disposed of as trust lands for the benefit of such tribes to actual settlers only, and shall not become a portion of the public lands of the United States or inure to the benefit of any such railroad corporations.

But I object to the bill in its present form, because I think it violates

But I object to the bill in its present form, because I think it violates the contract entered into with the Indian tribes by our fathers when these tribes were induced to settle in the Indian Territory, engagements and solemn contracts which we ought not to disregard, for this bill not only disregards solemn treaties made with these tribes by our fathers, but annuls patents issued under the seal of the United States without the consent of the tribes.

I object to the bill because it annuls substantially the homestead policy of the United States in the settlement of the lands in this Indian Territory and rejects all the safeguards for securing homes to actual settlers which the homestead law was intended to secure.

I object to the bill because it ignores the rights of soldiers of the Union Army, as recognized by existing law in their settlement on the public lands. I object to the bill because in its present form it opens up and secures the very heart and most valuable portion of this Territory (if the measure shall be finally carried out) to railroad corporations, who in equity and justice are not entitled to an acre of the land.

I object to the bill because under its present provisions, instead of honest homesteaders and our landless people seeking homes, railroad corporations and land speculators will secure the lands we wrest from the Indian tribes.

To cover this extraordinary action of Congress the cry is raised that in refusing to open up this Territory we play into the hand of the cat-tle kings. Have gentlemen considered that while the Indians compel the cattle kings to pay well for the use of their pasture fields the United States permits them (and mainly foreigners) to pasture vast millions of acres of the public domain without charge?

But it is claimed that notwithstanding the patents issued by our fathers to these civilized tribes, they have more land than they need. But is that a good argument for negotiating with them for the land, a good argument to justify a violation of their rights, when railroad corporations hold 55,000,000 acres of land without a shadow of right, and yet Congress refuses to restore them to the people?

Let justice be done though the heavens fall! Let us in an honorable way obtain a cession of these lands and hold them for honest homestead

However earnest our people may be that the lands in the Indian Territory not required for the actual use of the Indians should be opened up to settlement and cultivation, I am very confident they will not justify any injustice to the feeble remnants of the once powerful tribes which have gone down in a brave but hopeless struggle against the aggressive civilization of the white race. Nor will the people justify you in turning this most valuable body of land, now left for settlement, over to railroad corporations and land speculators. Public opinion unquestionably demands that this land shall be secured to our landless questionably demands that this land shall be secured to our landless people, to actual settlers under the homestead laws. Homes, not speculation! And yet that high purpose will not be accomplished if this bill in its present form shall become a law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution without regard to the merits of the bill—without regard to whether it is a good or a bad bill, or whether it ought to be amended or not. This resolution, under the disguise of fixing a day for the consideration of the bill, puts it in the power of a majority consisting of the friends of the bill to occupy the entire time from the mosisting of the friends of the bill to occupy the entire time from the mo-ment we go into Committee of the Whole until 4 o'clock, then to bring the bill back into the House, when under the operation of this order the previous question will be ordered and all amendments cut off. Thus the House, without the operation of any of its ordinary rules, will be brought immediately to a vote upon the bill and upon certain amendments which have been dictated to the friends of the bill by those who have used filibustering tactics to obtain a compromise.

Now, I do not think it good policy, I do not think it a good precedent, for the House to tie its hands in such a manner as this, depriving the House of its ordinary power of amendment, requiring the previous question to be considered as ordered at a given hour, without any agreement of any sort as to the power of amendment. In other words, under the disguise of fixing a day, it is proposed to set aside all the ordinary rules for the consideration of business in the House, and in an arbitrary way, agreed upon by the friends of a certain measure and such of its enemies as are willing to yield to filibustering tactics, to have carried into effect this order.

I do not regard this as a good precedent. I am therefore against the order without regard to whether the bill be good or bad. I have expected to vote for the bill, but I do not think this is such an order as the House ought to make a precedent. Possibly I am the more against this proposed order because we have already had such a precedent. I was against that precedent, but had to support it reluctantly. I do not want the precedent repeated. Not being obliged to support this proposition, I take advantage of the occasion to entermy protest against the class of orders of which this is a specimen. This does not seem to me to have the real merit which should attach to a proposition presented on suspension day. This day is for the purpose of transacting business which two-thirds of the House agree ought to be transacted. It is not meant for the purpose merely of obtaining, under the operation of this rule, favors for legislation which could not otherwise be obtained. For these reasons I am opposed to this order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Misssippi [Mr. Hooker].

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman on the other side [Mr. WAR-NER] propose to say anything in favor of this proposition? If so, I submit he had better go on now.

Mr. WARNER. I have no objection to taking the floor now, and allowing the gentleman from Mississippi to reserve his time.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; I will occupy my time hereafter.

Mr. WARNER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I desire to say that if he can invent any language which will add to the force of section 14 of the Oklahoma bill, which has for its intention the absolute wiping out of any claim that any railroad company might ever make to an acre of this land in Oklahoma Territory, no one will second him in his efforts more heartily than I will. I have conferred with other members of the committee, including the able and distinguished lawyer from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], in endeavoring to incorporate into section 14 provisions which shall absolutely prevent any railroad, under any guise whatever, from ever making any claim to an acre of land under the granting acts of Congress referred to in the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana. We on this committee are only too glad to have the aid of gentlemen like my friend from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. If we have not already incorporated into section 14 of this bill such explicit and unequivocal language as will absolutely prevent one acre of this land from ever being taken from the settler and given to railroad companies, we desire to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. What objection is there to having this land held in trust by the United States for the Indian tribes, instead of the United States acquiring title as provided in the bill? Your provision simply attempts to extinguish a right already acquired. I am trying to prevent that right from attaching. That is the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I, with other members of the committee, have considered this question as well as we could, and we have tried to invent language which shall accomplish the purpose. It was talked over in our committee that railroad attorneys and claim agents would contend before the Departments and before the Supreme Court that certain vested rights would accrue, whenever it was in their power to make the claim, on account of the extinguishment of the Indian title.

Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WARNER. I yield the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES]

one minute more.

Mr. SYMES. I can not, for want of time, answer in detail the statements of my friend from Indiana, but I will say that I will vote for his amendment in order that we may have additional safeguards incorporated in this section which shall guaranty the accomplishment of what we have already sought to attain. If I had the slightest idea that the bill would not prevent any railroad company from acquiring title to an acre of this land I would be found speaking against it to-day instead of in favor of it. I would like to show, but I have not the time, why they can not possibly acquire title under this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. BAKER, of New York. I would like to ask a question of my friend from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. I am not occupying the floor, and do not propose take any time. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illito take any time. nois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. May I be permitted to ask a question? Mr. SPRINGER. In the time of the gentleman from Indiana, not

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky has stated as his objec-tion to this order that it permits the friends of the bill and certain opponents of the bill to agree upon what amendments shall be voted upon, and does not offer sufficient opportunity for other amendments to come in. I desire to state, so far as that is concerned, under this order the committee will be considering this measure for three hours and a half or four hours, and every opportunity will be given by the friends of this bill to vote on any of it, and if adopted there, in the House, on every amendment which can be suggested, and especially the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr Hol-MAN], in regard to railroad grants. And I call attention of the House to the fact that section 14 of the Oklahoma bill was framed for the purpose of forfeiting every conceivable condition of railroad right there might be in Oklahoma Territory that was possible for Congress to contrive. And we have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the gentleman's amendment when brought up for consideration. If it can be devised by the ingenuity of man or by the legislation of Congress to forfeit every possibility of a railroad grant being given in Oklahoma Territory I want gentlemen to exercise their minds in that direction, and the friends of the bill will help them in all efforts of that kind, because it is our intention, so far as expressed in the bill and in this debate, to permit under no circumstances any railroad to have any right in the Territory outside of this right of way.

Mr. SYMES. Let me suggest to my colleague on the committee that section 15 of the bill absolutely prohibits the Territorial Legislature or any municipality voting bonds to aid any railroad in the future.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is guarded as well in that respect as it can be. One word further. This is a proposition giving consideration to a measure which has attracted attention for many years.

Gentlemen will bear in mind the fact that the precedent to which they object has been established in a notable case in this House-the direct-tax bill. That precedent has been established and is here invoked for the purpose of bringing to a conclusion a measure in which the majority of this House is interested, and which the House desires

Mr. BARNES. I wish to know whether it is the distinct understanding on the part of the gentleman and the friends of this Oklahoma bill that the substitute offered by myself and agreed to by the minority of the committee shall be voted on before this question is disposed of?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly; and I will give the gentleman my pledge now that shall be done, or I will ask consent now that matter shall be put beyond all controversy.

Mr. HOOKER. Put it in the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. If not in the resolution now, I ask that it be so amended.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that understanding will be carried

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does the gentleman refer to the substitute reported by the committee or the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES]?

Mr. WARNER. I do not wish to take up my time by answering questions. The resolution itself shows it is the bill now pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (H. R. 10614).

Mr. WEAVER. And it is the understanding that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] will have an opportunity to have a vote on his substitute.

Mr. WARNER. Yes: that is understood.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further debate, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to be heard.

Mr. HOOKER. If you wish to, speak now. I would rather follow

No, go on first. Mr. WARNER,

The SPEAKER. There are seven minutes remaining in opposition. Mr. HOOKER. I am yielded three minutes by the gentleman.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. I am very much struck by the observation of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckinridge] in reference to this resolution. Now, it is simply evident this resolution proposes to do by indirection what could not be done by a simple resolution, pending to-day, for the consideration of this measure, and it is therefore unjust to use this suspension day for the purpose of fixing a day for the consideration of a given bill named in the resolution, together with but two amendments thereto, under a regulation and agreement between the friends of this bill and a particular opponent of the bill that should

I have not been consulted about the resolution, but I undertake to say the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky can not be answered. There are a great many measures pending before the House of great public importance, and they are of greater importance certainly than the consideration of this bill, which has been thrown in our faces during the last and present sessions of Congress. I say, therefore, it is an effort by this resolution to designate a particular day to consider this measure under an iron-clad rule which is unprecedented except in the single instance referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

You propose that on a given day this measure shall have precedence over all other measures pending before Congress. There are important matters pending from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, important measures from the Committee on Appropriations, from the Committee on Elections, and from the various other committees of the House, and yet notwithstanding that it is proposed by this resolution to give precedence to this particular measure over all others for the purpose of consideration, and then to consider it under an iron-clad rule, so close consideration, and then to consider it under an iron-clad rule, so close fitting that no amendment can be offered save the two designated. Is there any equity, any justice, in this matter?

What is there, Mr. Speaker, about this Oklahoma matter which should clothe it with a sanctity not belonging to any other measure pending before the House? It should be considered in a regular legislative way, and I am willing so to consider it. I have myself several are regular to in a regular legislative way, and I am willing so to consider it. amendments in my desk, written when this was under discussion long ago, which I desire to offer. I am to be excluded from offering them—

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at all; you will have every opportunity.

Mr. HOOKER. Ah! I am excluded, and you know it, for the simple reason that a fixed time is provided when the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and that time arriving no amendment can be offered, and that is the gravamen of your resolution. It fixes a time when the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the amendment. You do not even put it in the plural in your resolution, but that the previous question shall at 4 o'clock on the day be considered as ordered, and no other amendment shall be offered or considered by the House. I see no reason for giving this matter consideration under this iron-clad rule over other far more important measures which are before us.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Let the resolution be again reported. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOE].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district of Ohio in which there is a large body of laboring men belonging to various industrial organizations, and these men have petitioned me on more than one occasion to support what they call in round numbers the "Oklahoma bill." On inquiry of them I understand that their understanding of this bill is that the proposition is simply to remit this land to the position of the ordinary homestead lands of the country; and without that understanding not one of them would ever have favored the meas-They understood that any man, head of a family, can locate on the land and hold, occupy, and finally get a good title to it.

There are about this bill, sir, circumstances of suspicion, and one of them has already been pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and since that discovery was made public opinion has rapidly formed against the bill in its present form. I am willing to vote to set apart a day to consider the bill without limitation, but I am not willing and can not consent to put myself into a strait-jacket that would prevent a complete scenting of every provision of the bill that would prevent a complete scrutiny of every provision of the bill. And I want opportunity to offer such amendments as will give to the people who can not buy a chance to own a farm and erect a home.

I will vote for a measure that will turn these lands over to the homestead law, and which will give to the soldiers of the country the rights which they have upon other parts of the public domain; but, I repeat, I will never vote for any measure which will by any possibility send the public lands, either in small or in large quantities, into the hands of speculators, and that, in my judgment, will be the operation of this measure. I am not willing now or at any time while I hold a seat in this House to turn aside another foot of public land from the uses of free homesteads.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. BAKER].
Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, of all the measures of great importance pending before this Congress, this I think deserves, and indeed it demands, the fullest and most careful consideration. It has been debated, as we all understand, somewhat; but it involves proposi-tions that to my mind can not find approval in the hearts of the Representatives of this Congress when they understand them. I believe that the passage of the bill will organize an evil greater than that complained of by the settlers upon the Des Moines River lands. It will result in wrong unheard of in the public-land administration of this country, and in a very few years we shall have a repetition of the same troubles growing out of the same wrong that has been complained of, and which we have endeavored to legislate and rectify, concerning the lands in the State of Iowa. It would repeat these influences; it would result in these wrongs and would inaugurate the same system of outrages, while Congress would be responsible through the legislation proposed here.

Mr. SYMES. Will my colleague explain what outrages and wrongs he refers to?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am referring now to the question of title or ownership to be derived from the lands that will be claimed by railroad corporations under the grants which are contained in the by railroad corporations under the grants which are contained in the charters to which allusion has been made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman]. Under these grants, I repeat, grave questions are certain to arise, and in order to proceed understandingly about this matter, there should be the very fullest discussion and debate and the most complete understanding with reference to all the features in connection with the subject. It is too important to be rushed through the House in any such manner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has one minute remaining

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield that to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

MCCREARY

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and have been acting with the friends of the Oklahoma bill from the time it was offered, but I am not in favor of adopting this resolution. The Oklahoma bill contains important provisions which are worthy of the fullest debate and the most careful consideration; but this resolution brings us to a direct vote on that bill without proper time or opportunity for discussion. It addition, there are important amendments which ought to be offered to the bill and considered in the House, which amendments are cut off by the resolu-

Moreover, the resolution now under consideration can not be amended according to the rules of the House. If I could amend the resolution in such way as to give freedom of debate and to allow other amendments to be introduced which I think ought to be introduced, then I should consider the resolution with favor; but in its present form I am opposed to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I pledge to the gentleman my word that he shall have the fullest opportunity for amendment, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Is it in order to have the resolution read again?

The SPEAKER. After the close of the thirty minutes' debate, but not before.

Mr. WARNER. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Perkins].

Mr. PERKINS. The position of some of the friends or professed friends of this bill is the same as that of some of the people of our State in reference to prohibition. They claim that they are in favor of prohibition, but are opposed to the enforcement of the law giving to the people of the State prohibition. So with some of the professed friends of this bill. They are in favor of the bill, but are opposed to the resolution which gives us a day for the consideration of the bill. Mr. Speaker, this bill is very important to the people of this country, and to-day there are more than five thousand people living in tents and in wagons along the borders of this territory waiting for legisla-tion that will give them an opportunity to go on this land and acquire homes in an honest, manly way and with the protection of the law.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] suggests that he is afraid it is in the interest of speculators, and yet under the provisions of this bill not an acre of that land can be taken, except for homestead purpospes, at $1.25 an acre; and to acquire it at that price requires a residence of three years upon the land, except as to Union soldiers of the late war. My friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] the other day sugand this $20 an acre goes into the treasury of the Territory for educational purposes to create a fund for the education of the children of that Territory. Not an acre of that land can be acquired for town-site purposes under the provisions of this bill except on the payment of $20 an acre, while under the public-land law as it is to-day, and which my friend justifies and stands by, it can be obtained at $1.25 an acre, and

Mr. PAYSON. Not any of this land,
Mr. PERKINS. Not any of this land, but the public lands; and you contend that the public-land laws should be extended to this Territory, so far at least as they apply to town sites.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as one of the friends of this bill, I ask that a day shall be given for its consideration, and ask that those who oppose it may be afforded every opportunity to offer amendments. Under the five-minute rule, which will govern this debate, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will have every opportunity to offer the amendments that suggest themselves to his mind.

All that the friends of the bill ask is that they shall be given an op-portunity for its consideration. They believe it is fair and right to all, and they know that many thousand honest and intelligent settlers are asking for this legislation in the interest of justice and good government; and knowing this, we challenge the opponents of the bill to a discussion and fair consideration of its provisions.

Mr. WARNER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly worth while to undertake to say anything in two minutes; and yet I desire to correct a false impression that has been acquired round me here as to this bill. It is claimed that one of the objections to the bill is that it deprives Union soldiers of rights they have under existing laws. Now, the homestead law that was passed in 1862 is applied to every acre of the ocean of public lands that we have acquired in the great Northwestern Territories by the treaty with Mexico and by the Louisiana purchase.

Now, I would say, in regard to these lands that have been opened under the terms of the homestead law, they are free of price to everybody, and the only differences between the people at large and the soldiers are these: that the soldiers were allowed a credit on the term of residence of the time that they served in the Army. Instead of living five years on the land the soldier could have deducted from that time the period he served in the Army.

Now, what does this bill propose? The same relative position is given the soldier in respect to this land that he occapied with reference to the general ocean of public lands that we have had settled under the homestead law. We simply say to the soldier that you shall get credit for your services on your five years' residence on the public lands. Now, in respect to this land that we buy from the Indians, we propose that they pay $1.25 an acre, and on the question of residence say that the soldier shall have his time of service credited to him on the period of residence required under the provisions of this bill. So that the proposition in this bill as to the rights of the soldier is identically the same as existing law with reference to the public lands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. That is, you do not treat the soldier any meaner than you do anybody else?

Mr. NELSON. I will show that further on. Mr. WARNER. Let us get back to the proposition before the Housewill the House give consideration to this bill four hours in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

That would be under the five-minute debate, without cutting off the right of any gentleman to amend. This enlarges it only to this It says, with reference to the amendment in relation to Union extent. It says, with reference to the amendment in relation to thion soldiers' homesteads, that we shall have a yea-and-nay vote in the House. It also says, in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] in relation to town sites, that we remark that in the House. I say to generate the same of shall have a yea-and-nay vote upon that in the House. I say to gentlemen who are opposed to this bill that I care not whether there is a town-site provision in the bill or not. Your objection to the passage of this bill, gentlemen, on this day or any other day, under the suspension of the rules, was that there would be only thirty minutes for debate. It was desired to give two days to the consideration of this bill, but on consultation with some of the gentlemen opposed to the measure, it was agreed that that would be taking too much time at this short session. Now we propose to give one day to the discussion and to the offering of amendments to a bill which seeks to open this great body of land to actual settlers, not to speculators. No man can acquire a homestead unless he resides upon the land for a period of three years, and then he can acquire title to only 160 acres. exception is that a Union soldier can acquire a title to his 160 acres by gested that he believed it was in the interest of town-site companies.

My friend knows that under the law as it is to-day he and a few others can organize themselves into a town-site company and go and acquire title to the public lands through the probate judges, and get them at $1.25 an acre, and then sell them as speculators, while under the provisions of this bill they would be required to pay $20 an acre; lators than I will; and I say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HolMAN], who is so apprehensive about railroad monopoly, let him draught a provision as strong as his ingenuity and his masterly command of the English language can frame it, and if it is in the interest of actual settlers upon these lands and in the interest of keeping the lands out of the hands of corporations, I will advocate and vote for the amendment. We simply ask that this measure shall be given fair consideration upon this floor. Having been discussed day in and day out in the past and delayed by dilatory motions, by filibustering, and in every practicable manner, we now ask that it shall receive fair consideration at the hands of this House.

Mr. HOOKER. Then strike out from your resolution the proposi-tion to consider the previous question as ordered. That is what you ought to do if you want to have the measure fairly and fully considered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask for a division.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, on that question I demand the yeas

So the motion of Mr. WARNER to suspend the rules and adopt the order proposed was agreed to.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the manes be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER. I object.

Mr. WEAVER. This is an important vote; I think it had better be read.

The roll-call was read.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I was not present, I believe, when my name was called. If present, I would have voted "ay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3696) to authorize the Omaha, Dodge City and Southern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation.

POST-OFFICE IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER. The next question in order is the motion (coming over from a previous suspension day) made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Dibble], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to suspend the rules and pass the bill which will be

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10406) for the purchase of square 489 in the city of Washington as the site for the post-office and other Government uses.

A bill (H. R. 10406) for the purchase of square 489 in the city of Washington as the site for the post-office and other Government uses.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide, square 489, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, as the site for a city post-office and for other Government uses. The said site shall not exceed in cost the sum of $430,000, and for the acquisition thereof the said sum of $430,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That in case the Secretary of the Treasury shall be unable to purchase the whole of the said square he shall enter into a contract or contracts of purchase with so many of the owners of parcels of the said square as are willing to dispose of the same, at such price or prices as he deems reasonable, and as will leave remaining an ample sum to meet the expenses of acquiring the remaining parcels by condemnation, within the limit of cost hereinbefore provided; and in each and every such contract of purchase there shall be inserted a proviso that the same shall not be binding upon the United States unless a good and valid title to the whole of the real estate embraced in the said square shall be acquired by the United States at a cost not exceeding the said sum of $430,000; and he shall proceed to acquire the remaining parcels by condemnation in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the mode prescribed by an act of Congress, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library." approved April 15, 1886, and full jurisdiction in the premises is hereby vested in the said court: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended for the acquisition of the said site or any part thereof until a valid title to the same shall be vested in the United States.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which has been read, a second was demanded.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. My impression is that this bill was pending on suspension day a month ago.
The SPEAKER. It was

Mr. KILGORE. And if I remember correctly, a second had been demanded, pending which the House adjourned. The SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. KILGORE. Does not the same question now come up? The SPEAKER. It does; but the gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. KILGORE.

I object.
The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIB-The SPEAKER. BLE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGOBE] will act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 12.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded. The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Mocreary). Under the rules,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCreary). Under the rules, thirty minutes are now allowed for debate—fifteen minutes on each side. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Dibble] will be recognized to control the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kilgore] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. Dibble. Mr. Speaker, the site proposed in this bill is that agreed upon by a majority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds after considering all the various sites offered. In respect to economy, this site, considering the quantity of ground there is in the square, is as cheap as, indeed cheaper than, any site which has been offered. In situation it is eligible. This bill embodies, I think, a basis on which something may be done to expedite the acquisition of a site and the building of a city post-office, which we all know is a "consummation devoutly to be wished." mation devoutly to be wished."

I will reserve the residue of my time until I have heard what may be said in opposition to this measure.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I agree that this city ought to have a first-class building for post-office purposes, and that it ought to be located on a desirable site, but I can not conceive that it is the duty of the Government to pay $430,000 for the block named in this bill upon which to erect such building while the Government owns within the limits of the city plenty of ground which can be used for such purposes, affording more eligible sites in every respect for a post-office building than the block on Judiciary Square. These reservations owned by the city would cost nothing; they are well and favorably located, and it would be much better that some one of the numerous reservations belonging to the Government should be used for post-office purposes, and let the $430,000 which it proposed to expend in purchasing the site with such additional amount as may be necessary be used for the erection of a first-class public building.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, this is not a business-like proposition. The method which the committee presenting this bill has chosen to employ is just the reverse of the course a business man would pursue who was seeking investments in Washington. The block in view is covered by a number of first-class brick buildings. They certainly constitute at least half the cost of the block; and yet they can not be utilized at all for public purposes, and hence would have to be torn down and the rubbish removed, which, according to the old spelling-book, is "no small job."

Would a capitalist, a business man, buy valuable property and then proceed to destroy at least half its value in that way? And certainly no business man with money to invest would publicly announce the price he was willing to pay for a given piece of property without knowing what it could be bought at. He would first undertake to negotiate for it, ascertain the lowest price at which it could be bought, find out its true market value, and would satisfy himself it was worth the price asked for it before binding himself to the bargain. No one, it seems, has had authority to contract for the bargain. No one, it seems, has had authority to contract for the purchase of the property mentioned in the bill. No one seems to knew its value. It is not stated that this is the cheapest bargain that can be had. Yet the Government binds itself to pay $430,000 for the block in question, "hit or miss." It is unbusiness-like.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?
Mr. KILGORE. Certainly.
Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas, although his criticism may be true, whether it is not better to let some bill pass and send it to a committee of conference?
Mr. KILGORE. I do not know what action the Senate has taken.
My understanding is it has been in favor of appointing a commission to negotiate for property upon which to erect this city post-office building. If a site has to be bought at all, it seems to me this would be the ing. If a site has to l best course to pursue.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman from Alabama state what the Senate has done, for I should like to know?

Mr. OATES. The Senate has agreed on a different site.

Mr. RANDALL. And a different procedure.

Mr. ROGERS. A different lot at what price? We certainly ought to know and somebody ought to be able to tell us.

Mr. KILGORE. I agree there ought to be a building suitable to the

Mr. KILGORE. I agree there ought to be a building suitable to the demands of this city, but I do not agree to the passage of a bill largely in the interest of speculation.

Mr. CANNON. Am I correct in saying this site is west of Judiciary Square?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; it is the block upon which the police-court house is situated. My friend from Illinois ought to know where that building is located. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I know my friend does, because I was there as his attorney on one occasion. [Renewed laughter.]

I ask my friend whether he would be willing now to vote to make an appropriation of half a million of dollars to erect a city post-office building provided we would agree to erect that building 200 feet alongside or in the rear of the building now used as the city court-house? The building, you mean, on Judiciary Square?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. There we have the site for nothing. I will be willing to vote an appropriation sufficient for a building which ought to be put up in this city. I am perfectly willing to vote for a propo-sition of that kind, and for the necessary appropriation to erect the building.

Now, this is valuable property, valuable by reason of its situation, valuable because it is covered with buildings owned by private individuals who will insist on a high price; but if we buy the buildings they will be utterly worthless for a post-office, and they must be removed and a new building erected in their place. This is bad business. You hear of certain things being bad politics, but this is bad financiering for the Government, and it ought not to engage in it.

Beside I take it that an additional clause ought to be put on this bill and all others providing for public improvements in Washington. There has never been to my knowledge a public improvement prose-cuted in this city which did not wind up with a scandal more or less disgraceful. There should be a provision in the bill, if this purchase is to be made, for the appointment of a Congressional committee with authority to sit in vacation and to send for persons and papers to investigate the scandal which must inevitably grow out of this transaction. [Laugh-

How much the real-estate speculators of Washington are interested I do not know. The bill ought not to pass, and I trust it will not.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in the first place, that in the committee I did not vote in favor of the propriety of making the purchase which is contemplated here, not because I believed that more was asked for the proposed site than it was worth, but because I believed that the post-office should be located at a place more convenient of access for the people of the city, as well as those who are here transiently, and who are of necessity required to transact business with the post-office while they are here.

There has been a proposition before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds during the entire time that I have been a member of this House, coming from the Senate, to purchase the block of ground adjacent to the Post-Office Department.

The committee of the House has steadily refused to adopt that proposition, because after giving to the subject careful consideration we are satisfied that the plat of land indicated, when it shall be purchased by the Government and the building erected, will not cost the people of this country less than $6,000,000, and because of the fact that two-thirds or three-fourths, but I think at the extreme not more than twothirds, of the land can be purchased at private sale. The remainder of the site would have to be condemned, and nobody knows what that property would cost the Government until after the condemnation proceedings were had.

Now, my friend from Texas who has just spoken favors the taking of a reservation in the city and placing the building upon it. Mr. Speaker, we are now spending nearly $100,000 annually in this city to pay for the rental of private buildings for public purposes, and we are in some instances paying as much as 17 per cent. on the value of the buildings, while many of them are old tumble-down structures, really fit only for rats to live in. A great many new buildings, if the Government shall practice economy or desires proper buildings for the transaction of the public service, and where it can be done well and economically, ought to be built, and a good many such buildings will have to be built in the near future, or else we must go on paying such rents as I have indicated.

If you are to take a public reservation for the post-office site, I see no reason why, on the same ground argued by the gentleman from Texas, you should not take other parts of the public reservations for Texas, you should not take other parts of the public reservations for the other necessary public buildings; and then, after you have completed your work the city of Washington will be left with hardly a breathing place in it. Is this great capital of a great nation of 60,000,000 people to-day, with the prospect of 100,000,000 in the near future, to be left without an open spot, a breathing place, for its inhabitants? If so, why? Simply to practice a little petty economy. Why, Mr. Speaker, you have no park here now of any consequence. You have only what I may again call these little breathing places at the corners where the avenues and the streets intersect each other, and shall we, to gratify the economical designs of certain gentlemen, shut them up to gratify the economical designs of certain gentlemen, shut them up to save a few dollars necessary to purchase plats to erect outbuildings upon? I protest against it. I would not put the proposed post-office on Judiciary Square because, in the first place, I would not shut up that reservation, and, in the second place, it is out of the way from where the post-office should be. Where is the wisdom of putting it there? For the purpose of saving a few dollars a man might be willing to erect a stable in his front yard, and that of course would be a saving of money necessary to buy a suitable plat for it in the rear. But the question is, would it be good economy? It certainly would not be ornamental to have it there. And so I believe this great capital of the United States can afford to buy a lot of land in the right place where the post-office ought to be and pay a fair price for it, and it ought to do it, and then erect a post-office here that shall be fit to do the public business in a manner that will not dishonor or discredit the nation. the nation.

I have said that I did not vote for this in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but I shall vote for the passage of the bill because it will throw the subject in conference, and then, between the Senate and the House conferees, I have no doubt that we will finally succeed in getting a better plat at a lower price to build the post-office upon than the one which is now selected in the measure pending before the House. On that account I shall vote for the proposition.

Mr. KILGORE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I shall not consume so much time.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me proper that the House should reflect be-fore entering upon an act which will commit this Government to the purchase of the plat proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the erection of the proposed post-office building. The proposition before us is to buy for $430,000 the lot due west across the street, if I understand correctly, from Judiciary Square. Why not, if you are going into that immediate section to erect this building, take the Judiciary Square lot and put you building upon it, and save to the Government the amount required for this purchase, $430,000?

We are told that this is a matter of convenience to the citizens. But I venture to suggest that the people of the city are not in fact so much interested as gentlemen would have us suppose. I concede of course, as an absolute necessity, that this great city should have a proper and adequate post-office building; but under the carrier system, where we have employed at public expense a large number of letter-carriers who go to every part of the city, there is not that necessity which has been suggested for a large and expensive building or a particular or a censuggested for a large and expensive building of a particular of a central location, nor are the citizens so much interested as claimed by those who seek to authorize the purchase of this private property. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] has said that this should be a clean business transaction, and the Government should use its own land, which is as convenient a lot as that it is proposed to purchase, and can be utilized at a saving of nearly half a million of dollars. I ask if there is any sane individual that would not avail himself of that which there is any sane individual that would not avail nimself of that which he has and which is available for the purpose, rather than to put his hand in his own pocket and pay a half million of dollars unnecessarily for the privilege of putting this building on another lot adjacent to it?

The fact is that somehow or other, irresistibly and without our knowledge, every proposition to make an improvement in the city of Washind it as a motive power the purphase of privi ington seems to have behind it as a motive power the purchase of private land. I have experienced it myself from time to time in the vate land. I have experienced it myself from time to time in the committees on which I have served, and I can realize how others may have felt it. Here is a proposition for the purchase, at a cost of nearly a half million of dollars, of a lot right across the street from one owned by the Government. Why incur this expense when you have a suitable lot adjacent to it? You have the choice; which will you choose?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question? I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be in favor of shutting up the parks of the city?

parks of the city?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, there is nothing in that. On the contrary, my opinion and belief is that a proper post-office building on Judiciary Square would be an ornamentation to the park.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You put enough there and there will be no Ju-

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sowden].

Mr. SOWDEN. I recognize the force of the argument presented by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and it may not be out of place for me to state that I advocated in the committee the selection of the Judiciary Square, but a large number of the committee differed with me, and I acquiesced in the report of the majority. Every member of this House must recognize the public importance of the erection of a post-office building in this city. The present building is not only inadequate for the needs of the service, but a standing disgrace to the capital of the nation.

The President of the United States, in his last annual message to Congress, spoke in no uncertain terms upon this important subject, as appears from the following extract, which I will read:

The propriety and necessity of the erection of one or more prisons for the confinement of United States convicts and a post-office building in the national capital are not disputed. But these needs remain unanswered, while scores of public buildings have been erected where their necessity for public purposes is not apparent.

Now is presented an opportunity which is likely to be the only one at this session of Congress when the needs of the public might be pro-

The Senate has passed a bill selecting a site different from the one provided for in this bill. If we pass the bill now before the House we may accomplish something; otherwise, the matter may be deferred for more than a year.

The measure will undoubtedly have to go to a committee of conference, when the differences between the two Houses may be reconciled and a satisfactory solution of this vexed question agreed upon.

So far as I am individually concerned, I agree with my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

From a purely economical standpoint, I believe in selecting land owned by the Government for the erection of the necessary public buildings, provided the location is accessible and suitable for the convenience of the people and a proper transaction of the public busines

I shall vote for the present proposition, however, because I firmly believe that the matter can be satisfactorily adjusted in a committee of conference, and I fear it is the only way in which a bill can be passed in the closing hours of this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RANDALL. Would not the gentleman be in favor of remodeling the late court-house building, so that we could have a court-house, post-office, and other municipal offices here for the city of Washington?

Mr. SOWDEN. That is one of the reasons why I was in favor of the selection of Judiciary Square; but I was outvoted by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has ex-

Mr. KILGORE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. KILGORE. I yield that time to the gentleman from New York

[Mr. SPINOLA]. Mr. SPINOLA. The question narrows down to a clear business issue; and I doubt whether there is a member on the floor of this House, acting in a fiduciary capacity, who would create an outlay of $450,000 when he could accomplish the same purpose void of that expense.

Now, I am not opposed to the erection of a suitable building for a post-office for this city, and will vote for it at the proper time; but I post-office for this city, and will vote for it at the proper time; but I am opposed to the expenditure of $450,000 for a site when we have one right in the immediate vicinity of the lot proposed to be purchased that we can use without the expenditure of a single dollar. Now, there is a strong power, as indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], behind all of these Washington measures. It is a very powerful influence; whether electrical or otherwise I do not know; but it acts upon us and reaches us in such a way that bills are reported favorably and advocated on the floor of this House without regard to common sense and instice. common sense and justice.

I would like to vote for a post-office, as I have said, but will not vote for $450,000 to be paid for a site when we can get a far better one than that proposed to be purchased for nothing. For that reason I hope the proposition will not prevail.

Mr. DIBBLE. What seems to be the mistake made by gentlemen who have been speaking in favor of Judiciary Square is this: That it is not simply for this House to say where the site is to be. It requires the concurrent action of the Senate and the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had some little experience in relation to this question.

the concurrent action of the Senate and the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had some little experience in relation to this question.

It has been my sphere of duty in this House to have been for six years past on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I have myself held the position which has been advocated here to-day. I have been in favor of putting the post-office building upon Judiciary Square, but I realize two things: first, that that proposition has not met with general support on this floor, and, second, that the sentiment of the Senate (and I have been in contact with that sentiment for the last six years) is entirely converted to that proposition. Now, I think last six years) is entirely opposed to that proposition. Now, I think it is a good rule of legislation that if you can not get the best, or what you think is the best, then you should take the next best that you can get. This proposition, which has been brought in here from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was arrived at by mutual concessions among members of the committee, and, considering the size of the square, it is at least as cheap in every particular as any proposition that has been submitted to the committee.

The square is a large one, and it will furnish a site not only for the post-office, but also for the District offices and for a great many purposes of general departmental business which are now carried on in rented premises. It is well situated, on elevated ground; it is near the two depots where the mails come and go; it is a good site; and I am not one who, because I may agree in the abstract with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] or with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Spinola] or with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kil-Gore], will therefore say that the city of Washington, the capital of the nation, shall remain without a post-office building because I may think some other proposition would be better than the one that is presented. For these reasons, so far as I am concerned, I have yielded my views, as other members of the committee have yielded theirs, and we have brought in this bill as one step towards that consummation which we all desire. This site may not be agreed upon by the Senate; they may substitute another site, and then the matter will go into conference, and probably something will be agreed upon. At any rate, the necessity for this legislation is so urgent that I think the House ought to sacrifice something for the sake of getting a place for the city post-office, and this plan is quite as economical as any that has been suggested, if we once decide to go out of the public grounds for a site for this building. The Senate proposition proposes a site which can not be bought for less than a million and a quarter or a million and a half of dollars. That is the proposition of the Senate that has been sent us. Is not this better than that? If we are to go out of public grounds at all for a site, this is the most economical proposition that has been presented. There are 76,000 square feet of ground in the square; it is one of the largest squares in the city, at least double the size of the majority of those that have been offered, and I hope that the House will pass this bill, so that it may go to the Senate and become the basis of something definite.

The SPEAKER. Mr. KILGORE. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Is there any more time?

The SPEAKER.

The gentleman has one minute left. I yield that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. KILGORE. Mr. RANDALL. I merely desire to say that the first step which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] says he desires to take is a step in a contest between two private blocks or squares, and when we once take that step I fear we shut out entirely the proposition to put the building upon Judiciary Square.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman mean that the conferees would not have jurisdiction to select a site outside of the two contending

Mr. RANDALL. The Senate has declared for a site costing about a million and a quarter of dollars, and the House is asked to declare for a site which will cost about $430,000. For one I am opposed to both, because I believe that you should take Judiciary Square, which is a suitable and convenient site, without paying a dollar for it. The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] to suspend the rules and pass the

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 12329) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCreary). The next committee in order for the purpose of submitting a motion to suspend the rules is the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, on the last suspension day, when the Committee on Mines and Mining was reached, I was unavoidably out of my seat. I now ask unanimous consent that the Chair may return to that committee, in order that I may call up the bill which I would have called up had I been present at that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Indian Affairs and The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Indian Analysis and several other committees were passed, their rights being reserved. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] now asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Mines and Mining be allowed to retain its place, to be called after the other committees which have been . passed are called. Is there objection?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.
Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained from my seat when the Committee on the Militia was called. I do not know whether any member asked that the right of the committee be reserved; but if no such continuance was given, I now ask unanimous consent that the committee may retain its right to be called.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.

LEASES OF INDIAN LANDS FOR MINING PURPOSES.

Mr. PEEL. On behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move that the rules be suspended so as to pass, with the amendments reported by that committee, the bill (H. R. 6162) to authorize the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Natiors of Indians, respectively, to lease lands within their respective boundaries for mining purposes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and to validate leases heretofore made for said purposes by the proper authorities of any of said nations.

The bill as amended by the Committee on Indian Affairs was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectively, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to lease, in such manner as may be prescribed by the laws of said nations of Indians, respectively, lands within their respective boundaries, for coal-mining or other mining purposes, upon such terms and conditions and for such period as to said nations, respectively, may seem best, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and any contract for mining made and entered into in pursuance of the law of the contracting nation, by the person or persons, officer or authority prescribed by the laws of said nation making such contract, shall be binding and effectual upon such contracting nation, as well as upon the party entering into such contract with said nation.

Sec. 2. That all moneys arising from leases under the provisions of this act shall be paid to and receivable by the treasurer of the contracting nation, and expended in the same manner and for the same purposes as are other revenues or moneys belonging to said contracting nation: Provided, That any revenues or moneys arising under a contract of lease made with the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation shall be paid, one-fourth to the Chickasaw Nation and three-fourths to the Choctaw Nation.

Sec. 3. That the district courts of the United States for the western district of Arkansas and for the northern district of Texas shall have juri-diction of all controversies arising under this act where the interests of a citizen of the United States are involved, or where such citizen may be a party plaintiff or defendant; and for the purposes of this act the Indians, by birth or adoption, of said nations are hereby authorized to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, in said courts.

Sec. 4. That all lease contracts heretofore made with any of said nations and in pursuance with their laws, for coal-mining and other mining, and which shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. CHEADLE. I demand a second.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Peel] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 2.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cheadle] is willing to withdraw his demand for a quorum if he can be allowed an opportunity to offer to this bill an amendment limiting the period of these leases to fifteen years.

Mr. PEEL. Twenty years.

Mr. PEEL. Twenty years.

Mr. PEEKINS. The gentlemen in charge of the bill consent that this may be done, if satisfactory to the House. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let that portion of the bill be amended so as to read, "for such period not exceeding twenty years."

Mr. CULBERSON. I introduced this bill; and I hope that the agreement now asked may be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will require unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment indicated may be considered as pending, and that a vote be taken on it. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] can modify the bill which he has submitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that by unanimous consent the amendment indicated be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment indicated, to insert, after the word "period," in line 9 of section 1, the words "not exceeding twenty years," will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PEEL. I now modify my motion so as to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs and the amendment just inserted on the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. ADAMS. We can not understand what modifications are being made. I think the modifications should be read at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be done. Is the demand for a quorum withdrawn?

Mr. CHEADLE. I withdraw it.
Mr. PEEL. Now, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House as well as of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], who has made the inquiry, I wish to state that this bill simply authorizes the five civilized tribes to lease their coal and other mines for a period not exceeding twenty years. The bill itself provided no limitation in that respect, but the amendment provides that lease contracts of such lands shall be for a period not exceeding twenty years, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior in all cases.

Now, these Indians have been leasing their coal lands for many years past. Many of the leases were approved. It was believed the Department could authorize the making of such contracts, and many were approved by the Secretary of the Interior under that impression. The present Attorney-General, however, found a statute which prohibited lease contracts for temporary purposes by these Indians of their coal lands. Consequently this legislation has been rendered necessary.

The bill requires such leases shall be made under the laws and local regulations of the Indians themselves. Gentlemen must understand these tribes have their own governors, Legislatures, and various local officers; they have all the elements of good State government.

It is important to the country where these coal lands are located that they should be worked, but no company would venture to invest their money upon an uncertainty in relation to the validity of their leases. We merely provide these Indians shall do hereafter what they have done for years—that is, lease their coal lands. But we have in the amendment also provided that they shall not be leased for a period exceeding twenty reverse.

As I have already said, the provisions of the bill are to be carried out under regulations by the Indians themselves, and no lease is to be granted without their consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will this terminate the leases which have been already made?

Mr. PEEL. The leases heretofore made contain no limitation. They were made under the belief these Indians had the authority to make them for whatever period they might choose. The statute which the Attorney-General found, however, prohibits any such leasing of these Indian coal lands. The effect, therefore, of this legislation is to terminate all such leases.

Mr. BLOUNT. So, then, it is provided that all leases, past and present, shall be for a period not exceeding twenty years?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir. Mr. HOLMAN. Section 4 provides-

That all lease contracts heretofore made with any of said nations and in pursuance with their laws, for coal-mining or other mining, are hereby validated; and any controversy arising under such contract shall be under the jurisdiction of the courts aforesaid, with the same rights to the parties as are provided in section 3 of this act.

The result of the adoption of this provision would be to validate past lease contracts, and they would run forever.

Mr. PERKINS. Let that be amended so as to provide that those lease contracts shall be validated under the provisions of this act for a period not exceeding twenty years. I understood the amendment which has been agreed to covered past leases as well as the present

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not. Mr. PERKINS. Then let it apply to past leases as well as to pres-

The SPEAKER. The confusion is so great that it is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. PEEL. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the limitation not exceeding twenty years shall apply to all sections of the bill so as to cover all leases, past and present. Mr. HOLMAN. Afte After the word "validated" insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of this bill."

Mr. PEEL. That will cover it. Section 4 as modified was then read. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. CHEADLE. At what point in the bill has the limitation "not exceeding twenty years" been inserted?

The SPEAKER. After the word "period" in line 9, section 1.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to insert it also after the word "lease" in line 8; so it will read:

That the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectively, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to lease for a period not exceeding twenty years, in such manner as may be prescribed by the laws of said nations of Indians respectively, lands within their respective boundaries, etc.

Mr. PEEL. Very well, let it be inserted there. I have no objection

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. The object is to limit all leases, past and present, to a period not exceeding twenty years,

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks by unanimous consent that he have leave to extend his remarks on the Oklahoma bill. If there be no objection, leave will be granted for

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. PEEL. I move to add to section 4 of the bill the following: Provided, That the provisions of this bill shall not be deemed to apply to the Cherokee Strip or the so-called Oklahoma Territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; I object.
Mr. CHEADLE. I wish to suggest an amendment by which railroad corporations should be prohibited from making leases of these Indians. I do that for this purpose: Unless it is done, if you give railroad corporations the exclusive right of transporting coal, and also let them enter into these lease contracts, you will place the coal supply of that region in their hands as absolutely as it is in other sections of the country.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to state to the gentleman from Indiana that I do not know of any other way to get this coal out except by railroads.

Mr. CHEADLE. The reason I make this suggestion is that I believe the railway corporations of this country ought to be compelled to transact their business as common carriers, and not enter into other lines of trade out of which all of these great monopolies grow. It is for that reason, and for that only, that I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PEEL. As far as I am individually concerned I have no objection in the world, if the gentleman desires to move his amendment, that he shall have that privilege.

Mr. BLAND. It is a good amendment and I hope the gentleman will yield for it. The railroads get possession of these coal-mines and discriminate against private parties engaged in the same business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my colleague to ask unanimous consent to insert these words at the end of the section:

But no railroad corporation shall directly or indirectly become the lessees of Mr. CHEADLE. I accept that, and ask its adoption at the end of

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The bill as modified was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

INTERNATIONAL MONEY-ORDERS.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called. Mr. MONTGOMERY. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from $50 to $100.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That section 4023 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (second edition, 1878) be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

lows:

"Sec. 4028. The Postmaster-General may conclude arrangements with the post departments of foreign governments with which postal conventions have been or may be concluded for the exchange, by means of postal orders, of small sums of money, not exceeding $100 in amount, at such rates of exchange and compensation to postmasters, and under such rules and regulations as he may deem expedient; and the expenses of establishing and conducting such systems of exchange may be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect within six months from the date of its approval by the President.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second was not demanded.

The question was taken; and the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn. Mr. BACON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to take up a bill which was read this morning.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield for that purpose. The SPEAKER. This bill was read this morning. Is the reading of it again asked for?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it be read. The bill (H. R. 10832) for the establishment of a light-boat with fogbell on Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York, was again

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I shall object unless there is one recognition also given to this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] is next on the list if that consent is given.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the regular order.
Mr. MILLS. Then I renew the motion that the House adjourn.
Mr. BACON. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded, which is the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Tilder and 60 other citizens of the county of Orangeburgh and the voting precinct of Rivesville, in the State of South Carolina, stating that they were deprived of their right to vote for Presidential electors and member of Congress on the 6th day of November, 1888, at that election precinct. Wherefore the petitioners pray Congress to investigate the facts and the practical workings of the registration and election laws of the State of South Carolina, and devise some means to secure to them the free exercise of the right guarantied to them by the constitution of the State of South Carolina and the laws and Continuity of the United States. It was the programme of the petition to stitution of the United States. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3869) to secure the maintenance of public order during the inauguration ceremonies of 1889; which was read twice by its title.

MOUNT VERNON ROAD.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, I desire to report favorably from the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Vernon, and making an appropriation therefor. I hope I may have unanimous consent to state that I was under the impression when a committee agreed to report a bill over their signatures I could just lay it on the desk and that it would be considered as reported. I find I was mistaken in that, and therefore I have lost the opportunity to call up the bill, unless I can get unanimous consent this morning. In view of the fact that the chairman of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee, who is in charge of the tariff bill, is absent, I ask that this bill be now considered.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that he will be here presently, and he has asked me, soon as the morning business is over, to call up the tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia reports favorably from the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill named by him, and asks for its present consideration.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will not insist upon it, but I thought it would be proper to take it up at once and pass it. I do not think there is any objection to it. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be placed on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Senate may now proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read at length for information. The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to detail one or more engineer officers of the Army to make the necessary surveys for a national road from a point in Alexandria County, Virginia, at or near the Virginia end of the Aqueduct Bridge, and thence through the counties of Alexandria and Fairfax, in said State, to Mount Vernon, who shall report the same, together with the estimated cost of building such road, to the Secretary of War, who shall transmit the same to Congress.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the War Department, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia, as this is a Senate bill, so that it will not be required to send it back to us again, that instead of the words "to be expended under the direction of the War Department" the phrase should be "under the direction of the War Department "the phrase should be Secretary of War."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Very well. Let that change be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment, in section 2, line

2, will be made if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3870) for the relief of John Faunce; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

RECEIVING-SHIP CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLEB], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr.

CHANDLER, as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate a statement concerning claims for extra allowances to officers and men of the Navy based on sea service on receiving-ships, showing the total gross amount of such claims which have recently been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the total amount of such claims which been paid, the total amount of such claims now pending, and any estimate which may have been made in the Treasury Department of the probable total amount of all such claims; and that said Secretary be also directed to inform the Senate whether or not, either in the office of the Fourth Auditor or Second Comptroller, any lists of such probable claims for sea-pay and allowances for service on receiving-ships have been prepared in advance of the presentation by the claimants of their demands; and if so, why such lists have been prepared; and also whether or not clerks have worked evenings or otherwise out of office hours in preparation of the same; and whether or not copies of such lists or access to them or any knowledge of their contents have been allowed to or obtained by attorneys or claim agents; if so, who are such attorneys or claim agents; and further, whether or not any such claimants have, to the knowledge of the Treasury Department, paid or made bargains to pay commissions to attorneys or claim agents for collecting their claims; if so, what percentages have been agreed upon; and in addition, whether or not to the knowledge of the Treasury Department, attorneys or claim agents have inserted advertisements in the newspapers inviting correspondence from the heirs of officers or men of the Navy supposed to be entitled to extra allowances on account of sea service on receiving-ships; and if so, whether to the knowledge of the Department such advertisements have been prepared after the attorneys or agents have obtained access to or knowledge of lists of claimants from the accounting officer of the Treasury Department; and that the said Secretary be also directed to furnish to the Senate without delay a statement of all other material facts on the subject of said receiving-ship claims within the knowledge of the Treasury Department. ment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Clark, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6162) to authorize the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectively, to lease lands within their respective boundaries for mining purposes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and to validate leases heretofore made for said purposes by the proper authorities of any of said nations: and

A bill (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from $50 to $100.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Edward W. Robertson, late Representative from the State of Louisiana.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the rev-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after line 1381, in paragraph 340, page 142, down to line 1448, paragraph 353, page 144, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all grades and kinds of wool; wools on skins; top waste, slubbing waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes similar to them in character or description, composed wholly or in part of wool or worsted; woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, flocks, and wool waste not otherwise provided for in this act; and noils, a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Mor-RILL] has given notice of his desire to submit some remarks this morning, and I shall wait until he closes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate will proceed on the bill and amendments until 5 o'clock this afternoon, each Senator being permitted to speak for ten minutes, and but once only on each question.

Mr. SPOONER. Unanimous consent was given to the Senator from Vermont to proceed for twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unanimous consent was given that the Senator from Vermont should have twenty minutes this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from Vermont was to be permitted, by unanimous consent, to speak not to exceed twenty minutes. The Chair was announcing the general order of debate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I have sought the floor mainly for the purpose of preserving the symmetry of the Republican record in relation to its action on the tariff.

It has been my purpose to keep entirely out of the debate on the tariff bill now before the Senate, as I have full confidence in the competency of the Senators who have in the year past given many laborious days to the investigation of the subject, and who have the bill in ous days to the investigation of the stollect, and who have the bill in their special charge; but I am unwilling to remain entirely silent when as a calm looker-on I observe the sudden change that has come over the dreams of our friends on the other side of the Chamber. Last year they were prone to charge the Republican party with having no purpose to make any revision of the tariff, or any reduction of the revenue. In not altogether complimentary terms they assured the public that the Republican party were not to be trusted—that our professions in this direction were sheer precisely presented, and Republican party when a measure has been practically presented, and Republican party when a measure has been practically presented.

the revenue by a revision of the tariff on the system of protection approved by Washington, Hamilton, Madison, and Jackson, the measure is assailed by a chorus of vituperative epithets, as harsh to the ear as is assailed by a chords of vidiperative epithess, as larish to the ear as the discordant din of a calithumpian band. I am persuaded, however, that our people, prosperous as they will be under the continuance of a fair and reasonable protective policy, with a reasonable reduction of revenue, will be able to appreciate the fact that it is "a condition and not a theory" which now most troubles our Democratic friends, and this general denunciation that we have had for the past twenty days will only show, like the clubs found around the best tree of an orchard. that a protective tariff bears good fruit.

During the recent debate we have often heard the words "war tariff," as though we were continuing the rates of duty imposed during the late rebellion. If that were true, the North would have most reason to complain, as the North makes much the largest tariff contributions of revenue; but it is not true. Since 1865, and in years when the Republicans have had the control of both Houses of Congress, there have been at least twelve acts of tariff reductions.

The duties reduced, if they were now enforced according to the rates imposed in 1866, would yield a greater revenue by at least 50 per cent. In 1871 we made the breakfast-table free of any duty on tea and coffee, amounting to a reduction of nearly $23,000,000 as based upon the receipts of 1870. The imports free of duty in 1868 were only $15,147,-618, but in 1888 they were $244,104,852. The Republicans repealed also an immense amount-over two hundred millions-of various internal-revenue taxes, reducing the tobacco tax from 40 cents to 32 cents; again to 24, and from 16 to 8 cents in 1883. The tax on tobacco was reduced from 24 cents per pound to 16 cents in 1879, while a Pennsylvania Democrat was the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The dozen acts of tariff reductions are sufficient evidence that the Republicans, so long as they had the legislative power, were neither idle nor inattentive to any proper reduction of the war tariff and of the public revenue.

But when we come to look at the work of the Democratic party while holding a majority of the House of Representatives, where all revenue bills must originate, we find only the lean and gaunt picture of one tariff bill, and that was in 1879, for the repeal of the duty on quinine, from which $125,653 of revenue had been collected the previous year.

The House of Representatives was controlled by the Democratic party from 1875 to 1881, and from 1883 to 1888, and, until July, 1888, quinine is the sole decoration of the reduction policy of Democratic "tariff reformers," although our ears are here still stunned by the unceasing blare about "revenue reform." The work done by the Democratic party in the House of Representatives on internal revenue has been equally inconsequential, and is wholly covered by one act, the 8-cent reduction on tobacco, and that led by one who has been in some danger of being excommunicated from his party in consequence of his unbelief in the Mills tariff bill.

We are constantly told that a protective tariff is a tax and of no benefit to farmers. Vermont, the State I have the honor in part to represent, is largely an agricultural State, and in proportion to the number engaged in agriculture eclipses all the States as well as Territories in the total value per capita of all farm productions, and produces more horses, cows, oxen, sheep, hogs, wheat, corn, oats, barley, buckwheat, hay, and potatoes than any of the New England States except Maine, which is much larger in area and population. Vermont leads thirty States and Territories in the value of all real and personal property averaged to each inhabitant. Of millionaires we have hardly one, if any, but our people have excellent homes and are fairly prosperous. They fully understand that the encouragement of manufactures is an unfailing incidental protection to the pursuit of agricultu new manufacturing enterprise creates consumers and a wider and more profitable market for the farmer, and increases the value of his real estate. If our people are well-to-do, it is because labor has the always been held to be honorable, and because they have been trained to habits of economy for a hundred years. If some Southern States in comparison with Northern States, have not equal wealth, it should be remembered, not as a reproach but as their misfortune, that they long lived under a system for which our parent country, England, must be held as responsible—a system which only demanded manual labor from one half of their population and did not encourage economy on the part of the other half of their population.

But all this is happily changed, and the emancipation of the colored race has emancipated the whole people of the South from a system that has retarded their industrial prosperity. To-day the advantages to be reaped from a protective tariff are not so much in the North or in the East; but they will be most largely sought after in other directions, and the great West and the new South in the near future may be expected to be the chief competitors for the mastery in diversified industry. It is annually growing more and more an absolute certainty that nearly all the products of agriculture must mainly depend upon a home market.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] declared that he preferred the system of taxation which obtained in Great Britain to any other. That is the only free-tradesystem known in all the world; the Senator indorses it; and what have been its results? In five years after its adoption free bread, regardless of the bread-producers, diminished the population of Ireland three-eighths, and ejectments in Ireland rose eightfold, while the arrests for crime increased in like proportion. In twenty years following the repeal of the corn laws the production of wheat in Ireland and Scotland fell off one-half. The total acreage in Great Britain planted to wheat and its equivalents declined 1,900,000 From 1874 to 1882 the number of cattle diminished 320,000 head, and the number of sheep dwindled from 30,300,000 to 24,300,000, a loss of one-fifth, or 6,000,000.

It is notorious that free trade has proved disastrous to all landed estates in Great Britain, but the sacrifice had to be made or their supremacy in foreign trade surrendered.

The Mills tariff bill came to the Senate July 25, 1888, and the question arises, what is the matter with that? The answer is that it is an abandonment of protection, and every change proposed is either of absolute free trade or a step nearer to free trade. It was a bold withdrawal of protection to agriculture in almost every direction. The bill and the message of the President made free wool, woolen rags, shoddy, and mungo so conspicuous that the multitude of agricultural products which were consigned to the same fate has been almost hidden from The Mills bill proposed to open our markets free to all the world for-

Wool, Meats, Game, Poultry, Tallow, Milk, Bristles, Feathers, Flaxseed or linseed, Peas, Beans, Garden seeds, Vegetables, Coal oil, Oils, animal and fish, Flax, Hemp,

This list indelibly brands the House Democratic tariff bill as reckless and false to all the interests of the farmer, and these articles deserve further notice because they appear to have been placed on the free-list in accordance with what the last Canadian minister understood might be expected of the present Administration. I do not think Sir Charles has been thanked for divulging state secrets. The list given Sir Charles has been thanked for divulging state secrets. furnishes an illustration of the favors farmers may expect from a Democratic tariff. They will find it a free-trade scheme to give them an opportunity to buy their merchandise at low prices, while concealing the fact that they must at the same time sell at low prices all of their own products. The farmer rarely buys of his merchant merchandise equal to more than 10 per cent. of the amount of his annual agricultural products, and his prosperity therefore depends upon the prices of what he has to sell rather than upon the price of the limited amount of what he wants to buy.

Whatever protection for the farmer there is to be found in the House tariff bill has been copied from existing law, and there is not one original paragraph that proposes a new favor to agricultural products, while in many instances these favors are much reduced.

The Mills bill was un-American and framed to inspire foreign people with livelier hopes than our own. The large manufacturing towns of Great Britain were jubilant over the prospect opening here for a better and larger market for their merchandise. The Canadian Dominion, on the other hand, were to get ready to offer us a larger amount of their "natural products." Their exports are limited almost exclusively to lumber and agricultural products, and in 1886 were as follows:

Cheese	$7, 291, 686	Animal products	$4,734,466
Horned cattle			7,066,402
Horses	2, 232, 623	Barley	5, 724, 693
Sheep	1, 184, 106	Other agricultural products.	8,650,721

This shows that our Canadian neighbors are competitors with us for a market for their agricultural products; and that these products are based on cheaper lands and cheaper labor will hardly be disputed. The Mills bill would be all right for Canada and all wrong for the United

And now what is the character of the amendment proposed by the Senate to the tariff bill of the House of Representatives? It will, I think, be at once conceded that the Senate amendment as it now stands will make a reduction of revenue not less than the estimate in the report of the Committee on Finance, that is to say, of about seventy-three millions of dollars, including nearly twenty-four millions proposed to be removed on tobacco and cigars. Of the four hundred and forty paragraphs of the Senate amendment, covering existing laws, I have ascertained that the duties are proposed to be reduced in one hundred and ten of those paragraphs, or in one-fourth part of them. The tariff reduction upon sugar will decrease the cost of sugar to every family not less than I cent per pound. The bounty on sugar will also multiply the crops of the farmer by the introduction of a permanent and more profitable field crop, and ere long, it is believed, will make our country independent, whether in peace or war, as to one of the most expensive and important necessaries of life. The Senate amendment proposes over forty additions to the free-list, and it also proposes to remedy ascertained practical defects of existing laws, many of which have been pointed out by the Secretary of the Treasury. In fact the amendment is the fruit of vast labor, and is intended to be a whole and complete revision of the tariff. Should the amendment of the Senate become the law of the land, I believe it is not too much to claim that it will cover the country and every part of it with countless blessings.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, between the high rate of duty on wool proposed by the Senate bill and the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to adopt the provisions of the House bill making the importation of wool free, I voted for that amendment, not because it expressed my view, but because as between the two propositions I preferred free wool to wool taxed as high as is proposed by the Senate

The amendment which I submit proposes an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent. on the importation of foreign wools. This is a very modest per cent. on the importation of foreign wools. This is a very modest duty compared with that which is proposed by the Senate bill, which ranges from what would be an ad valorem duty of 81 per cent. down to a much lower rate; but it seemed to me that a 25 per cent. duty upon wool, with the advantage to the American wool-growers of the cost of transportation from foreign countries to this and passing through intermediate hands, would make a reasonable incidental protection to American wools. American wools.

I have seen a calculation, purporting to be from good authority, to

I have seen a calculation, purporting to be from good authority, to the effect that the cost, transportation, and handling of average imports amounts to the equivalent of about 15 per cent. of duty. If that be true, then a duty of 25 per cent, would really operate in its effect as a duty of 35 or 40 cent.

While this is nothing like so high a rate of duty as that proposed by the Senate bill, it is to be remembered that the duty thus to be paid upon these wools and the increased price springing from this duty is to be collected off the people, who in the main have to work harder for less pay than those engaged in raising wools. So it seems to me it would be equitable to put the rate of duty lower than is fashionable at this time to propose in the Senate.

at this time to propose in the Senate.

The amendment which I present is a substitute in a few lines for about three pages of the Senate bill, which proposes specific duties ranging all the way from 24 per cent. up to 81 per cent. I do not see the advantage of the adoption of specific rates for different classes of the things which come under the head of wool. It is alleged that it is to prevent undervaluation at the custom-houses. If that be the only reason, then it seems to me the answer to that is that if we have honest officials there will not be undervaluation, and that the adoption of specific rates will not make officials honest if they are not otherwise honest. So at last we must depend upon the integrity and honesty of the custom-house officers and not upon the question as to whether there

I have never agreed with the view presented in the House bill that wool ought to be free, unless it may be made free upon the basis of the argument which was there used for it, that by making free wool we could greatly reduce the cost of woolen fabrics. When we look at the rates of duty proposed by the House bill on woolen goods, where they propose to make wool free, and then at the rates of duty proposed to be imposed upon woolen goods by the Senate bill, where the rate upon wool is so high, it will be seen that there was much reason in that ar-

The rate upon woolen goods proposed by the House bill, I believe uniformly (certainly to a great extent), was about 40 per cent. This, added to the cost of transportation and handling, according to the calculation to which I refer, would make it operate as a protection of about 55 per cent. That is a very great reduction from what exists under the law as it now is. It is a reduction on the average receipts of 50 per cent. I have not made an accurate calculation, but the table will show that it is not less than 50 per cent. So if we reduce the duty on woolen goods 50 per cent., and take the duty off of wool, it would cheapen woolen clothes to the people, and perhaps might save them as much as wool-growers would lose by the failure to put an import tax on wool.

However that may have been, when we see the duty on woolen goods placed at rates ranging from 148 per cent. down to 63 per cent., as is the case in the Senate bill, it would seem strange that the wool out of which those goods were made should be made free.

Certainly those engaged in sheep husbandry are as much entitled to the favor of the Government as those engaged in other vocations. Be-sides that, it is an industry which in its results comes into competition with foreign wools, so that the condition upon which gentlemen advocate high protection is brought to bear with reference to wool.

Another reason I have for this is that it is one of the agricultural products of the country. I have had occasion more than once to refer to the fact that in this immense system provided for in the Senate bill for the transfer of the money and earnings of one part of the people and country for the benefit of another part, it was found necessary to leave agriculture out of its beneficial influence in order that we might have a field to draw revenues from to supply the means of enriching the beneficiaries of the Senate bill.

Sheep husbandry is a branch of agriculture. I would of course do what I could do to place it on a fair and equal basis with other industries. I know no way, however, under the facts which surround us, to be equally just to the men who plow and hoe, to the men who raise corn and cotton and wheat, and to the men who raise meats, because as to these things we export and do not import. That is, if we import any of them it is in a very unimportant degree, and no duty levied upon the importation of these things can benefit the millions of people engaged in these vocations. So they stand unprotected, uncovered by the law, and made to pay the bounties proposed to be conferred by this bill upon all the classes intended to be benefited by it.

It is something that is calculated to excite inquiry, if not surprise, in the mind that the manufacturers of woolen products do not prefer free wool as a means of increasing their profits. Evidence was read here yesterday from persons engaged in the business which indicated a good reason for such persons that they feared if they did not give a duty on wool they would lose the votes of the wool-growers in seeking protection for their own industries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, before the Senate bill was reported I had occasion to express to the Senate my views on this wool question in connection with the tariff, and I will read here what I then said as expressive of my views now:

expressive of my views now:

Wool ought to go on the free-list, just as all the bases of manufacture and all the machinery used in manufacturing should. Woolen clothing is as absolutely necessary to all the people of the United States, and made so by climatic and sanitary considerations, as quinine is in the malarial districts. Because it is recognized as a prime necessity in the treatment of diseases in many parts of the country, quinine was placed on the free-list. For infinitely stronger reasons woolen clothing ought to be cheapened to the lowest attainable point, and the first and most indispensable step in that directisn is to put wool on the free-list. When it is placed on the free-list, however, it ought to be done in the interest of the consumer, not of the manufacturer. The consumer should have the benefit of the reduction, not the manufacturer. A duty of $\frac{3}{2}$ per cent, would pay back to the manufacturer the difference between English and American wages in woolen manufacturer. A duty of 17 per cent, would return to the woolen manufacturer of the United States every dollar he pays out for wages in manufacturing wool. A duty of 20 per cent, would be highly protective of the manufacturer who uses untaxed wool. To allow the manufacturer of free, untaxed wool 30 or 40 or 50 per cent, protection for the manufacturer derice would, in my judgment, be an outrage on the consumer.

As I do not expect a bill passed which will meet my views, and do mean to accept what I can get in the way of tariff reduction, however far it may fall short of what I desire, I may be compelled to vote for a bill containing such an injustice; but if so, it will be against my most earnest protest, and after my best efforts to reform it.

Now, Mr. President, whenever the bases of manufactures, whenever the Now, Mr. President, whenever the bases of manufactures, whenever the different raw materials which enter into manufactures in this country different raw materials which enter into manufactures in this country are placed upon the free-list, I shall always be ready to put wool upon the free-list. The Mills or House bill and the Senate substitute proceed upon opposing theories. The Mills bill proposes to raise revenue for the support of the Government, giving incidental protection. The Senate substitute is constructed for protection, raising revenue incidentally. I have stood by the theory of the Mills bill by my votes in the Senate because I believe, while the bill is not such a one as I prefer in all respects, it represents the true principle upon which taxation should be levied and collected in this country. As to wool, lumber, salt, tin-plates, provisions, and all sorts of clothing, all in the every-day life of our people in constant use, the Mills bill deals in the interest of the great mass of the American people. It places some of these articles the great mass of the American people. It places some of these articles upon the free-list and others upon the tax-list, but the rate of taxation is the lowest that it was believed at the time the bill was constructed would commend itself to the American people. The Senate substitute imposes an increased rate of taxation upon these items and all others entering into daily and general consumption. It increases the burdens of living. It increases the cost of shelter, of clothing, of provisions. It increases everything that enters into the life, the support, and cost of living of the people of the United States Between these two bills could not hesitate as to choice.

The Mills bill placed wool upon the free-list. I have voted for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] to place it on the free-list here. I would not be willing to place wool on the free-list on the Senate bill, standing as it does now heavily protecting everything else. I voted to place it upon the free-list knowing that no such bill could pass the other House in its present form and believing that whenever it goes there and is sent to a committee of conference between the two Houses it must be changed, and that if concessions were made by the House to the Senate on one side the Senate would be compelled to make concessions to the House on the other, and in this adjustment that justice will be done to the wool as to other in-

The views which I expressed in the speech from which I have just read are the views I entertain now, and they are the views I have expressed in the votes I have cast on this bill.

Mr. President, I have no hope that any measure of relief from oppressive taxation will pass this Congress. The theories of the two bills now before the Senate are irreconcilable. I regard the debate and discussion of this session of Congress and of the previous session as simply educational. I believe the people will take hold of this subject and examine it and understand it for themselves. I do believe the time examine it and understand it for themselves. I do believe the time will come when the true principles of government with reference to taxation will be reasserted, when the people will return to them, when the Government will be administered upon them, when taxation for the support of the Government alone will be regarded and held and established as the only legitimate taxation under a free government.

The time will come when the people will look back to the bill that is before the Senate, and which will pass the Senate but not the House, as a monstrous attempt at legislation in the interest of a few at the expense of the great mass of the people. The correct principles of government will be reasserted, and I say, Mr. President, to the Senators on the other side that they need not lay the flattering unction to their souls that the issue is determined. It is not determined, and it will never rest until the great mass of the people of this country are permitted to live free of any exaction except that which is necessary for the support of their Government. I shall vote for the amendment offered by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I voted for free wool, and therefore I can not consistently vote for this amendment. I voted for it notwithstanding the pretended claim made upon the other side of the Chamber in behalf of protection. The party seeking what is called protection now are divided into three classes: First, the bulk of dealers and jobbers; the second class is the manufacturers, some of whom are said to be opposed to free wool and some of whom are said to be in favor of it; and the third party appearing to be the wool-growers, estimated by the honorable Senator from Ohio to be 1,000,000. There is a much more numerous class, however, of the American people who are interested. The persons who wear and use woolen clothing and woolen fabrics embrace, I think, the whole population of the United States, 65,000,000. They exceed in numbers the wool-growers or the woolen manufacturers, or any other parties who are interested in the product of wool. I think they are also the parties who most need protection, and that we, in voting to take the tax off wool, are thus the true protectionists affording protection to the most numerous class and those who most need it.

I doubt very much the circumstances recited here about the decrease in the number of sheep and the decrease in the amount of the wool product. I doubt whether if the fact exists it has had any connection with the tariff legislation upon this subject. These statements are antiquated fallacies long ago exploded, that two things contemporaneous must necessarily bear the relation to each other of cause and effect

Vicious as I believe a high prohibitory system to be to all the indusrial interests of the country, I would not yet think that the cholera or the yellow fever, though both of those plagues have visited us during the regime of prohibitory tariffs, are in any measure to be attributed to that system. I believe, indeed, that tariff legislation has had no more to do with those pestilences than it has had to do with the fact stated by the honorable Senator from Ohio. Even if it were true it would be the country of the requirement. not change my course. I believe a large amount of the revenue paid upon imported wools will be added immediately to the price of the domestic article—that the wool-grower, one of the factors, and the most numerous, will be to that extent benefited by untaxed wool. Even if that were not so I do not think that men, women, and children should be scantily or meanly clad for the sake of clothing sheep better or for the sake of increasing the number of sheep or clothing them with fine and long wool instead of coarse or short wool.

I believe the sheep was made for man, not man for the herd or flock, and that therefore if the interests of the herd and flock collide with the interests of humanity the former must be subordinated. But I do not think there can be any collision. No legislation can bring it about. The great industry of sheep culture and all the factors dependent upon it will find their profit, not by virtue of legislation, but in spite of legislation hostile to it in the necessities of the country.

The question was asked by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr.

VANCE], and by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with reference to this wool schedule generally, and with reference to the metal schedule, and with reference to all the schedules in this bill, why is the highest rate of duty, or a very high one, placed upon the cheaper

In this case the cheapest and the coarsest fabrics of wool are subject to the highest rate of duty and the finer fabrics are subject to a lower one. That is a question every way worthy of an answer. It has not been answered. It remains without answer. The reason is obvious. These monopolists now in existence, protected by the high prohibitory tariff, and the monopolists by the passage of this law to be protected, under which I have no doubt a new species of this vermin will appear who will crawl to the surface like grubs and worms after a rain-storm in summer-both these classes know very well that to place the highest rate of duty upon an expensive article will give them the command simply of a limited market; the tribute-payers (and these are very few) will be composed only of a number of our people who are wealthy and well-to-do, who can buy and use such articles of fine or refined

But when you impose the highest tax upon articles of coarse material then, the tax or tribute payers being coexistent with the population of the Republic, every man, woman, and child becomes subject to that exaction and the monopoly becomes universal. This is undoubtedly the reason of this discrimination. Therefore, dividends accrue to the owners and holders of shares of manufacturing corporations, and large fortunes are made within two or three years and they often retire. Such persons under the provisions of this bill may retire from active business in a very short period. They have become men of wealth, men of capital. They subscribe liberally to the Home Market League: they pay penny-a-liners to malign the Democratic party as an English party, as a French party, as a German party, as an Austrian party. They eat, drink, and are merry. They have solved the alchemy of life itself—solved it by an act of Congress merely to extract from the earnings of others the abundant means of their own luxury and fashionable display.

1 very much regret that the consideration of such a measure should not only occupy the day but should have fallen to a night session and a session before 12 o'clock. I do not think it would have hurt the measure to have had a full session in all the consideration given to the

I suppose all have concluded now for several weeks that this magnificent scheme of eclectic plunder will reach here its consummation, and will to the extent of the action of this body receive the sanction and The victim is bound securely to the altar. way or hope of escape. Why should there be any unseemly orunusual haste in offering the sacrifice? Is it indispensably necessary that this stupendous holocaust of the interests of land and labor should be of-fered up on a day certain? For notwithstanding what is said about diversifying interests, I remind honorable Senators that taxation can not be diversified. All these taxes will come from the product of land and labor.

Again, sir, there may be other considerations. How far, sir, will the high prohibitory features of this bill, those features which distinguish it from the original bill, which distinguish it from every other measure ever reported to the American Congress-those features which propose absolutely to destroy the American protective system and to substitute in its place the Chinese system of prohibition and of prohibitory duties and rates of commercial exclusion-how far will these gain acceptance outside of this body?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. Like the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], I voted for free wool, but unlike him I shall vote for this amendment ing to get free wool, I shall vote for the amendment because it approximates free wool very much more nearly than that part of the bill for which it is proposed to substitute the amendment. If I can not get free wool I will come as near it as I can, and for that reason I shall very cheerfully vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], on which the yeas and nays

Mr. ALDRICH. I now ask that Schedule D, on page 119, may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE D .- WOOD AND WOODEN WARES,

SCHEDULE D.—WOOD AND WOODEN WARES.

199. Timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

200. Timber, squared or sided, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, I cent per cubic foot.

201. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber of hemlock, white-wood, sycamore, and bass-wood, $1 per thousand feet board measure; sawed lumber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $2 per thousand feet board measure; but when lumber of any sort is planed or finished, in addition to the rates herein provided, there shall be levied and paid for each side so planed or finished 50 cents per thousand feet board measure; and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1 per thousand feet board measure; and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand feet board measure.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the word "measure," in line 815, the committee move to insert "white pine, $1.50 per thousand feet board measure."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 201, line 815, after the word "measure," it is proposed to insert:

White pine, $1.50 per thousand feet board measure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore.
The Chief Clerk read as follows: The reading will proceed.

202. Hubs for wheels, posts, last-blocks, wagon-blocks, oar-blocks, gun-blocks, heading-blocks, and all like blocks or sticks, rough-hewn or sawed only, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
203. Staves of wood of all kinds, 10 per cent. ad valorem.
204. Pickets and palings, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
205. Laths, 15 cents per one thousand pieces.
206. Shingles, 35 cents per one thousand.
207. Pine clapboards, $2 per one thousand.
208. Spruce clapboards, $1.50 per one thousand.

Mr. VEST. I move now to strike out in the paragraphs that have been read, commencing with paragraph 199, those words which impose a duty and to insert in lieu thereof in each case "shall be admitted free of duty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please send his amendment in writing to the desk, so that it may be properly incorporated in the Journal.

Mr. VEST. That would take some little time, and my whole object is to place these woods, commencing with "Timber hewn and sawed," and the manufactures of wood, upon the free-list. I could have made the motion to the first paragraph as well as to the others, but I preferred to wait until we reached furniture, so as to raise the whole question upon one motion instead of several.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be impossible to keep the Journal entries correctly unless the amendment is made more specific.

Mr. VEST. Very well; then I will raise the whole question by moving in paragraph 207 to strike out "$2 per one thousand" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 207, line 834, it is proposed to strike out the words "two dollars per one thousand" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty;" so as to read:

Pine clapboards shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. VEST. By turning to the free-list upon page 183 of the bill reported by the Finance Committee, it will be found that the following articles of wood are put upon the free-list:

articles of wood are put upon the free-list:

Wood.—Logs.

Fire-wood, handle-bolts, heading-bolts, or stave-bolts, and shingle-bolts, hoppoles, railroad ties, ship-timber, and ship-planking.

The effect of these pravisions is simply this, that as to railroad ties.

The effect of these provisions is simply this, that as to railroad ties—
Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not

Mr. VEST. I will not yield to any question, for the reason that I have only ten minutes and it would come out of my time.

Mr. BLAIR. All right.
Mr. VEST. I do not mean any discourtesy, but I am compelled to decline to allow interruptions.

It will be seen from these provisions on the free-list that railroad ties, after they are prepared to be put down upon the tracks of the road, are put upon the free-list, and yet I take it that there are no corporations in this country which in their means and organization are more able to take care of themselves and of their interests than the railroads of the United States.

It will be seen also that timber for ship-building, planks, etc., are put upon the free-list, which is a discrimination in favor of the woodenship builders and ship owners of the United States. It will also be seen that cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, mahogany, and all woods that are used for luxurious and unnecessary purposes for the rich and the wealthy are placed upon the free-list. The object of my amendment is simply to extend that provision to the ordinary consumers of the United States. After the close of the war the Republican party took the taxes off of the railroads, and off of banks, and off of incomes, and now we ask them to extend the same sort of legislation to the settlers upon the wild lands of the West who need lumber for the most ordinary and necessary purposes of human life.

I might quote one of the great leaders of the Republican party against the idea of placing internal-revenue taxes upon lumber. I refer to Mr. Blaine, who a number of years ago, when that question came up in the House of Representatives, of which he was then a member, made an eloquent appeal in behalf of the settlers in the great West, assuming as a matter of course (because, although it was a question of internal revenue, the argument applied just as well to tariff taxation, so far as the necessities of the poor men were concerned) that lumber was an absolute necessary of life and should be made as cheap as possible to the people of the country.

But we are again confronted with the question whether the removal of this duty will decrease the cost to the consumer. I shall not go over that argument again, but I simply refer to past legislation to show the construction that has been put upon this removal of the lumber-tax by the Congress of the United States in both branches.

When the town of Eastport, Me., was destroyed by fire a proposition was made by the members from Maine to remove the duty from lumwas made by the members from Maine to remove the duty from lumber in order to assist the people of that city who had been visited by this terrible calamity. When Chicago, with its magnificent business houses and palaces, was wrapped in billows of flame and fortunes disappeared in a single night, the representatives of the great State of Illinois appeared here and asked that lumber, with other materials for building, be put upon the free-list in order to give relief to the people of that fire-stricken city.

I have before me the history of that legislation. I have here the report upon the bill introduced by General Logan, then a member of the Senate, to give this relief to the people of Chicago, and a voluminous report made by the Committee on the Judiciary as to its consti-

Senator Carpenter then raised the question in behalf of the lumber interests of Wisconsin that this legislation was unconstitutional, and for weeks the debate was carried on in this Chamber as to the constitutionality of that measure. Finally the Judiciary Committee, under the lead of Mr. Carpenter, made a majority report against the constitutionality of the bill, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds], with Senator Wright, of Iowa, made a minority report upon the other side, Senator Carpenter reporting that the bill was unconstitutional, and the Senator from Vermont and Senator Wright holding that it was constitutional.

I have here the vote by which the Senate passed that bill and sent it to the House of Representatives, including lumber, and I have the debate in the House where the Representatives from Wisconsin and Michigan appeared in behalf of the lumber interests of those States and objected to the bill because they said it discriminated against their constituents by taking this duty from the proceeds of the sale of lumber by the lumber owners, the owners of those vast tracts of lumber lands in these great Northwestern States and in those great Northwestern States; the whole argument assuming that the removal of the duty inured to the benefit of the consumers in Chicago and militated against the interests of the timber owners in Wisconsin and Michigan.

In this Chamber Senator Chandler, representing the lumber owners in Michigan, fought the bill from the beginning, and the debate lasted here, as I have said, over three weeks. When the bill went to the House of Representatives Mr. Conger, lately a Senator in this body and then an active member of the House, opposed it upon the same ground, stating that immense forest fires had swept over Michigan and the same ground that immense forest fires had swept over Michigan and the same ground. gan, and it would be unjust to take this duty off in behalf of the city Upon the motion of Mr. FARWELL, of Chicago, then a of Chicago. member of the House and now a member of this body, lumber was as a compromise stricken out of that bill, and I call attention to the statement made by Mr. Finkelnburg, from my own State, after it was

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that after consultation with gentlemen representing the various interests affected by this bill it has been understood that this proposition will in the main be satisfactory to all interests; and therefore I desire, on the part of those I represent, that with this amendment the bill for the relief of Chicago may be passed and go into operating the state of the st tion as soon as possible.

Mr. Finkelneug. I suppose the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] means to say that the delegations from Wisconsin and Michigan, having saved their lumber interests, are willing that anybody else may be sacrificed.

I refer to these debates and to the law upon the statute-book, which I have before me now, with lumber stricken out at the instance and under the opposition of the Representatives of the great lumber interests of the Northwest, who declared that no such discrimination in favor of the people of Chicago should be made, because their own constituents had also suffered from conflagration in the forests and they should still be permitted to reap the benefit of the $2 a thousand tax upon imported lumber.

We are told that the records of Maine have the right to this tender.

We are told that the people of Maine have the right to this tax because they are put in sharp competition with the Canadians; but the other day we found a provision in this bill which permitted the citizens of Maine owning forests in that part of the State which lies across the St. John River to take their lumber down that stream, land it upon the shores of Canada, then have their work performed upon it by Canadian laborers, and then brought back into the United States and sold to my constituents in the West.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is mistaken there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. President, I certainly hope that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] will not be adopted. Representing in part the State of Michigan, whose citizens are largely engaged in this industry, I desire to submit a few remarks upon this general question. I intended to have entered an objection to the provision proposed by the committee. While I dislike to differ with the committee, I am unable to find any good reason for the proposed re-

The lumber interest of the country is a vast one, and by the census of 1880 only two industries of the country exceeded it in value.

Farm produce consumed	30,000,000

From this statement the magnitude of the business will be understood.

Now the question is, why should lumber be protected?

First. In reply I would say, because the timber standing is worth and costs from $4 to $6 per thousand feet, standing in the tree, in the white-pine region of the United States, while in Canada it costs but $1.

Second. Because the labor expended upon it, to fit it for the market, costs not less than 33½ per cent. more than it does in Canada.

Third. The expresse cost of labor in making lumber is not less than Third. The average cost of labor in making lumber is not less than $6 per thousand feet. So that the difference in the cost of labor alone equals the present amount of duty, namely, $2 per thousand feet. So that, even upon the theory laid down by the President in his message, the present duty should be maintained to equalize the difference between labor here and in Canada.

The difference in freight to New York or Buffalo is less than upon Michigan or Wisconsin lumber, and to Chicago is not over $1 per thousand more, while the difference in cost of stumpage is from $3 to $5 against the American manufacturers.

It has been said that when you call the cost of stumpage $3 to $6say an average of $4-that you allow to the lumberman an immense profit upon his timber. It has been said in the discussion of this question elsewhere that these pine lands were bought of the Government at 10 shillings per acre, and that when you reckon stumpage at $4 per thousand feet it gives the lumberman an immense gain upon its cost.

Now, the facts are that a large proportion of these lands in Michigan and elsewhere were put into market and largely sold in 1836-'37. They were bought largely by Eastern parties and were held by them very largely till 1857 or 1860, and were sold to mill-men or others at from $10 to $15, and this price only gave them 6 per cent. interest and amount paid for taxes during those twenty years.

Lumbermen who purchased these pine lands in 1857 to 1860 find that allowing 6 per cent. interest and taxes, to this date, makes their pine lands cost them $40 to $45 per acre. Ten thousand feet per acre is a good average cut per acre, which, at $4 per thousand feet, would only give them $40, or the cost of the land; so that you will see that the much-abused pine baron only gets back his investment when he realizes $4 stumpage. During all the years he has held these lands he has paid large annual taxes, town, county, road, and school taxes, contributing his full share to the development and improvement of the country.

It should be kept in mind that his Canadian competitor simply pays upon his leased timber limits an annual tax of $1 per square mile, and $1 per 1,000 feet upon the amount he cuts and removes annually, having no other taxes to pay and no risk of forest fires and windfalls, and no large investment in timber lands to be carried by the business has been claimed in the discussion of this question elsewhere that large numbers of the low-priced Canadian laborers come over and are employed by our lumbermen. The fact is, that while many Canadians do seek employment in American pineries, still they are, as a rule, strong, sturdy fellows, brought up to the business, and earn full Ameri-

About 5 or 6 per cent. of the lumber consumed in the United States comes in from Canada, and, in my opinion, all you reduce the duty on lumber will be added by the Dominion Government to the price of their stumpage, and no purchaser of lumber in this country will be benefited by it.

These being the facts as to the relative cost of producing lumber in this country and in Canada, why should the present duty of 16 per cent. be reduced, unless the principle of protecting American industries is to be abandoned? Not less than 60 per cent. of the total cost of lumber is the cost of labor and woods supplies, and that labor, as I have before stated, is paid not less than 33\(\frac{1}{3}\) per cent. more than the same labor is paid in Canada.

I understand that the States which produce no lumber would like to buy it as cheaply as possible. But when the lumber duty is among the very lowest on the entire list-and they should remember that this industry employs and supports 150,000 men, who consume $30,000,000 of their farm products as well as a vast amount of manufactured articles, which all tends to their prosperity. These 150,000 men must be employed somewhere, and if not employed in producing lumber, and all turning their attention to growing wheat and corn, I fear our friends in the West would soon feel the change. I do not believe lowering the duty on white-pine lumber would give the purchaser in the West cheaper lumber; but the difference would go into the Dominion treasury, and at the same time it would disturb and cripple the lumberman in this country.

Our claim for the retention of the present duty on lumber is the most modest and honest claim made by any class of manufacturers in this country, and I therefore hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is not in the Chamber.

Mr. VEST. I am in the Chamber.

Mr. PALMER. Ah! I always like to hear him talk because he talks equally well on all subjects, and when the facts are not to his hand his imagination supplies arguments that are about as convincing as the conclusions he draws from facts for premises. He talks this morning as if he were in the Canadian Parliament. It is the same argument that we hear of there, the great humanitarian argument, cheap lumber for the people of the West.

There is a demand for cheap lumber as there is for everything else cheap, but I contend that the imposition of the tariff has given the people in the long run cheaper lumber to-day than they would have had if the lumber interest had not been protected, and for the very reason I shall state. The Canadian lumber that comes into competition with American lumber is the lumber of low grade. With the protection of $2 a thousand the American lumberman has been enabled to save all of the coarser qualities, which amount in Michigan alone to 800,000,000 feet a year; and which, if it was not for the tariff, would be left to rot in the woods, and would be an intrinsic loss. Possibly the Senator can not appreciate the amount of lumber contained in 800,000,000 feet. It would make three fences five boards high around the earth at the equator. That would have been thrown away each year for the last ten years if it had not been for the tariff; and I will leave it to any gentleman of this Chamber with common reasoning faculties whether that abstraction from the supply of the country would not have brought lumber up to a higher price than it is to-day

What has been the advance? I will send up some tables which I will not read, but would like to have incorporated in my remarks, showing that whereas lumber has advanced only $1 a thousand in the last twenty years the stumpage has increased from $4.50 to $6.

That apparent anomaly is accounted for in this way: That lumber-men, by reason of the tariff, have not only taken all the coarser logs which have filled a place in the consumption of the country, but they have dug up logs from the very earth, and they are digging them up to-day and taking them down to the mills of Michigan to be sawed. Whereas, if there had been no duty on lumber, there would have been wasteful cutting in the Northwest and in Canada, and lumber would have necessarily been higher because of the diminished supply

In regard to the Chicago fire, if the Senator had looked over the whole of that discussion he would have seen that one of the reasons why the duty was not thrown off of lumber for the Chicago sufferers was because there was fear of fraud. It was distinctly charged that instead of lumber being admitted for the Chicago sufferers alone a break would have been made that would have enabled the whole West to have been supplied with lumber free of duty.

I am sorry that I shall have to hurry along with my remarks, for I I am sorry that I shall have to nurry along with my remarks, for I have a great deal to say. In addition to the arguments for protection that my colleague [Mr. Stockbridge] has advanced, I will state another one. Canada with the true British instinct of promoting all of its industries subsidizes her lumbermen. Our lumbermen get no advantage from the United States except the incidental advantages from protection. The Canadian lumbermen have their booms built to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars by the Canadian Government. It would be a direct discrimination against our lumbermen if you should admit lumber free.

if you should admit lumber free.

Then, again, they sell their lumber in Canada by limits, as it is called. There are certain ground rents; certain timber duties. As a matter of course it is loosely conducted. They get their stumpage for little or course it is loosely conducted. They get their stumpage for little or nothing. They pay none of our taxes; and, as my colleague has said, they only pay 75 per cent. as much as we pay for labor.

The great point is this: The Senator from Missouri made the remark that there was a discrimination against the poor in favor of the rich by admitting these luxurious woods free. The difficulty with the gentlemen on the other side is that they never seem to rise to the comprehension of this subject of a protective tariff. Why are luxurious and expensive woods like mahogany admitted free? Because they give work to American laborers. The log only is admitted free from Honduras. It comes here in American or foreign bottoms; it is put on American cars made by American mechanics, trundled off to an American shop, hauled on American drays, worked up by American workmen, put into houses or furniture by American workmen. The logs that cost $500 in the city of New York cost when put into furniture and into a house from $8,000 to $50,000. The difference between the $500 and the $50,000 all goes to $50,000. The difference between the $500 and the $50,000 all goes into American labor.

If the Senators on the other side would only turn the telescope around, if they would not look through the big end and minimize all these advantages, they would see the great benefit of a protective tariff to American workmen.

In regard to wooden ties for railroads, they have always been on the free-list, I believe. There has been no contention that they should be taxed, although I should be very glad to see them put upon the dutiable-list.

If the tariff should be taken off from lumber, I have no doubt within two years lumber would be much higher than if the duty is refained. The very economy practiced in the cutting of timber, the very closeness of the market has compelled our people to resort to all the devices by which an honest dollar can be turned, and now there are put into rivwhich an honest dollar can be turned, and now there are put into rivers of Michigan and Wisconsin and sawed into lumber for transportation millions of feet of logs that would otherwise be left in the woods. I should regard the taking off the duty on lumber as not only a blow against the lumbermen of Michigan, New York, New Hampshire, and Maine, but as a blow against the farmers directly, because in the present state of the lumber business almost every farmer has a little lumber to see the second secon

In regard to strikes and lockouts, of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] spoke a few days ago; in the lumber business strikes are very infrequent, and when they occur they generally inure to the benefit of the strikers. They have never struck in our State for higher wages. They have struck for shorter hours, and they have got

In regard to the bounty-fed aristocracy, I will say the Senator will not find them among the manufacturers of this country. The way to keep down or to destroy a bounty-fed aristocracy is to distribute your manufactures all over the country and not have great cities built at the termini of great railroads, where the Vanderbilts and Goulds, the Rhinelanders and the Stewarts, amass immense fortunes in railroads, in transportation, in banking, and in importations; factories should be distributed all over the country. You will find among the great fortunes of this country that none of them have been made in manufactures. They have all been made by exchange, by transportation, or by the selling of goods. The way to cure that, and the way to cure it in the South as well as in the North, is to distribute by the protective tariff the benefits of protection and of manufactures.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Missouri moved to strike out all of the words which impose a duty in all the paragraphs down to paragraph 208. The Chair announced that that could not be done unless reduced to writing, so that the clerks could keep the record properly. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri I move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri his first motion reduced to writing, to wit: In line 809, to strike out "25 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert the words "free of duty;" in line 812, to strike out the words "one cent per cubic foot" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "free of duty;" in lines 814 and 815, to strike out the words "one dollar per thousand feet board measure" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "free of duty;" in lines 816 and 817, to strike out the words "two dollars per thousand feet board measure" and insert "free of duty;" in line 827, to strike out "20 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "free of duty;" in line 829, to strike out "10 per cent. ad valorem" and to insert "free of duty," and the same in lines 831, 832, and 833, striking out the rate of duty and inserting the words "free of duty" in each case. each case.

I move this amendment for the purpose of saving time and allowing those of us on this side of the Chamber who are in favor of free lumber to express our sentiments by one vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to include the same amendments to paragraphs 207 and 208 which have been read?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; it will include those paragraphs also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be treated as one question, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I was going to suggest that in order to make the issue clear and distinct and have it disposed of at a single vote, I hope there will be no objection to the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina being made in the form proposed, and that the amendment may be considered as one. olina being made in the considered as one.

Mr. VANCE, As one.

Mr. HALE. And a vote to settle the question.

Mr. HALE. And a vote to settle the question.

Mr. HALE. And a vote to settle the question.

Mr. HALE. And a vote to settle the question.

Mr. HALE. And a vote to settle the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] states that the lumber item was stricken out of the existing law upon the statute-book for the relief of sufferers by the Chicago fire because it was apprehended that fraud would be perpetrated under the revenue laws of the country if that should be done. That will not do, Mr. President, because the law which I have before me provides that "there shall be allowed and paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, on all materials except lumber," etc. I have explained fully why lumber was stricken out in the House of Representatives. It was done at the instance of lumber owners or their representatives in the Northwestern States

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator let me interject a remark?

Mr. VEST. Certainly, just a remark.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator will find proof of what I said in a communication signed by Avery & Murphy, Charles Merrill & Co., and others, which was read in the Senate at that time.

Mr. VEST. I have read every word of that debate in the Senate and in the House, and I think that I can state with accuracy what it was. The point was made that fraud would be perpetrated by remitting the duty on lumber, and the reply was made, which I make now, that this same objection applied to brick and mortar and all the materials that went into the matter of rebuilding or building houses. That point of fraud was overruled, as is shown by the text of the existing law which lets in free of duty all materials except lumber, and the House of Representatives struck out lumber at the instance and under the opposition of the representatives of the lumber interests in the great Northwest.

We are confronted again in the discussion of this question with that ever-recurring commercial specter, the trust and combine that is created just as soon as you shut out foreign competition, allowing the domestic producers or manufacturers to put up prices to suit themselves and their interests without regarding those of the consumers. I saw in the paper yesterday morning, the Washington Post, I think, or in a New York paper, a statement that the lumbermen were now in secret session at a point in the State of Michigan for the purpose of reconstructing or adding additional features to the lumber trust which is now in existence in the United States. I know it has been denied that there was such a trust, but I find in the New York Tribune of March 7 last the following statement to the effect that there is such a

The pine-lumber pool has succeeded during the past year in advancing the prices of lumber $12 to $15 per thousand, on the ground of high shipping rates and increased wages. The grounds for the advance are trivial, as the wages of the men are only $5 more per month and the running expenses of the vessels are no greater. The pool, which has adopted all the methods of newly invented trusts, has simply made the people of California pay about one and a half millions into its pockets. It controls ships and mills, and regulates the prices of pine lumber to suit itself.

In the North American Review as far back as June, 1884, I find an article written by Henry D. Lloyd, one of the principal members of the staff of that periodical, in which he says that the trust has just been in session, that in it were five hundred and fifty dealers, and that they fixed prices to suit themselves. I will ask that the extract to which I refer be incorporated in my remarks.

refer be incorporated in my remarks.

Four years ago the Chicago Lumbermen's Exchange adopted a resolution declaring it to be "dishonorable" for any dealer to make lower prices than those published by it for the control of prices in one of the greatest lumber markets of the world. Monthly reports are required by this exchange from dealers, so that accurate accounts may be kept of stock on hand in order to regulate prices. The price-lists of the exchange are revised and made "honest" at monthly banquets. In February, 1883, it was found that members who ostensibly adhered to the price-list dipped into the dishonorable practice of competition on the sly by giving buyers greater than the usual discounts. This was then forbidden, and another pathway of competition closed.

The effect of this price-legislation was attested by the address of a dealer of Minneapolis at one of the price-list banquets of the exchange, who said that his firm, which made sales as far as Manitoba and Dakota, had never sold a foot for less than the published lists. A delegation of dealers from the Mississippi River district spoke feelingly of their labors "for harmony," and their willingness that Chicago should make prices. A secret meeting of lumbermen from all parts of the West was held in Chicago March 8, 1883, to discuss means for advancing prices, restricting production at least 35 per cent., and in general, in the language of one of them, putting themselves into a position like that of the coal producers of Pennsylvania, who by combination dictated the prices of Lumber Dealers met in Chicago. It represents over five hundred and fifty retail dealers in the West, and its principal purpose was to prevent wholesale dealers at Chicago, St. Louis, and other centers from retailing lumber to carpenters, farmers, and scalpers in the territory of the retailers.

There are too many sellers, and so any wholesaler who persists in competing in this way, with local dealers is, when found guilty, named to all the retailers and punished by losing their

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri consent to an interruption? If he does, it will come out of his time.

Mr. PALMER. I wish merely to ask a question.

Mr. PALMER. I wish merely to ask a question.
Mr. VEST. I will yield for a question.
Mr. PALMER. My question is, how does the Senator from Missouri define the word "dealers," whether they are lumber sellers, pine-land owners, manufacturers, or transportation men?
Mr. VEST. I include them all. I include every man, whether he owns the ground or the mill, who goes into this combination as a member of the trust. In this article by Mr. Lloyd (and it is distinct and emphatic and specific) he gives all the details of this trust. That it is in existence no man can deny. It is in existence in the United States; and according to the newspaper article which I read yesterday morning, it is now in session for the purpose of combining more effectually against the consumers of the United States in order to put upon them the prices that they may think necessary for their own aggrandizement.

We are always met with these trusts whenever the protective tariff becomes an exclusive tariff. How is it in England, where they have free trade? It is almost treason to mention England, it seems, in this debate; but in the limits of our great commercial rival, England, trusts exist, but they are difficult of creation and of being perpetuated, for the simple reason that capital enough must be got together in free-trade England to influence and control the product of the whole world instead of the product of a single country. With free trade the whole world comes in competition, and some such trust must be created as that in regard to copper which now exists in the hands of a French

I see that already in the United States it is contemplated to create trusts to control the product of the whole world in regard to certain articles of prime necessity; but under this tariff trusts can be created with even limited capital, by the dealers in lumber, the dealers in salt, the dealers in wool, and the dealers in sugar, and in all the different articles that enter into the ordinary consumption of the American citizen, and outside of the limit of necessities, in luxuries, such as whisky. Sir, they have a trust upon cartridges, and the other day when there was a sale in the city of St. Louis of some cartridges sold by the United States for duties, not a single gun-dealer made a bid. When asked why they did not do so, one of them said it was because he belonged to a combine which had agreed not to bid upon those cartridges, that had been forfeited under the revenue laws of the United States; that he was obliged by a solemn agreement not to buy cartridges except at a certain price and from certain establishments.

So it goes. Wood-screws and every trivial article that goes into the ordinary life of the American citizen are to be the subject of a trust, and the price is fixed for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of the men who control it.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes. Mr. PLUMB. The suggestion of wood-screws brings to my mind a very significant occurrence that happened in the Democratic caucus at which the Mills bill was really prepared for public exploiting, wood-screws having been restored to their former duty, as a sop to a Connecticut Democrat. So while the Senator is portioning out the responsibility for these trusts, etc., he ought not to omit taking into account the latest Democratic exploit in that direction.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am not here to discuss matters in the Democratic caucus or any other caucus. I care not whether what I say strikes Democrat or Republican or Mugwump, or whether it belengs to any one of these classifications politically. What I say here is made for the interest, as I believe, of the great body of the consumers of the United States.

I saw a statement not long ago, referring back to wood-screws, that Mr. Chamberlain declared that he had been paid by a wood-screw trust $40,000 a year—$40,000 for non-competition. And so it goes.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President—
Mr. VEST. I can not yield to my friend any more because it comes out of my ten minutes. In every department of industry, in every department of production, we are confronted invariably with this same thing, that as soon as this high protective tariff becomes an exclusive tariff and shuts out the foreign competition, then the combine, or trust, or "sympathetic movement," finds its opportunity, and is created immediately, without regard to the interests of anybody else except the men who constitute it. Now I will yield to my friend from Kansas

Mr. PLUMB. I was going to say that it is commonly understood that the profits of the wood-screw trust, a large portion at any rate, went into the Democratic treasury, and by the means of that contribution Connecticut was carried for the Democratic ticket. I do not want to have all the current facts of history ignored in this discussion.

Mr. VEST. I have no knowledge about the treasury of the Democratic party. I have heard something said about "frying the fat" out of Pennsylvania manufacturers for the benefit of the Republican party, but I have never gone into the details. I have no taste for it and care nothing about it. I suppose that money was used by both parties in the late election. There is no question in regard to that; but as to where it came from and how it was used I have no personal knowledge whatever.

I denounce this system of combination, I do not care who constitutes it. I do not care how such combinations are created, they can have but one result, and that is to increase the price to the consumers of the country. In this particular instance the result of this combination upon lumber is to make it higher to the people, because if that were not so we would hear no complaint in regard to taking off the tax of $2 a thousand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PALMER. The first extract read by the Senator from Missouri, I think, is from the New York Tribune of March 7. That seems merely to apply to the lumber market of California. I can not discuss it, for I know nothing about it. It does not apply to anything east of the Rocky Mountains. The next seems to apply to an organization called the Chicago Lumbermen's Exchange, which merely includes the lumber dealers of Chicago.

What I wish to state is that where, as in copper, or in sugar, or in whisky, or in cotton-seed oil, trusts may be possible, they are not possible to the end of being practicable and profitable in the lumber business. It is scattered over too great an area of country. It would include too many small dealers. It would be impossible, with all of the marshals of the United States with full power to compel obedience to the articles they should sign, to enforce any such trust. It has been tried time and again.

I do not pretend to defend the lumber manufacturers against the charge of selfishness. They will get all they can for their lumber, but charge of selfishness. They will get all they can for their lumber, but in the very nature of things a lumber trust is impossible. There was in the very nature of things a lumber trust is impossible. There was one started, or attempted to be started, on the Wisconsin River, at Chippewa Falls. It has gone to pieces. No one has heard of it since. What would you think of a trust that would include, in the State of Michigan, 40,000 laborers, and throughout the United States 200,000 laborers and probably 20,000 concerns or firms? It would be impossible. Therefore I say, when persons are talking about trusts (and it is becoming very fashionable when anything goes up in price to roar out "trusts" and "associations" and "combines"), while it may be possible in sugar and copper, and whisky, it is impossible in lumber; and I will stake my reputation as a business man on that statement.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think I deplore trusts as much as any one, and I think I will go as far as any one in the passage of any laws which Congress can pass to prevent and punish them. But, as it laws which Congress can pass to prevent and punish them. But, as it appears to me, the question of trusts has nothing whatever to do with the question of duties. It seems to me that the righteous indignation which exists at a great many trusts in this country (against all trusts that have the features which make them obnoxious) is made use of to attack the tariff.

Trusts are not indigenous to the United States. The worst trusts are to be found abroad, and many of them in England, where there is no tariff. There is not a worse trust for the United States than the copper trust which exists in France. There is no trust which is bearing upon our people more unfavorably, more injuriously, and the tariff has nothing to do with that; the rate of duty has nothing to do with that.

I take up this morning's paper, and I find under date "London, January 21," a dispatch about a foreign steel-rail trust, and it is as LONDON, January 21.

It is stated that all the English steel-rail makers have agreed to form a trust, and that the French and German and Belgian makers consent to join the ring. It is expected that the movement, if successful, will cause an advance in prices of 20 to 25 per cent.

I merely rose to say that while I join in the indignation against those combinations which put up the price of necessaries of life, which put up the price of articles that enter into general use, I do protest against this continued reiteration in the Senate that they are the result in some way of protective duties.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it seems to me, abstractly considered, that there is no policy more unwise than that which induces a great country like ours, in consideration of a temporary benefit, to abolish or hasten the abolition of its entire forests. Whether considered in an economic sense or with reference to climatic influences, to the comfort and health of the inhabitants, or in any other sense, there can be no policy more injurious, it seems to me, than this, which would offer a premium for the destruction of the forests. Forests that are now partially covered with timber, that would take at least three genera-tions of our race to replace if destroyed; forests that supply the moisture which is necessary for the maintenance of the water in our rivers and for the benefit of the climate generally; forests that furnish all the comforts and conveniences that add to the happiness of our homes, that would take, as I have said, at least three generations to replace, have been destroyed with a recklessness and a want of foresight by the American people that our children's children will regret with unavail-

I do not know that, except on general and abstract principles, the people whom I represent have any particular interest in this duty upon lumber. There is still a vast amount of lumber, or timber for the making of lumber, remaining in North Carolina. The swamps in the eastern part of the State furnish still a considerable amount of the most magnificent lumber to be found in the Atlantic States-cypress, which is exceedingly valuable. The plains furnish still a considerable quantity of pine, while the Piedmont region and the southern Alleghanies that obtain in the western part of the State of North Carolina contain perhaps more hard wood of value for use in the arts and in the finishing and decoration of houses than certainly any other Atlantic State, if it would not be too much to say than any other State in the American Union. Not only all that we need of every kind and description for our own purposes is found there, but a considerable quantity is found for exportation to neighboring States and markets.

I can not see, therefore, that the people of North Carolina are affected by the duty on lumber, or would be affected by the removal of it, but in so far as the duty upon lumber does stimulate the unnecessary cutting down and exportation of the lumber of my State they are injuriously affected by it, and would prefer laws of a conservative character which would tend to preserve their forests for their own use and for the use of their children. I am sure that they are opposed to the temporary riches which the destruction of their forests might bring to them in view of the great injury that would be inflicted upon their descendants.

As I understand, the great lumber regions, or the regions which were once great in lumber, of the Northwest have mainly passed into the hands of a few wealthy men who have been able to accumulate them and who hold them for a rise in the price of the timber which stands upon those lands. Therefore a continuance of this duty upon lumber can act in no other way than to hasten the exorbitant increase of the price of that timber which those States that are covered with treeless plains will be compelled to buy at whatever price. It can have no other effect. Time will be sufficient in that respect. The absolute necessities of the people and of an increasing population in that tree-less country will certainly be sufficient in hastening the high prices of lumber to gratify all the reasonable avarice of any set of men; but that the public legislation of the country should be called upon to hasten that time and to increase the price which these people will be com-pelled to pay in the future, it seems to me, is an outrage upon them that can not be justified even by the mysterious logic of protection, be-cause it can not be said truthfully that a protective duty against foreign lumber will increase the quantity and decrease the price of domestic lumber for the reason that it can not be supplied by the establishment of lumber manufactories. The more manufactories of lumber which you establish, the more rapidly will the material that supplies these mills disappear.

So, then, according to protection logic, it is an absurdity and an outage. According to any kind of logic that you apply to it, whatever view you take of it, it is an injurious, and an unjust, and an unwise Therefore those of us who sit on this side of the Chamber, without exception, so far as I know, desire to see the premium for the destruction of our lumber removed, and think that we have done a good service to our people and our country at large when we induce Canada or any neighboring nation to destroy its forests for our benefit.

and leave ours for the benefit of our children.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to contribute a word or two to this great economic question in view of the facts over which the Senator from North Carolina is so alarmed, that our forests are in dan-ger of being denuded because of the operation of the tariff upon lumber on the people of the country.

Our imports of lumber from Canada are 9,500,000 feet. That is the foreign importation of lumber. The product of Michigan alone is 4,000,000,000 feet, and of the whole United States probably 20,000,-000,000 feet. Now, the whole importation of lumber from Canada is simply infinitesimal as compared with the lumber manufactured in this country and used here. What may be dumped in our market from this country and used here. What may be dumped in our mathere does not have the slightest effect in the world upon it.

How is it on the other side, in Canada? Recognizing the fact that the whole influx of lumber from Canada will not affect our price, that they have not the power to affect it, they put an export duty on logs with a view of holding theirs up to the American price. What next? In the sale of their stumpage they regulate it according to the price of lumber here, putting an amount absolute, so much a thousand, upon it as it is cut, so as not to force in their lumber here, knowing very well that the whole product of lumber in Canada can have no possible effect upon us. There is no one who will examine this question who can come to the conclusion that if we have free lumber it will have the slightest effect upon the price, for the reason that the export duties and the price of stumpage that will be put upon lumber in Canada will be increased to compensate for the reduction of duties here. I do not believe, myself, that it is of the slightest consequence in the world, practically, to the lumber producers here or to the lumber consumers here. Nevertheless it is a small duty comparative y, and it is a duty which protects an agricultural product pure and simple.

So far as the State of New York is concerned, the land on which there is lumber is owned by the farmer, and the price of it aids him in clearing up his lands. It is a source of revenue to him as much as the corn, wheat, or potatoes which he raises; and while I do not believe this will affect the price, still it is a protection which the farmers ask and I am in favor of their having it.

The Senator from North Carolina urges that there is a great catastrophe in the future on account of the denuding of our forests. That argument if applied would prevent railroads running through prairies. I do not know but that if properly applied it could be urged against draining swamps or any improvement upon our land. The theory of the argument is that it is better that we should have forests, uncul-tivated lands, than to have cultivated lands covered by farms, villages, and cities. That is not the policy of the country; and you might just as well urge that railroads should not be built because a century or two hence we should not have the prairie land for our children or our children's children. Improvements of the whole domain, cultivation of the land, increasing our population, homes for the people-that is the policy of this country.

Mr. PALMER. I thought we were confined to ten minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the rule—one speech of ten

Mr. PALMER. Can that not be done in three efforts, or are we confined to one

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the first time that question has been raised. The Chair received the rule from the President pro tempore in that form, that there should be only one speech by a Senator and he could speak ten minutes. Nothing was said about dividing the time into three speeches.

Mr. PALMER. If the Chair will permit me to speak in the time of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] not occupied by him, I would merely answer the philosophical argument made by our friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] in regard to the destruction of forests, which is a subject of contention now among scientific men whether it does affect the climate unfavorably or not. I know that Spain is always adverted to as having been ruined by having its forests cut off; but it is now contended that it has had no such effect.

However, I will say that the destruction of the forests in the West will go on whether they are cut or not. The railroad, the settler, the hunter, the fisherman, and the Indian spread fire there, and it is about all the lumberman can do to keep up with the ravages of fire and save

In Canada they have what they call woods-rangers to take care of the fires. To make a fire in the woods there is a misdemeanor, and those rangers are patrolling their forests and guarding them.

My point is that if you want to take it on economical grounds, independent of the interests of our manufacturers, the forests of British America are the timber preserves of the Northern States of the Union, and it would be better for us to put on a prohibitory tariff and not to encourage the cutting of a single stick of timber in Canada, and when our timber is gone let it come in free, if you wish, but not till then.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, admitting all that is claimed for high or prohibitory duties, let us follow the idea and the argument to its ary conclusion or result. The country has arrived at that condition. High duties have produced home supply for home demand in the country. What then follows? The home supply is either equal to the home demand or less than the home demand or greater than the home demand. Now, let us examine separately all of these conditions and see what necessary consequence follows from each condition.

see what necessary consequence follows from each condition.

First. The home supply equals the home demand. Here we have paid a high duty for years; that is, we have by law required the people, whose wants make the demand, to give a greater part of their labor or their earnings than they would have otherwise done to those whose labor or means furnished the supply.

To put it in its most favored light, admitting and conceding that it is the American workingman alone that is interested, we have compelled one American workingman to work a greater length of these doing was necessary for another American workingman and in thus doing was necessary for another American workingman, and in thus doing we have necessarily limited his capacity to acquire a greater amount of necessaries or luxuries precisely by the amount of the excess of labor which we have forced him to give.

The public benefit derived from this has been a home supply of a home demand. What does this mean? It means that we have created an industry and employment, and made no national profit out of it, but have paid a certain quantity of labor or money for it, more than would have been necessary without the passage of the law. The country, then, has the industry and the employment, and it has cost the country a certain sum. Now the question is whether the sum paid by the country is greater or less than the difference between the amount the country would have made from money and labor employed in other occupa-tions and the amount the country had paid for maintaining the home supply of the home demand.

This would be the precise amounts, and the country would then have either to abandon or to continue the cost of maintaining this home supply of the home demand. If we continue it, then we are to have a permanent policy of maintaining this state of things by an annual contribution from the country.

If, on the other hand, we are to discontinue this policy of maintaining the home supply of the home demand, then we shall have gone back to the place we started from, and open the home supply of the home demand to the competitions and all the influences of money capital and pauper and surplus production, which we assumed were strong enough to have crushed the home supply of the home demand, and we shall have paid our money for a temporary protection, and without permanent results.

Now let us consider the conditions where the high duties have produced, as it is claimed they will, an excess of the home supply over the home demand. What then will be the effect if we discontinue the high duties? We will again subject the supply to all the causes which we have paid our money to prevent from destroying this supply. have not produced any permanent change in the causes against which the law assumes the home supply can not successfully contend.

If, on the other hand, the home supply shall not equal the home demand, then the high duties will have compelled the country to pay a large amount and failed to accomplish the home supply of the home demand; and as to that part of the home supply of the home demand which high duties may have produced, the amount will be between the gross sum paid by the country and the foreign value of the supply, and the value of this temporary protection, and then the reopening of the supply to all the causes which we have paid large sums to prevent.

If, on the other hand, this excess in the home supply of the home demand should by domestic competition reduce the value of the home supply, what will the country have gained by taxing the people vast sums of money for the single object of making that home supply val-uable beyond the value of the foreign supply, only to have domestic competition reduce it to the same or a lower level?

Mr. President, the question of a system of high duties, and the question of whether or not a particular people shall be subjected to a system of high duties, and then that which they produce be exempted entirely from duty, are entirely distinct things.

I am in favor of a system of low duties, but I am not in favor of taxing the people of my own State and exempting their productions from a similar tax—a similar duty, so as to tax them so far as they are consumers. But whatever protection or benefit may result from the system, I insist shall be given to them fairly and equally with others.

you tax them by a high duty as consumers, you must lay the duty so as to tax other people as consumers of what they produce.

Now, this duty upon lumber is a small duty, it is amongst the smallest of the duties, and if it have any effect at all, that effect and that benefit should be given to the people of the section of country which produces it and in which it is a staple and of which it is a part of their resources; and for me to vote here to except it from the beneficial effect, if there be any, of this bill, would be to discriminate against my own people and my own section of country.

Mr. President, these are entirely different propositions. If we are to have a system of high duties let it be general, let it extend to every part of the country. Those who represent the portions of the country which are proposed to be sacrificed ought to object to it. Lumber is a large interest in the State of Florida. Whatever may be its effect upon the forests, it is an established industry them.

large interest in the State of Florida. Whatever may be its effect upon the forests, it is an established industry there. Large quantities of lumber are exported abroad, and great quantities in the coastwise trade are carried throughout the length and breadth of the coast trade, and under these circumstances, if there be any benefit or appearance of benefit, I am in favor of giving it to my own people.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, in considering these questions I notice a constant tendency to treat them in masses, and "millions" seem to be always considered as of greatly more importance than "thousands" or "hundreds" or single dollars. The argument is a cash argument all the time, as though a man's soul was not worth much, but his pocketbook was of some consequence. The truth about this lumber interest with which we are dealing at the present time is that the legislation affects more individuals, more souls, more bodies, the fate of more individual men, women, and children, than almost any other one question that is being discussed; and it is an interest which is incapable of tion that is being discussed; and it is an interest which is incapable of being combined and worked up in the form of a trust.

Almost all the agricultural interests of this country in the New England States and in New York are interested in it; in fact, all along the line of Canada almost every man who owns a piece of land owns some lumber that goes with it; and although there are lumber barons, I do not think them of any particular account. I would not like to see any legislation in reference to them, whether they are in the Senate or in Congress or out of it. There are no lumber barons who are not able to take care of themselves, and the most of them are able to take care of a great many other people; and it is the good fortune of many that they are able to do so; but the men who are not lumber barons are millions who are interested in lumber, in the growth and production of lumber, and to whom a little alteration in this matter of duties is of the utmost importance, meaning more to them in what appertains to existence than hundreds and thousands may be to many others who seem to be controlling this legislation.

Take my own State. There is nowhere that you can touch her where she is more tender or more liable to injury than upon this same lumber schedule. Two dollars a thousand is not sufficient protection to the lumber interest in that State. There are only 350,000 or 400,000 people there, you say. Very well, but to the 350,000 or 400,000 people who are there and who at one time and another have been of some conse quence in the scales of justice and the prosperity and the existence of this country, the lumber tariff is of importance. Almost every farmer in the State, probably every farmer in the State has a portion of his soil covered with a growth of timber, and upon it he relies annually for some portion of his cash income, which to him is existence, and from the little surplus which he gets out of it he educates his daughter or his son, pays for his newspapers, his minister's tax, or his own tax for the support of the institutions of the State and of the country. It is his little reservoir of ready money, and if you do injury to that, the source of his income, however slight, you affect his existence as an American citizen much more uncomfortably and seriously than though, if he were a millionaire, you took out of his pocket $100,000 every year.

The committee, I understand, have reduced this tariff somewhat on lumber, and if I could beat their bill by voting against it I would do so for that very one thing, because I think it is a most unrighteous and wicked discrimination that ought not to have been done, because it affects poor people principally, and does no good to anyhody on the face wicked discrimination that ought not to have been done, because it affects poor people principally, and does no good to anybody on the face of the earth anywhere so far as I can see.

Our friend from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] says it is of no consequence to him. It certainly does not interest my friend from Florida [Mr. Call]. What consequence is it to the sugar-planter or to my friend from Missouri [Mr. Vest] along the line of the great Mississippi? It will not affect the price of lumber a cent a thousand, he claims, whether it be put up to a dollar and a half or whether the whole thing he abolished thing be abolished.

Mr. President, it ought not to be touched at all, and it is a good reason for defeating this whole bill that the lumber schedule is reduced at all, and if any of our friends have assented to it. I am not one of those who have been consulted, and I do not believe that it has been assented to really in the interest of at least five or six millions of people all along the Canadian frontier, especially in New York and in the Northeast, who are vitally interested in this matter.

New England is a free-trade section of the country, if any portion of it is. If anybody can live under the rules of free trade, New England can to-day. She has her capital of two or three centuries' accumulation. She has habits with which she can live when other portions of the country would starve to death; and so she is enabled to get along with less than people anywhere else in the country. That is why she grows strong and powerful and dictates in many of the important things pertaining to the interests of the country and the world.

We pay our 75 cents a ton duty right along upon the important article of coal. It would be greatly for our advantage to let it come in free from Canada. Give us free coal and we could get on very well; but what would become of the interests down in West Virginia and in Maryland? What would become of the interests of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and its great feeders, the interests which give it freight and all that? You might say the same with reference to the corpo-ration interests all through the State of Pennsylvania and elsewhere in this country. But, for the sake of the great system which protects the whole, we pay from our small incomes the duty upon coal. We should be very glad indeed in sacrificing so much for this protective system (which is really of more benefit to the South than to anybody else in the country) if the lumber interest, which is really important to us, should be left undisturbed.

Now, here comes a proposition to make lumber free. We are on the great lines of communication with Canada, directly in contact with the Canadian line, and the northern part of our State is peculiarly a lumber section, and where lumber has been removed in the southern portion of the State it is being rapidly reproduced. The reduction now proposed upon white pine, as it is called—all classes of white pine—affects every kind of lumber that is grown in the State, because it comes in competition with hemlock and spruce and all the rest. You might exactly as well make this schedule in such a way as to be a removal of the duty upon all kinds of lumber as upon white-pine lumber, because the various grades of white lumber compete with all lumber grown in the State. Instead of speaking of it as applying to a section, I ought to say that it applies to the entire bill in contiguity with the Canadian line.

I rose merely to state these general propositions and to show that there are those who assent to this tariff legislation who in some respects are sacrificing interests in so doing, and when the Senator from Missouri and others make motions to place lumber on the free-list they make motions which, if successful, would carry ruin and destruction to thousands of the population of this country who are a portion of its yeomanry, of its most vigorous and essential citizenship.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if the position of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Eustis] the other day, that this whole tariff scheme was itself in its essence a gigantic trust, within the definition lately given by Judge Barrett of a trust, needed illustration, it seems to me the speeches of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] who has just taken his seat, would furnish such illustration.

The proposition to give to the people of this country, the great consuming masses, the dwellers upon the treeless plains of the West, the denizens of our crowded cities, a little abatement in the price of this absolute necessary of life, the material for constructing the shelter that is absolutely essential for themselves and their families, it seems to me should receive universal approval, and that opposition to it is well characterized by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] as mon-

The idea of protection or its philosophy, if there is a philosophy in it, has made great strides since this matter was first introduced into the House of Representatives last spring by the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, it is part of the doctrine of high protection, part of its philosophy, that at no point shall the line be broken. The Senator from New York has said that making lumber free would not, in his opinion, affect the price of lumber anywhere, and would not materially injure the interests of the producers of lumber, still he is opposed to making any abatement or giving to the masses of this country the opportunity, at least, to test the truth of the proposition that an abatement of the tax on the necessaries of life would be a removal of a burden upon those who use them.

Even the bounties of nature are taxed, and the proposition now is that whereas in this happy land of ours a kind Providence has given from its bountiful hand these great natural resources, these great for-ests of valuable timber for the use of man, has stocked our adjacent seas with food-fish—that all these are to be gathered in and controlled by a syndicate of men who claim that they have an ownership in a so-called American market, lest these things would be too cheap to the consumer unless they were taxed, even where the taxes are not needed in an overflowing Treasury; that these forests that God Almighty has given to the poor men of America, wherewith they can make for themselves cheap shelter, homes such as no other people on the face of God's earth can enjoy—that syndicates of rich men must step in between them and the bounty of Providence and say that by the imposition of a tax this great bounty, this great beneficence of an all-wise Creator is to be neutralized or abated. That is the proposition.

Here is a material that is as absolutely essential to human comfort as food or clothing—the material for building shelter—and it is that which is to be controlled by syndicates and trusts who as I said pro-which is to be controlled by syndicates and trusts, who, as I said, propose to stand between the citizens of this country, the poor men of this country, and the bounty of a beneficent Providence.

The Senator from North Carolina very well stated, and very strongly the Senator from North Carolina very well stated, and very strongly stated, the difference between a tax upon this particular article, lumber, and a tariff tax upon the so-called protected articles that are embraced in this schedule. This is a natural product, which excepts it from the logic even of the protection idea. You can not stimulate the manufacture of lumber by a tariff tax. We have been told over and over again that the effect of a tariff tax was to stimulate domestic production and thereby eventually to reduce the price of commodities to the consumer, but in the case of lumber you stimulate destruction. You do not and can not stimulate production. Therefore, as he very well said, this is an exception even to the protection logic; and it would seem, unless there has been a conspiracy among the protected interests of this country, that at no point should there be a break in their line; that unless they have all joined hands and have determined to stand together or fall together, that they would, in the interest of the protective idea, step in here and agree with us that the poor people of this country should not longer be made to submit to the burden; that we should no longer keep them from enjoying to its full the bounty that Providence offers them on every hand.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Blair] spoke of the poor men who were interested in this tariff, the men who own timber tracts on their small farms. Why, sir, what is that interest in comparison with the interest of the millions to whom cheap lumber is an absolute necessity? I spoke of the inhabitants of these treeless plains in the West, and the denizens of our crowded cities, the thousands upon thousands that are there congregated and are necessarily tribute-payers to the lumber barons, as he termed them, and to those who are so fortunate as to own the land that is covered by timber. That timber was not created by human labor or by human hands. That timber was not created by human labor or by human lands. The fortunate possessors of those tracts of timber, whether in large or small quantities, need no further protection. They are to be congratulated if they own that much of the earth's surface producing this most necessary article, and why should they step in and be mendicants upon the bounty of the whole people in order to enhance to them the value of this important material of which they are the fortunate possessors?

It seems to me, as I said in the beginning, that this is a most mon-strous illustration of the iniquity of this whole high-tariff protective scheme

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I suppose if he were present he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay." The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

I have already voted, but I shall withdraw that vote unless the Senator from Iowa can vote already voted, but I shall withdraw that vote unless the Senator from Iowa can vote. Iowa chooses to make the transfer.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make the transfer with pleasure, and vote

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section to the bill. I shall not ask that it be taken up until the consideration of the committee amendments is concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill as an additional section the following:

section the following:

SEC. — It shall be the duty of any person, firm, corporation, association of persons, or company engaged in the manufacture or production of any goods, wares, or merchandise mentioned in the schedules of this bill, upon the importation of which a duty is imposed when of foreign production, to pay into the Treasury of the United States any profits arising from such manufacture or production in excess of 10 per cent. over and above the cost of materials and labor used and employed in such business; and it shall be the duty of every such person, firm, corporation, association of persons, or company to make in each and every year to the Secretary of the Treasury, under oath, a complete and correct return of the aggregate value of the goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured or produced in the year, with the aggregate cost of the materials and labor used and employed therein and a statement of the profits therefrom; such return and statement in case of a firm, corporation, association of persons, or company shall be made by its treasurer or other financial agent; and if any person shall make a false or fraudulent return or statement he shall be guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for a period not less than one year nor more than five years, and shall forfeit and pay a fine of $5,000: Provided, That this section shall not apply to manufacturers the value of whose aggregate business shall not exceed $20,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 201,

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 201, after the word "measure" in line 824.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. It comes in at the close of line 824, at the end of paragraph 201.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso to paragraph 201:

Provided, That in case any foreign country shall impose an export duty upon pine, spruce, elm, or other logs, or upon stave-bolts, shingle-wood, or heading-blocks, exported to the United States from such country, in excess of the duty fixed in this act upon the sawed lumber manufactured from logs of the kinds heretofore mentioned, then the duty upon the sawed lumber herein provided for when imported from such country shall remain the same as fixed by the law in force prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from New York why certain specific articles are named in this amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is intended to name the articles that are manufactured from the white-pine logs and any other logs

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is this an amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.
Mr. VEST. It seems that if this principle is to be applied at all, if this legislation is to be indulged in, it ought to apply to all the lumber which is brought into this country from abroad where an export duty in the foreign country is imposed upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. CALL. I ask that the proposed amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. HISCOCK. I might say further in reply to the inquiry of the

Mr. HISCOCK. I might say further, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, that there are certain kinds of lumber that I do not know that we want to interfere with. Take mahogany and woods of that kind-

Mr. VEST.

They are on the free-list now.

K. There may be export duties levied upon those, but Mr. HISCOCK. they are goods which are not produced in this country, and I am not aware that we would care to interfere with cases of that kind. It is only that kind of lumber made in the bill subject to duty that this amendment applies to.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have some further explanation of the object of the amendment and its supposed effect.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state that the object of the amendment is this: At the present time it is a notorious fact that $3 a thousand is the export duty imposed upon logs by the Canadian Government, and I have not any sort of doubt that they possibly may increase it just to the extent by which we have reduced the duty here. They may do so or may not. I think perhaps this amendment is in the direction of the argument made by some of the gentlemen on the other side, that it possibly may have the effect to prevent an export duty being levied at

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has paragraph 209 been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read. It will be

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

209. House or cabinet furniture, of wood, in piece or rough, and not finished, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I offer the following amendment: At the end of the paragraph add:

Reeds, 10 per cent. ad valorem; chair cane, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if these articles are not included in paragraph 213.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are at the present time by the bill as it now stands

Mr. VEST. And the Senator proposes to reduce the duty?
Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, from 30 and 35 per cent. to 10 and 15 per cent.
Mr. VEST. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

211. Casks and barrels (empty), sugar-box shooks, and packing-boxes, and packing-box shooks, of wood, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

212. Manufactures of cedar wood, granadilla, ebony, mahogany, rosewood, and satinwood, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

213. Manufactures of wood, or of which wood is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. That last paragraph includes rattans, which constitute a very important article of importation.

Mr. ALLISON. No, it does not. Rattans are on the free-list in

Mr. VEST. I will ask the Senator now if this paragraph 213 does not include some varieties of rattans?

Mr. ALDRICH. It includes reeds and chair canes, which we have just provided for.
Mr. VEST. Are no rattans included in this paragraph?
Mr. ALDRICH. None whatever, unless they are manufactured

Mr. VEST. I understand, then, that none of the others are included. fery good. I merely wanted to understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

214. Wood, unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent, ad valorem.
215. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and blocks or posts of mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, granadilla, or other cabinet wood, 15 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance, I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty," in line 856, paragraph 215, just

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. VEST. We have passed paragraph 214 in the preceding list, and I desired then to submit a motion to strike out "20 per cent. ad valorem" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty." If that is not objected to, I shall make the same motion as to paragraph 215 now under consideration. We can take this question as to the two paragraphs together, and upon it I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Cullom in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be reported from the desk

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 853, paragraph 214, it is proposed to strike out "20 per cent. ad valorem" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty;" and in line 856, of paragraph 215, it is proposed to strike out the words "15 per cent. ad valorem" and insert "shall be admitted free of duty;" so as to make the paragraphs read:

214. Wood, unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, shall be admitted free of duty,

215. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and blocks or posts of mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, granadilla, or other cabinet wood, shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this question the Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the particular amendment before us, but in the closing hours of this debate I desire to place on record certain conclusions which have been indelibly impressed on my mind. The tariff issue is no longer what it once was. A new departure of The tariff issue is no longer what it once was. A new department the most astounding character has been made. We are no longer called upon by the majority of this Senate to legislate for revenue with which to pay the expenses of the Government, but to enact laws by which one class of our citizens are to be enriched, aggrandized, protected, by a vast system of tribute arbitrarily levied on every other class.

The idea of our fathers, that a tariff could only be laid for revenue, and that protection, if any followed, was to be a mere incident to such legislation, is now hooted from the councils of that party which is in a majority in this body, and soon to take control of every department of the Government. The bill before the Senate is not in any legitimate sense a revenue measure, but a measure to amass fortunes for the favored few by wholesale extortion practiced on every want and necessity of human existence.

The title to this bill as it now stands is "to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue." This title is false and misleading. It should read as follows: "A bill to increase taxation and to complicate the laws in order to still further exalt and enrich monopolies by the iniquitous and unrighteous spoliation of the people."

Some weeks ago, during the early days of this debate, in speaking on this subject, I said:

on this subject, I said:

For the first time in American history the mask of the manufacturer is thrown aside and all disguise abandoned. He has heretofore at least pretended that the protection he needed and asked could be secured as an incident to a purely revenue tariff. The greatest minds ever engaged in the conduct of our public affairs have willingly conceded all the incidental protection which wise legislation framed for the purposes of revenue could afford to the domestic manufacturer. The protection, however, now boldly demanded is the enormous tribute which the consumer is compelled to pay directly to the monopolist in manufacture and in trade, no part of which ever reaches the Treasury of the Government at all.

This tribute exacted for the sake of protection per se, and with no reference to revenue, is the increased price which high rates of duty, keeping foreign imports from our shores, enables the manufacturer to put on his goods without fear of foreign competition. This is the naked and avowed plunder of one class of American citizens for the sole benefit and enrichment of another, and it will not long be borne.

Since that time I have been an observer of all the details of the disc

Since that time I have been an observer of all the details of the discussion which has followed, and the great burden of concern on the other side of the Chamber has been for the protection of monopolists in manufacture and trade against outside competition which would necessarily cheapen the necessities of life to the consumers.

The question of revenue has only been sounded on a very minor key, while all the notes of the whole organ have been swept in the loudest and boldest strains in behalf of protection, and protection alone.

Is it pretended that such a policy has any warrant in any precedent of the Government or in anything ever uttered by a public man of national reputation?

Several disputes have taken place between Senators on this floor as to the attitude of Henry Clay on the question of a protective tariff. He is known to history as the father of the American system of protection, and yet he would recoil with horror from the swollen, arrogant, and rapacious pretensions of that system if he could look upon it to-day, and scan the monstrous provisions of this bill. In the great debate between Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun, running through February and March of 1838, Mr. Clay used this language, and it is to be found in Benton's Thirty Years' View, page 113:

No one, Mr. President, in the commencement of the protective policy ever supposed that it was to be perpetual. We hoped and believed that temporary protection extended to our infant manufactures would bring them up and enable them to withstand competition with those of Europe.

Now, however, after a hundred years of national existence we find our manufactures still more infantile than ever before, guarded and rocked in their baby cradles by such stalwart and giant tariff duties on foreign imports as Mr. Clay never dreamed of, and yet putting up their hands and squalling with incessant hunger for more.

We find corporations, syndicates, trusts, combines, and individual millionaires, more potent in their wealth than the nabobs of the East millionaires, more potent in their wealth than the nabobs of the East Indies or the robber barons of the middle ages in their proudest and most remorseless days, coming here, surrounding this Capitol at both ends and pretending "to mewl and puke" like infants unless they get a renewed and enlarged license for higher prices, greater profits, and bloated dividends at the expense of the laboring men, women, and children of the United States who are compelled by restrictive legislation to purchase their wares and merchandise. It is this class of bearded babies living in palaces, flashing with diamonds, sailing the seas in private yachts, and careering over Europe on Tally-ho coaches, who have dictated this abominable bill line by line and schedule by schedule in their own interests, and in the interest of nobody else.

their own interests, and in the interest of nobody else.

It was this class also which surrounded and bullied the Republican national convention at Chicago, in June last, into a declaration that high and in many instances prohibitory protection should be perpetual. That every vestige of taxation on all sorts of distilled spirits and on every form of tobacco should be thrown overboard rather than that a single jot or tittle of the present oppressive protective system should be abated. It is true that Mr. Blaine had taken different ground, and so had the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], but monopoly was master there as it is here, and enforced its bold and insatiate demands for loot and plunder in Chicago as it is doing here now on this floor.

Sir, I wish to arrest the attention of the public mind to the increased pretensions and arrogant claims of the protected monopolies. It is but a short time since that Grant, Garfield, Arthur, and other eminent leaders of the Republican party recommended heavy reductions of tariff duties. They would not dare do so now. A little while ago a tariff commission with a Republican majority reported in favor of a general reduction of 20 per cent., and after a full investigation declared that our domestic manufacturers would still be prosperous and in wholesome condition.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], a high Republican authority on this subject, is on record repeatedly to the effect that the exorbitant tariff rates imposed during the war were to be but temporary, and yet they remain to this hour, and the Senator will no more move their repeal than he will move to destroy this Capitol from turret to foundation stone. The able Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], now in charge of this bill, a few years ago declared himself in favor of reduced tariff rates all along the line. Will he do so now? The Treasury is full and overflowing with a surplus, but he is compelled by merciless coercion to ask that duties on foreign imports, which the consumer pays, shall be raised instead of lowered. I mean no personal offense to any one, but the country will take notice of the fact that the leaders of the Republican party are working under the rod of a master, and that master is the spirit of monopoly.

Sir, a single thought further, and I am done. Let Senators on the other side take warning that one extreme begets another, that the pendulum will swing of itself as far one way as it is made to swing in the other. The cormorant greed and unsparing lust for plunder displayed by the monopolists in their persistent outcry for protection, under all circumstances and on everything, big and little, are rapidly begetting an extreme public sentiment in the opposite direction.

Men heretofore thought to be conservative on this great question are seriously considering whether Government revenue could not be more seriously considering whether Government revenue could not be more justly secured by laying taxes on the property of the country rather than on the necessities of the people, and thus wipe out all the rankling injustices of the whole tariff system. Public opinion travels fast and far when stimulated by the spur of wrong and crime.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the question immediately before the Senate; but the very able speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORDERS] expessing the character of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] exposing the character of the legislation that is being now enacted at the dictation of monopolists and of great corporations and of enriched manufacturers justifies me in saying that the amendment which I have offered to be inserted at the end of this bill is a proper amendment. That amendment proposes that when those manufacturers who have come here and dictated the legislation of this body in reference to the tariff question, who have been heard by the committee and whose behests have been obeyed by the committee and are to be carried out by the other side of this Chamber in the votes which they are to give on this bill—that when those manufacturers have made their profit, made it by the enactment of the law which they have procured from the Senate of the United States, when they shall have piled up enormous sums of money by virtue of legislation which has been enacted in their interest, then, as to all excess over 10 per cent. of profit that they may make, over and above all labor and material employed, they shall be compelled to divide it with the Government, through whose legislation they have been enabled to make all these large profits.

I have offered that amendment for the purpose of exposing the pretenses that have been made here that the manufacturing interests are in a deplorable condition and making no profits. I have provided in that amendment that they shall pay only in excess of 10 per cent. of the profits over and above material and labor which they employ. If they make no profits over and above that sum, they will not be compelled, if my amendment is enacted into law, to pay anything into the Treasury; but if they do make over and above that, it would be making that which is an illegitimate profit by virtue of the legislation which they have secured from this body.

I have offered the amendment (I do not expect that it will be adopted) for the purpose of showing, when the vote is recorded on it, that it is a mere pretense to say that the protected inferests are in a dilapidated condition and need protection. I want to show by the votes of the men who favor this protective policy that they know or are satisfied that by virtue of this legislation these manufacturing interests will make large profits at the expense of the consumers of the country.

I have heard much about this protective system, the benefits of which have been extolled on the other side of this Chamber. It is a system have been extolled on the other side of this Chamber. It is a system which proposes to put the hands of a few people in this country into the pockets of the masses and take from them such portions of their hard earnings as they may be authorized by this legislation to take. Against that, in behalf of the people of this country, I enter my protect. In behalf of the people of the system to this power of the proper way was lives by the sweet of his power. Against that, in behalf of the people of this country, I enter my protest. In behalf of the poor man who lives by the sweat of his brow I protest against it. I protest against an advantage being given to a few at the expense of the many who are toiling from sunrise to sunset to make an honest living. I protest against it, sir, as an iniquitous and wrongful exercise of power, entirely unauthorized by the Constitution, which simply takes the means of the people from them unnecessarily to enrich certain favorites.

One thing is certain that history establishes: whatever may be the designation of parties and whatever may be the ultimate settlement of party questions, one class of mankind rallies around the headquarters of the rich and another around the headquarters of the poor. I am proud, sir, that I belong to that party which stands to-day before the country defending the great body of the people against the cormorants and monopolists who would wring from them their hard earnings and appropriate them to themselves.

Mr. PALMER. Before the Senator from Delaware sits down I should like to ask him a question. How would he arrange a business, under the operation of his amendment, in the case of a manufacturing concern-and the case is not infrequent

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Michigan that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is not now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. PALMER. I am merely asking the Senator a question. Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will read my amendment carefully he will see precisely what it means.

Mr. PALMER. Suppose a business should lose money for three or four years and then in the fifth year make a considerable profit, say a hundred per cent., how would the business be compensated for the three or four losing years? Such cases are not infrequent. I merely ask for information, and do not ask the question in any unfriendly spirit what-

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no idea whatever myself that under the provisions of this bill any line of manufacture in this country will not be profitable. This bill is designed to make manufactures profitable. I have no doubt they will reap rich rewards from the legislation here proposed in their favor. But the amendment provides only for the excess of profits over and above 10 per cent. It does not ask anything from any man who has not made a profit over and above that.

Mr. PALMER. But I ask the Senator from Delaware to please solve this problem: In the case of a loss in a manufacturing concern for, say, three consecutive years, suppose it should lose 10 or 20 per cent. a year and that in the fourth year it should make, say, 100 per cent., does the Senator mean to make any provision for the 10 per cent. or 20 per cent. lost in each of the three losing years? As I understand it, his amendment does not so read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If men by inattention to their business fail to be successful we can not help that. They have the machinery under the legislation of Congress by which they can make large profits, but if by negligence they fail to do so the Government is not bound to indemnify them for any losses.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator please answer that question? Men can not control markets; they may be industrious, but there are times of depression that come to every business, and there are losses in certhat an establishment can be said to be certainly profitable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The year and nays have been demanded by the Senator from Missouri. Is the call sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. I understand the amendment now is to admit sawed boards or lumber duty free.

Mr. BUTLER. "Sawed boards, plank, deals," etc. Mr. CALL. "Sawed boards, plank, deals," etc. That language would seem to cover the ordinary pine lumber of the country.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no. Mr. CALL. I should like to have some information on that sub-The Senator from Delaware in alluding to this a few moments ago referred to the advantage that free lumber would give to the inhabitants of the States where there were no forests and where there was a necessity for lumber and the impossibility of obtaining it from the local supply. That is certainly true in that it is an advantage to the people to obtain lumber at the lowest possible price and to remove the artificial causes—causes imposed by law—which would increase the price. But at whose expense, if you are to sustain the Government by a system of duties?

At whose expense is it that this contribution to the general welfare shall be made? Shall those people whose sole support or a large part of whose subsistence consists of the profits derived from the manufacture of lumber be subjected to all the hardships of high taxes and excepted from all the benefits of them? That is the proposition. It is that in a system of duties for the support of the Government the duty should bear equally and fairly upon all industries, and that the people of Florida should not be called upon to do this beneficence to all the people of the United States.

That is the question here in this matter of making lumber free. I agree to all that is said upon the subject of the impracticability and the unwisdom of a high system of duties. I agree to all that is urged in reference to the evil effects upon the country at large. Why, Mr. President, we may admit the whole argument that has been made in reference to the country at large. ence to the effect of duties upon the encouragement of domestic manufactures, but when they are thus encouraged there is one of three things that will occur—either the home supply will only equal the home demand, or it will exceed it, or it will fall below the home demand. That is an inevitable result—one of those three conditions must occur, and whichever of those three conditions does occur, it will still be true that we must either continue indefinitely the artificial cost which has created the protection or must abandon it and subject again the home supply to all the causes which the law assumes it is incapable of withstanding successfully.

So that the idea carried out in itself will show its futility and failure; but that a reasonable encouragement in laying duties may be given for the creation of industries, leaving them to stand or fall by the competition which they must inevitably encounter whatever may be the law, is a different proposition. But however that may be, it is unquestionably true that there is no kind of justice and no kind of good policy in imposing a system or support of government in the collection of revenue through duties upon imports and not making it fair and equal in its impositions and its benefits upon every portion of the country. For that reason, sir, I should not be willing in a revenue tariff, or in any other kind of tariff, to except the productions of any part of the country from the benefits which they may derive by a levy of a duty on imports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the roll will be called on the question of agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest].

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Bowen].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] stands paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Chace], and I vote "nay."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If he were here, I should

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask if the vote of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] is recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Al-LISON], who is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MC-PHERSON], I being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MOR-RILL], that we transfer our pairs and each of us vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that. Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.
Mr. FARWELL having voted in the negative,
Mr. HARRIS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] to the fact that, as I am informed, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] announced a pair with him.

Mr. FARWELL. I saw the Senator from Florida in his seat a mo-

Mr. FARWELL. I saw the Senator from Florida in his seat a moment ago; I think he is here.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Chair whether the vote of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is recorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Florida announced a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. FARWELL. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VEST. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. Cockrell] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley]. My colleague if present would vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. President, I desire to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois desires his vote to be recorded. It will be recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois what arrangement has been made with regard to the pair of the Senator from rangement has been made with regard to the pair of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. FARWELL. The Senator from Florida gave me permission to

Mr. FARWELL. The Senator from Florida record my vote, and I accordingly do so.
Mr. HARRIS. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 30; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Finance, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In paragraph 215, line 856, it is proposed to strike out "15" and insert "20;" so as to read:

215. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and blocks or posts of mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, granadilla, or other cabinet wood, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the next paragraph be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALDRICH. In connection with the amendment adopted to paragraph 209, the committee move to strike out, in paragraph 790, line 2416, the word "reeds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 184, in line 2416, it is proposed to strike out the word "reeds."

Mr. ALDRICH. And insert the word "and" between "bamboo" and "rattan."

and "rattan."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate at what point he desires the additional word "and" to be inserted?

Mr. ALDRICH. Between the word "bamboo" and the word "rattan," and strike out the additional word "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator desires to strike out the "and" before the word "osier?"

Mr. ALDRICH Yes

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be read as it will stand when amended. Will the Senator from Rhode Island attend to the reading so that it may be ascertained whether it is correct or not?

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed the clause will read "bamboo and rattan and unmanufactured".—

"bamboo and rattan and unmanufactured"

Mr. ALDRICH. That is correct.
Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment.
Mr. MORGAN. I ask that this amendment shall be disposed of before any new amendment comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from Ohio rose to speak to the pending amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rose to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island to the paragraph just read by the Chief Clerk. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to speak to the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BUTLER. Upon what page is that amendment?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 184, line 2416.
Mr. HALE. Let me inquire as to whether the lumber schedule has been finished?

Mr. VEST.

No. AN. I believe I have the floor. The Sens Mr. MoRGAN. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves the amendment already read upon page 184, paragraph 790, line 2416, on which the Senator from Alabama is recognized by the Chair as entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, that does not appear to be a very important amendment in this bill, and I dare say it is not, but perhaps it will furnish me an opportunity to express my opinion upon an amendment that I intend to offer here, which I think is an important

The Committee on Finance have entirely omitted to deal with one of the features of revenue in this country which is a very important one, and which I take for granted they have omitted to mention because of the favoritism that has heretofore been shown to the railroads of the country to the extent of fifteen or twenty millions of revenue that ought to go into the Treasury of the United States.

The President of the United States on the 29th day of August, 1888, sent a message to the Senate, calling our attention very sharply to the state of the law on the subject of duties upon goods passing in transit between Canada and the United States. That subject came up in the House of Representatives on a bill now pending before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and was considered and discussed, and the vote taken upon it in the other House resulted in yeas 176, nays 4. Out of the total of 180 votes there were only 4 votes against the bill to carry out the views of the President of the United States. That vote is as follows:

The President's views were in substance that the Congress of the United States, finding that there was now in operation no provision of law with respect of taxation or non-taxation on goods in transit be-tween the Atlantic seaboard and Canada and between Canada and the Atlantic seaboard, owes a duty to the tax-paying people of this country to correct the state of the law in that regard. I now quote from the message the President's own statement of the case:

the message the President's own statement of the case:

Actuated by the generous and neighborly spirit which has characterized our legislation, our tariff laws have since 1886 been so far waived in favor of Canada as to allow free of duty the transit across the territory of the United States of property arriving at our ports and destined to Canada, or exported from Canada to other foreign countries.

When the treaty of Washington was negotiated in 1871, between the United States and Great Britain, having for its object very largely the modification of the treaty of 1818, the privileges above referred to were made reciprocal and given in return by Canada to the United States in the following language, contained in the twenty-ninth article of said treaty:

"It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, and any other ports in the United States which have been or may, from time to time, be specially designated by the President of the United States, and destined for Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the territory of the United States, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the Government of the United States may from time to time prescribe; and under like rules, regulations, and conditions, goods, wares, or merchandise may be conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, from such possessions through the territory of the United States, for export from the said ports of the United States.

"It is further agreed that, for the like period, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at any of the ports of Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North the rules, regulations, and conditions, goods, wares, or merchandise may be through the tertitory of the United States, for export from the said ports of the United States.

"It is further agreed that, for the like period, goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at any of the ports of Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, and destined for the United States, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without the payment of duties, through the said possessions, under such rules and regulations and conditions for the protection of the revenue, as the governments of the said possessions may from time to time prescribe; and, under like rules, and regulations, and conditions, goods, wares, or merchandise may be conveyed in transit, without payment of duties, from the United States, through the said possessions to other places in the United States, or or export from ports in the said possessions."

In the year 1856 notice was received by the representatives of an overnment free of duty through Canadian territory to this country; and ever since that time such shipment has been denied.

The privilege of such shipment, which had been extended to our fishermen, was a most important one, allowing them to spend the time upon the fishing-grounds which would otherwise be devoted to a voyage home with their catch, and doubling their opportunities for profitably prosecuting their vocation. In forbidding the transit of the catch of our fishermen over their territory in bond and free of duty, the Canadian authorities deprived us of the only facility dependent upon their concession, and for which we could supply no substitute. The value to the Dominion of Canada of the privilege of transit for their exports and imports across our territory, and to and from our ports though great and imports across our territory on the one of recent privilege of transit for their exports and imports across our territory, and to and from our ports though great and imports across our territory under the privilege

In addition to this very satisfactory evidence supporting this construction of the language of Article XXIX, it will be found that the law passed by Congress to carry the treaty into effect furnishes conclusive proof of the correctness of such construction.

This law was passed March 1, 1873, and is entitled "An act to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th day of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries."

After providing in its first and second sections for putting in operation Articles XVIII to XXV inclusive, and Article XXX of the treaty, the third section is devoted to Article XXIX, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That from the date of the President's proclamation authorized by the first section of this act, and so long as the Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX of said treaty shall remain in force according to the terms and conditions of Article XXXIII of said treaty, all goods, wares, and merchandise arriving," etc.—

Article XXX of said treaty shall remain in force according to the terms and conditions of Article XXXIII of said treaty, all goods, wares, and merchandise arriving," etc.—

Following in the remainder of the section the precise words of the stipulation on the part of the United States as contained in Article XXIX, which I have already fully quoted.

Here, then, is a distinct enactment of the Congress limiting the duration of this article of the treaty to the time that Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX should continue in force. That in fixing such limitation it but gave the meaning of the treaty itself is indicated by the fact that its purpose is declared to be to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty, and by the further fact that this law appears to have been submitted before the promulgation of the treaty to certain members of the Joint High Commission representing both countries, and met with no objection or dissent.

There appearing to be no conflict or inconsistency between the treaty and the act of the Congress last cited, it is not necessary to invoke the well-settled principle that in case of such conflict the statute governs the question.

In any event, and whether the law of 1873 construes the treaty or governs it, section 29 of such treaty, I have no doubt, terminated with the proceedings taken by our Government to terminate Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXXX of the treaty. These proceedings had their inception in a joint resolution of Congress passed May 3, 1883, declaring that in the judgment of Congress these articles ought to be terminated, and directing the President to give the notice to the Government of Great Britain provided for in Article XXXIII of the treaty. Such notice having been given two years prior to the last named day, and with them Article XXIX was also terminated.

If by any language used in the joint resolution it was intended to relieve section 3 of the act of 1873, embodying Article XXIX of the treaty, from its own limitations, or to save miscarried.

But statutes granting to the people of Canada the valuable privileges of transit for their goods from our ports and over our soil, which had been passed prior to the making of the treaty of 1871 and independently of it, remained in force; and ever since the abrogation of the treaty, and notwithstanding the refusal of Canada to permit our fishermen to send their fish to their home market through her territory in bond, the people of that Dominion have enjoyed without diminution the advantages of our liberal and generous laws.

If Article XXIX was terminated it was done in virtue of an act of Congress which limited the operation of that article as to the transit of goods entering into the custom-houses between our seaboard and Canada, and between Canada and our seaboard, to the period of time when Articles XVIII and XXIX and Article XXX should remain in Congress had the right to make that limitation. Congress made that limitation within the terms and according to the purpose of the treaty. It may or may not be that Article XXIX of that treaty has been abrogated by the consent of the two Governments. It may be that that article still stands as a subsisting diplomatic engagement between the two countries, ratified by both Governments, but it is a doctrine of the Constitution, a doctrine of both Houses of Congress, that whatever relates to the revenue in a treaty negotiated by the President and ratified by the Senate must be put into operation by an act of Congress, and can remain in operation as a law of this land only so long as Congress gives its sanction to its operation.

If, then, to-day, in accordance with the amendment which I propose to offer at the time when we come to vote on amendments, we should declare in accordance with the language of the President of the United States, and in accordance with the fact that that act of Congress is no longer operative, it results that we must resort to some legislation here to remove that gap and defect in the law which is created by the enactment of the statute of 1873. The agreement between the two Gov-ernments may stand, but the law has worked its effect, has become functus officio by the terms of the very words contained in its body. We might to-morrow enact a law to carry into effect the treaty of Washington for ten years more, under the twenty-ninth article, but until Congress does something to supply the deficiency in the law created by the lapse or self-destruction, as I may call it, of this act of 1873, we are proceeding here to admit Canadian goods to pass through our country from the seaboard to the St. Lawrence and the Lakes without any duties whatsoever upon them, giving to the countries of Europe all the benefits of that trade, which the declaration that I propose to place on the statute-book as an amendment to this bill would transfer immediately to the people of the United States; and then the Canadians, instead of going abroad to get their goods that are now admitted free of duty in their transit across our territory after being entered in the custom-house would come to New York, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, and elsewhere in the United States for the purpose of buying these very goods.

More than that, the railroads which our friends seem so determined to protect at the expense of fifteen or twenty millions a year to the revenues of the United States would then probably be benefited by the fact that they would have the transportation to and from Canada of the goods sold at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere in this country. I do not know that they would lose even considerably by it. One thing, however, is beyond question, and that is that the Canadian trade would be transferred to our large cities on the northern lakes to a great extent which now finds its market over the ocean in London, Liverpool, Paris, and other important cities.

I shall therefore press this amendment when the time comes for voting on amendments. As I offered it the other day it is not exactly to my liking, and I will offer it with some modifications to make it still more distinct. But I do insist that we have no right while dealing with the subject of the tariff laws of the United States to pass over this very important subject and ignore it. I must believe that if the Senate chooses to do that thing it will only be because it intends to take from the revenues of the United States from fifteen to twenty million dollars a year for the purpose of subsidizing, in effect, certain railroads that lead from the North Atlantic seaboard out to the St. Lawrence River at Quebec and Montreal.

In the light of the policy indicated by the honorable Senator from Ohio, in which I fully concur, every reasonable provision on our side should be made for admitting Canada into close political union with

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Ala-

Mr. MORGAN. That was all I had to say. I withdraw my objection to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALD-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a proviso to what is called the fresh-fish clause, on page 125, or thereabouts—the new clause providing for a tax of half a cent per pound on fresh fish. I offer this to make it more certain. The amendment already adopted is not printed, and therefore I can not very well tell the page with exactness.

Mr. ALLISON. It is page 128. Mr. SHERMAN. It was not printed, and therefore I could not locate the page exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The subject of fresh fish was treated in an amended paragraph, numbered 267½, on page 127 of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. This is a proviso to that amend-

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso to the new paragraph, which has been numbered 2672:

Provided, That this duty shall not apply to fish caught by citizens of the United States in the open waters of the lakes forming a boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

267½. Fresh fish, one-half of 1 cent per pound: Provided, That this duty shall not apply to fish caught by citizens of the United States in the open waters of the lakes forming a boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SHERMAN. The waters of the lakes being divided by a boundary line between the two countries, Great Britain and the United States, the question arises whether if fish were caught on the Canadian side or the boundary line and were brought over here they would not be imported articles. I do not think so, because fish caught on the high seas by American citizens anywhere, as a matter of course, are not imported; but as the northern half of the lake is within the jurisdictional waters of Great Britain or Canada it might be held that it was an importation.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to hear that new paragraph read again in the form in which it will stand if this amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read again.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me first conclude what I was going to say; I shall finish in a moment. The whitefish, especially in Lake Erie, following along the north shore, are constantly pursued by our fishermen and are caught with the consent of Canada. Being caught by American citizens and brought to us, they ought not to pay duty. I do not think it necessary to discuss the matter any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HARRIS. Is the question on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The question is on the amendment

I think there should be added to this "or caught in Mr. HOAR. the open sea."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that, but there is no need

Mr. ALDRICH. That is covered by another paragraph.
Mr. SHERMAN. The open sea is not within the jurisdictional waters of a foreign country.

Mr. HOAR. Ithink it had better be put in, however.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the law now.
Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt it is the law now.
Mr. ALDRICH. All articles the product of American fisheries are made free by paragraph 156.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio modify the proposed amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it necessary, but if the Senator from Massachusetts asks it

Mr. HOAR. I prefer to have it modified as I have suggested. Mr. SHERMAN. Say "fish caught in the high seas or." There is no objection to that,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will state the proposed modification.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of the proposed amendment it is pro-osed to insert, after "United States," the words "in the high seas or." The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as proposed to be modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this duty shall not apply to fish caught by citizens of the United States in the high seas or in the open waters of the lakes forming a boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio as read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the attention of the Senate now to a paragraph or two that were passed over.

On page 117, the three paragraphs beginning with 184 were passed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Paragraphs 185 and 186 have been

Mr. ALLISON. Has paragraph 184 been also read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, those have all been read.
Mr. ALLISON. Then, on behalf of the committee, I move to insert, in paragraph 184, "two" instead of "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLEEK. On page 117, paragraph 184, line 766, it is proposed to strike out the word "five" and insert "two," so as to make the paragraph read:

184. Nickel.—Nickel in ore, 2 cents per pound for the nickel contained therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, in paragraph 185, on page 117, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 117, paragraph 185, line 769, it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so that the paragraph may read:

185. Nickel in matte, or other crude form not ready for consumption in the arts, 5 cents per pound on the nickel contained therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the punctuation of paragraphs 184 and 185. At the close of the paragraphs should not the semicolon be changed to a period?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraphs 166 to 170 inclusive have not, I think, been read.

Mr. VEST.

Mr. VEST. No, they were passed over.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been read. They will be now read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

166. Copper.—Copper imported in the form of ores, 1½ cents per pound on each pound of fine copper contained therein.

167. Regulus of copper and black or coarse copper, and copper cement, 1½ cents per pound on each pound of fine copper contained therein.

168. Old copper, fit only for remanufacture, clippings from new copper, and all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1½ cents per pound.

169. Copper in plates, bars, ingots, Chili or other pigs, and in other forms, not manufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound.

pound.

170. Copper in rolled plates called braziers' copper, sheets, rods, pipes, and copper bottoms, and all manufactures of which copper shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, also sheathing or yellow metal of which copper is not the component material of chief value, and not composed wholly or in part of iron ungalvanized, 35 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 718, after the word "bottoms," I move to strike out down to and including the word "act," in line 720.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 115, in paragraph 170, line 718, it is proposed to strike out after the word "bottoms," down to and including the word "act," in line 720, as follows:

And all manufactures of which copper shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 158, I move as an amendment what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 158, paragraph 423, line 1778, after the word "cocoa," it is proposed to add the words "and rattan;" and in the same line, to strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" and in line 1779 of the same paragraph, to strike out "five" and insert "fcur." The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These amendments will be considered as one question if there be no objection. The paragraph as it is proposed to be amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

423. Cocoa and rattan matting and mats: Matting, 8 cents per square yard; mats, 4 cents per square foot.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 160, in paragraph 440, line 1832, after the word "glasses," I move to strike out the words "and watch-keys;" and after the word "watches," in the same line, to insert the word "and;" so that the paragraph will read:

440. Watches, watch-cases, watch-movements, parts of watches and watch-lasses, whether separately packed or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask if I can now introduce an additional section immediately following line 1824.

Mr. ALLISON. There are a number of small amendments that I first desire to offer, and if the Senator will allow me to get them out of the way I shall then yield to him with pleasure.

On page 128, in paragraph 277, I move to add what I send to the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 128, paragraph 277, it is proposed to add at the end of the paragraph:

Sugar of milk, crude, 4 cents per pound; refined, 8 cents per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is this an independent paragraph?
Mr. ALLISON, No, it is to be a part of the paragraph.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the punctuation should be changed, and it will be.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 110, in paragraph 151, line 601, I move to strike out "10" and insert "5," and in line 602, to strike out "40" and insert "30."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in line 602 has already been agreed to. The proviso will now be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the sentence so that it may read as follows:

Provided further, That all iron or steel wire valued at more than 5 cents per pound shall pay a duty of not less than 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 157, in paragraph 417, line 1753, after the words "gutta-percha," I move to insert "vulcanized india rubber known as hard rubber."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 157, in paragraph 417, line 1753, after the words "gutta-percha," it is proposed to insert the words "vulcan-ized india rubber known as hard rubber;" so that the paragraph may

417. Manufactures of leather, gutta-percha, vulcanized india rubber known as hard rubber, human hair, and papier-maché, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ALLISON. On page 155, in paragraph 409, line 1717, after the word "bodies," I move to insert the words "or parts thereof."
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 155, in paragraph 409, line 1717, after the word "bodies," it is proposed to insert the words "or parts thereof;" so that the clause may read:

Including fur hat bodies or parts thereof, 50 per cent, ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 148, in paragraph 360, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 148, in paragraph 360, lines 1526 and 1527, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic.

So that the clause may read:

Cords and tassels, dress-trimmings, head-nets, buttons, or barrel buttons.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same paragraph, in line 1529, after the word "machinery," I move to add "any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic;" so that the clause may read:

Wrought by hand or braided by machinery, any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic, made of wool, worsted, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same page and paragraph, line 1532, I move to strike out "30" and insert "40."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 148, in paragraph 360, line 1532, it is proposed to strike out "30" and insert "40;" so that the clause may

The hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of which wool, worsted, the hair of the goat, alpaca, or other animals is a component material, 40 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 50 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 134, paragraph 312, I move an amendment, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. In line 1193, paragraph 312, I move to strike out the word "aerated" and to insert "similar;" so as to read:

Ginger-ale, ginger-beer, lemonade, soda-water, and other similar waters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending to that clause, to insert the word "artificial" before "waters."

Mr. ALLISON. In lieu of the amendment suggested the other day, which has not yet been adopted, I move to insert the word "similar." Mr. VEST. Does the Senator propose to strike out the word "aerated?"

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the word "aerated" and to insert "similar."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend by inserting the word "artificial" was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask him to withdraw it.
Mr. VEST. It seems to me that striking out the word "aerated" and inserting the word "similar" would make this a very nebulous and uncertain clause.

Mr. ALLISON. Not after paragraph 627 is changed as I propose. Mr. VEST. What is the other provision? Let us hear it all.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose, on page 173, paragraph 627, to insert natural mineral waters." I will say to the Senator that I have looked into this matter.

Mr. VEST. I believe that is all right.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VEST. I withdraw my amendment.
Mr. REAGAN. I desire the attention of the Senator from Iowa for a moment. The amendments proposed by the committee can be acted upon after 5 o'clock. There are a few amendments that have to be presented by other Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. If the Senator will allow this matter to be disposed of, I will accept his suggestion. I see there is some force in it

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri being withdrawn, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1193, before the word "waters," it it proposed to strike out the word "aerated" and to insert "similar;"

so as to read:

312. Ginger-ale, ginger-beer, lemonade, soda-water, and other similar waters,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, while upon this subject, on page 173, paragraph 627, line 2143, I move to insert the word "natural" before "mineral waters," and to strike out the words "all not otherwise specially provided for in this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 173 it is proposed to change paragraph 627 so as to read:

627. Natural mineral waters.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLQUITT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment in which I think he will concur. On page 120, after line 847, I move to insert:

Rattans and reeds, manufactured but not made up into completed articles, 10 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that in his absence an amendment has already been agreed to covering the question to which he alludes, by inserting reeds at 10 per cent. and chair canes at 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. COLQUITT. I think those are the crude articles; they are not partly manufactured.

Mr. ALLISON. Rattan is a crude article and is now on the free-

Mr. COLQUITT. I know.
Mr. ALLISON. Reed is in one sense a manufactured and perhaps, also, a crude article. We have inserted reed at 10 per cent. ad valorem and chair cane, which is a preparation from rattan, at 15 per cent. ad valorem, which I think covers all the Senator desires.

Mr. COLQUITT. These articles, then, are not included under the 35 per cent. duty?

Mr. ALLISON. They are not, as now arranged in the bill.

Mr. COLQUITT. That will answer my purpose if I have the assurance of the Senator that that is the case.

Mr. ALLISON. That has already been disposed of. Mr. EUSTIS. In line 880 I move to strike out "five-eighths" and insert "four-eighths;" so as to read:

219. All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard of color, 14 cents per pound.

And in line 883 I move to strike out the word "two" and insert "one and three-fourths;" so as to read:

220. All sugar above No. 20 Dutch standard of color, 11 cents per pound.

I ask that they be considered as one amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two propositions will be so treated, if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, the statement has been made repeatedly by Senators on the other side that there is a reduction of 50 per cent. ad valorem upon sugar. That statement is correct with regard to sugars that are not consumed by the people. It is not correct with regard to sugars that are consumed by the people. If the Senators on the other side, particularly the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONEB], are in favor of giving cheap sugar to the American consumers, as they have declared in this Chamber, if it be the desire of the Finance Committee to give cheap sugar to the American consumers as they declare in their report, then I submit that this amendment is directly in the line of the declared desires and intentions of the Republican members of the Senate. effect of these two amendments will be to equalize the rate, and to make the reduction not only 50 per cent. upon sugars which are not consumed by the American people, but to make the reduction 50 per cent. on sugars that are consumed by the American people.

Senators will understand that up to the current of the standard established by law the sugar which is graded below 16 is not the sugar in daily consumption, as we were informed by the Senator from Rhode Island. The sugar above 16 is the sugar that is used upon the American breakfast-table. According to the Senate bill, up to 16 the reduction is 50 per cent., but the moment you come to the class of sugar that is consumed by the American people there is a deviation from that reduction of 50 per cent. ad valorem, and it is 45 and 42 per cent.

Mr. President, there has been a very false impression created with regard to this sugar question by the arguments presented. I do not mean to intimate or insinuate that it has been intentionally done; but that the Senate bill is intended and will have the effect to give cheaper sugar to the people who consume sugar in this country I deny. I challenge the Finance Committee to controvert the fact that under the Senate bill you have a prohibitory tariff so far as refined sugars are concerned, and those are the only sugars which are consumed in this

The moment you have reached the prohibitory point (and you have reached it by this Senate bill), I care not what pretensions are asserted on the other side, I care not what professions are made for the sugar consumer of this country, I care not whether the Senators on the other side choose to attempt to put the Democratic party in a false attitude on this question of giving cheap sugar to the American consumer, I say that it is absolutely impossible under the provision of this bill for a foreign refiner to import a solitary pound of sugar into the United States that is to be consumed by an American citizen. Why? For illustration, the refiner abroad pays 2 cents for raw sugar. He pays, say, 1 cent for refining it, and pays a duty, if it is between 13 and 16, of 1\s^2_8 cents a pound landed here. That is what his sugar has cost him landed here, for it costs as much freight to import a pound of raw anded here, for it costs as much freight to import a pound of raw sugar as a pound of refined sugar. So his sugar costs him 4\frac{3}{8} cents here, making a difference of three-eighths of a cent against him. Why? Because the refining importer of the United States pays the same price for raw sugar, 2 cents; he pays 1 cent for duty, and 1 cent for refining; so that sugar refined costs him 4 cents, whereas it costs the foreign refiner who attempts to import that sugar 4\frac{3}{8} cents, if the quality be between 13 and 16, and 3\frac{3}{8} cents if the quality be between 16 and 20, and 1 cent difference if the quality be above 20, of which a large amount is consumed in this country.

Consumed in this country.

What I desire to test is the sincerity of the Republican Senators. They are attempting to shelter whatever designs they have themselves with reference to the other provisions of this bill under the idea that they are protecting American labor and all that sort of thing. Your positive position has been that you have made this reduction in order to give cheap sugar to the American consumer. I say if that be your intention and purpose, this amendment you can not for a moment controvert, for it is directly in the line of that argument and of that wish on your part, because it equalizes the reduction upon the grades of sugars and makes the reduction 50 per cent. upon refined sugars as well as upon raw sugars.

In conclusion, I desire to state that this duty upon sugar is a duty as absolutely prohibitory as is the existing law, and we know that under the existing law there have been no sugars imported below No. 13. believe the whole tax does not amount to $11 as compared with $52,-000,000 or $53,000,000 of import duties. Inasmuch as the law is abso-Intely prohibitory as to imported refined sugars, you leave this whole | Mills bill.

sugar interest after you have passed your bill exactly where it was before you passed your bill, and that is within the absolute control of the sugar trust in this country.

I heard the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] some time ago declare in this Chamber that the only way to reach the sugar trust was to reach it through tariff legislation. I agree with him. I believe that his position is correct. The only way that you can ever reach, affect, or destroy that trust is through tariff legislation, by accepting the proposition which I now tender to the other side, to make the duty upon imported and refined sugars the same as you have made it upon raw sugars, thereby under certain conditions and circumstances inviting foreign competition. foreign competition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand that the Senator from Louisiana tenders the proposition which he has made in behalf of his associates?

Mr. EUSTIS. I take it for granted that my associates will vote to reduce the duty on imported sugars in the interest of the sugar consumers. I have no reason to believe otherwise.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will ask the Senator another question. think if we put raw sugars upon the free-list that we ought to put refined sugars also upon the free-list?

Mr. EUSTIS. That is not the question involved in the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was simply asking that question for the purpose of ascertaining the basis of the Senator's amendment, if I can find it out; whether he thought the business of refining sugar in the United States is a legitimate business, and if it is a legitimate business to what extent it is entitled to protection? Does the Senator mean to say that he thinks, if his amendment should be adopted, the difference which would then exist between raw and refined sugar is an equitable one? Is that the reason why he seeks to make this amendment

Mr. EUSTIS. Of course I do. Otherwise I should not have offered

the amendment

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that the sugar-refiners of the United States could still continue in business if his amendment were

Mr. EUSTIS. That is predicated upon conditions, Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think they ought to be put in a situation where their business would depend upon conditions

Mr. EUSTIS. What I mean by this amendment is that we should get nearer the point of probable importations, whereas you now rest at the point of absolute prohibition.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, let us see whether we do rest at the point of absolute prohibition. The Mills bill, which was a part of the Democratic platform, and which received the support, with one or two exceptions, of every Democratic member of the House of Representatives, and which I understand to be the platform upon which the Senators on the other side stand, including the Senator from Louisiana, gives greater protection to the sugar-refiners than the Senate substitute does. Upon the very grade of sugars which the Senator now seeks to reduce the duty upon the Mills bill gives seventy-seven hundredths of a cent protection to the refiners. The Senate substitute gives seventy-five hundredths of a cent, and the Senator now proposes to give fifty hun-

That arrangement of duties was entered into, it is an open secret, at the suggestion and demand of the Representatives from Louisiana in the other House. Now, the Senator from Louisiana comes in here and asks us to reduce the duty which is a protection to American refiners twenty-seven hundredths of a cent below the Mills bill. refiners twenty-seven hundredths of a cent below the Mills bill.

Having opposed here a proposition to give a bounty to the sugar producers of Louisiana, and having opposed a reduction of the duties upon sugar, which is produced in Louisiana, he seeks to destroy the business of sugar refining.

Mr. EUSTIS. To destroy it!

Mr. ALDRICH. I say advisedly to destroy it, because if the duty which he now proposes should be adopted it would be impossible to refine sugars in the United States.

Mr. EUSTIS. There is still a large discrimination in their favor in

Mr. EUSTIS. There is still a large discrimination in their favor in

mr. EOSTIS. There is still a large discrimination in their ravor in regard to raw sugars.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator says we ought to give the same protection upon raw and refined sugars. Let us see how that would operate. Suppose the difference in duty is seventy-five hundredths, as the Senate bill proposes, and we should put raw sugar upon the free-list; that would result in putting refined sugars on the free-list if reduced to the same percentage. It is not the reduction of percentage; it is the margin between the duty on raw sugar and refined sugar which affords the protection to the sugar-refiner. That is a well-known fact, which has been stated repeatedly on this floor.

The Mills bill, which, as I say, has received the support of the Democratic party in both Houses, gives an absolute protection amounting to more than $6,000,000 per annum to the sugar-refiners, as does the Senate substitute; and yet the Senator from Louisiana at this late day, because we have, in spite of his vote, given a bounty to the sugar-producers of Louisiana, and have reduced the duty to the consumers of this country, breaks up his alliance with the sugar-refiners and comes in here and seeks to put his party in the attitude of repudiating the

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Hale, So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, it appears to me, if I caught the terms of the proposition correctly as I heard it read just before the vote was taken, that the effect of it was misunderstood by our friends upon this side. The duty under the existing tariff is on all sugar above 16 and not above 20 Dutch standard in color 3 cents per pound, and it is reduced by the Senate bill now pending to 1\(\frac{1}{8}\) cents per pound. The existing law fixes the tariff on all sugar above No. 20 Dutch standard of color at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cents per pound. The Mills bill places upon these grades 2.40 and 2.80 cents per pound.

The pending Senate bill reduces them far below the Mills bill, to  $1\frac{5}{8}$ cents per pound and to 2 cents per pound. I understand the amendment now offered proposes to still further reduce these rates from 15 to 1 and from 2 cents to 1 cents.

I feel constrained to record my vote against this amendment. production of sugar in Louisiana above No. 16 is very large. judgment it constitutes in value to-day the chief portion of the crop, and it is rapidly increasing, both in value and in quantity, as new and better methods of manufacture are applied. It is wise to encourage the use of these new processes—the diffusion process, centrifugal and vacuum pans-by which not only is the quantity of sugar extracted from a ton of cane increased, but the quality is also improved and brought above No. 16 Dutch standard. Recent experiments demonstrate that, instead of an average of 100 pounds of sugar per ton of cane, by these improved methods over 200 pounds of sugar may be extracted from a ton of cane. This shows the immense benefits that will be bestowed not only upon the large planter but the small farmer, not only upon those who make the better goods but the lower grades of sugar in Louisiana, by the introduction of machinery to make sugar over No. 16.

The best consideration I have been able to give to the Senate schedule leads me to the conviction that its rates were too low upon all grades of sugar, and that it discriminates in favor of the Demerara or bright yellow refined grocery sugars above No. 16 that come directly in competition with our Louisiana sugars. I believe that under the bill as it now stands these sugars, ready for consumption, will be imported. To reduce still further these rates would, in my judgment, be injurious to our sugar interests.

Mr. EUSTIS. I desire to state that so far as my knowledge extends there is no sugar made in Louisiana above the grade of 16, except by refinement. I know that as a fact.

Mr. REAGAN. On page 160, after line 1834, I move to insert as an additional section the following:

an additional section the following:

SEC, —: That there shall be levied and collected and paid annually upon the gains, profits, or income of every person or corporation in the United States, or of any citizen of the United States residing abroad, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation, carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, except as hereinafter mentioned, if such annual gains, profits, or income exceed the sum of $1,000, a duty of 5 per cent. on the excess over $1,000 and not exceeding $5,000; a duty of 7½ per cent. per annum on the excess over $5,000 and not exceeding $5,000, and 10 per cent. upon all sums in excess of $10,000: Provided, That the duty imposed by this act on cotton and woolen goods, on iron and steel, and the products of iron and steel, including farmers' and mechanics' tools, shall in no case exceed 40 per cent. ad valorem, and that salt shall be imported free of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I am aware that the objection may be made that it is now desirable to reduce the revenue—that we have heard all the time—and that a tax on incomes would tend to increase the revenue of the Government. To guard against that I suggest that we place a limit upon the revenue to be derived from the duty upon imported cotton and woolen goods and upon salt and upon the products of iron and steel, including farmers' and mechanics' tools.

I do not present this amendment under the supposition that it will be adopted by the Senate, though I am sure that we all profess, and I hope we all desire, to benefit the American people by our legislation

If I were called upon to point out the greatest political evil that now threatens the welfare of this country, it would be the danger and the evil of promoting class interests by class legislation and of increasing evil of promoting class interests by class legislation and of increasing the fortunes of individuals and corporations by trusts and combinations. If Senators agreed with me in that, then I might ask them logically to agree with me in providing that instead of building up fortunes by class interests and by trusts and combines, we should impose a tax, a reasonable graduated tax, upon incomes of over the sum of $600.

I fear by the reading of the amendment as I presented it, that I made an omission which I suppose will not be material, in not providing for incomes exceeding $10,000. If I expected that the action of the Senate would be favorable, of course I should seek to correct that now. I will say also when I provide for free salt if there was a probability that such an amendment would be adonted or if it was adonted bility that such an amendment would be adopted or if it was adopted, I should move to strike out that portion of the bill which provides for

The purpose of the amendment is to indicate that we propose to make class interests, combinations, and trusts, that are accumulating vast fortunes in this country, to contribute something to the support of the Government and to take some of the burdens off the toiling millof the Government and to take some of the Butters of the tolling inns, out of whom they are now extorting immense fortunes. The amendment is based upon that policy. If such a policy could be adopted and announced to the American people it would produce another rejoicing like the rejoicing which sprang from the Declaration of Independence, because they would feel once more that the Government is the resolution of the record and that ment was engaged in legislating for the masses of the people and that the people might expect a fair chance in the race of life to support their families, educate their children, and discharge the duties of citi-

Mr. REAGAN. I will accept the amendment if I have a right to do

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to strike out "six hundred" and insert "one thousand" will be inserted. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, who, of course, has carefully studied the subject to which his amendment re-lates, what, in his judgment, would be the amount of income or revenue received into the Treasury of the United States under his amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not prepared to answer, because I only determined to-day to present that view of the subject for the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate on the policy. If the amendment should be adopted, we can then make other calculations. I presented the amendment in its present shape and propose to limit the duties upon imports to guard against an increase of the revenue by the adoption of the amendment. I am not able to answer the Senator's question as to the amount of revenue the provision, if adopted, would produce.

Mr. HOAR. In the judgment of the Senator, without going into exactness of calculation, is he not quite sure that it would increase the present revenues of the Government many hundreds of millions of dollars above what they are now?

Mr. REAGAN. I should say not; but, of course, as I have already stated, I can not answer the question. I should say certainly it would not increase the revenues to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. HOAR. Then we have a proposition made by a grave Senator on this floor, who has labored and toiled and perspired with indignation against the large amount of exactions which were taken from the people of this country and put into the Treasury, and the effect on the business of the country of that surplus going into the Treasury, in re-gard to which he has no opinion whether his proposed policy will add to the amount of that surplus in the Treasury many hundred millions

Arkansas], and therefore voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will let my vote stand, then.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to withdraw my vote, and will announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr Jones].

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee have several amendments of importance which should be acted upon before the hour agreed upon at which debate is to close shall arrive; and I ask, therefore, that the committee amendment to paragraph 402, in regard to the duty on kid gloves, may be taken up.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to the fact that the rice schedule was passed over yesterday and was to be taken up this morning, as I understood.

Mr. ALDRICH. That will be reached in due time.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can arrange so as to have no controversy about rice

Mr. BROWN. I hope it will be soon taken up and disposed of.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will be read.
The CHIEF CLERK. On page 159, line 1697, it is proposed to strike out paragraph 402, as follows:

402. Gloves, kid or leather, of all descriptions, wholly or partially manufactured, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

402. Gloves of all descriptions, composed wholly or in part of kid or leather, and whether wholly or partly manufactured, valued at not more than $5 per dozen pairs, $1.50 per dozen pairs and 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $6 and not more than $8 per dozen pairs, $2 per dozen pairs and 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $8 per dozen pairs, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I simply desire to call attention to the effect of this roposed amendment. The present duty upon all these gloves is 50 proposed amendment. The present duty upon all these gloves is 50 per cent. ad valorem. The effect of this amendment analyzed is as follows: Upon gloves costing $1 a dozen the duty is increased from 50 to 170 per cent.; on gloves costing $1.50 a dozen, from 50 to 120 per cent.; and on the next grade, costing $2 a dozen, the rate will be 95 per cent., an increase of 45 per cent.; on gloves costing two and a half dollars per dozen, 80 per cent., an increase of 30 per cent.; those costing $3 a dozen, an increase of 20 per cent., being an increase from 50 to 70 per cent.; on those costing $3.50 a dozen the duty is increased to 62 per cent.; and so on down until we come to the highest-priced gloves, costing $8 a dozen pairs, and upon them the duty is retained at 50 per cent., without any change from the existing law

So, as in all these amendments, systematically and persistently the ad valorem rate is increased upon the cheaper grade and not increased in the same proportion upon the higher-priced gloves, or else the duty is allowed to remain the same. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. ALDRICH. One Senator can judge as well as another of the value of an ad valorem duty which is based upon kid gloves at a dollar a dozen. The absurdity of that proposition is apparent upon the face of it.

Mr. VEST. These are not all kid gloves. Mr. ALDRICH. They are all kid or leather gloves.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator to say they were all kid gloves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the committee amendment to paragraph 412 in regard to the duties on leather be taken up. The first amendment is in line 1729, to insert a comma after the word "enameled."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ALDRICH. In lines 1730, 1731, and 1732, of paragraph 412, it is proposed to strike out:

And skins of all kinds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and chamois-skins, dressed or undressed;

And insert:

Dressed or undressed and finished chamois and other skins, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I now ask to modify the next clause of the same paragraph by inserting, before the word "sheep" in line 1732, the following words:

Bookbinders' calf-skin, kangaroo, sheep;

So as to read:

Bookbinders' calf-skin, kaugaroo, sheep, and goat skins, including lamb and kid skins, dressed and finished, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the word "twenty," in line 1734, in the same paragraph, I move to insert "five;" so as to read: "25 per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ALDRICH. In line 1733 of the same paragraph I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read: "15 per cent. ad va-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. There is objection. I object to that, and ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The yeas and nays can be taken after the close of the debate. I will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that a separate vote can be taken just as well in the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. Of course it can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the yeas and nays may be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. VANCE. I withdraw the call for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that paragraphs 320 and 321 be taken up.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to have a viva voce vote upon the last

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 28, noes 21. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask action on the amendment I offered.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend paragraph 320, so as to read as follows:

On stockings, hose, and half-hose made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber and not other wise specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and on shirts and drawers composed of cotton, valued at not more than $1.50 per dozen, 35 per cent, ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. The effect of this amendment is, like the last about which I made a few remarks, to increase the ad valorem rate of duty upon the cheaper article, for instance upon the cheaper qualities of hose, 30 cents a dozen, and the ad valorem duty is increased from 40 per cent. to 86 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator must be mistaken in his idea of the paragraph under consideration. Paragraph 320 is now under consideration

Mr. VEST. I thought it was the next one, 321.
Mr. ALDRICH. Not yet.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is of the Senator from Rhode Island. The question is on the amendment

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend paragraph 321 to read

On stockings, hose, and half-hose, selvedged, fashioned, narrowed, or shaped wholly or in part by knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, and composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, finished or unfinished, valued at not more than 60 cents per dozen pairs, 20 cents per dozen pairs, and in addition thereto 20 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than 60 cents per dozen pairs and not more than $2 per dozen pairs, 50 cents per dozen pairs, and in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $2 per dozen pairs, 40 cents per dozen, and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem; and on all shirts and drawers composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, valued at more than $1.50 per dozen, and not more than $3 per dozen, $1 per dozen, and in addition thereto 35 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than $3 per dozen, $1.25 per dozen, and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. This is the paragraph which I supposed had been read, and I repeat that upon the lower-priced articles under these classifications the rate of duty has been most largely increased. For instance, on the hose at 30 cents a dozen, the present rate of duty being 40 cents, it is increased to 86 per cent. by the amendment, and reduced to cents it would be, according to the rate proposed by the amendment, 26 cents, while in the substitute it is 20 cents, and the present duty 12 cents. On the highest-priced article, which is $2.10 a dozen, and the highest classification in the schedule the duty is increased from 40 per cent. to an advalorem of 59 per cent, the increase being greater as you decrease the price, and the higher the value of the article is the smaller is the increase, whilst upon the cheaper rates the proportion is reversed and the cheaper the article the larger the increase.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In lines 3 and 4 of the amendment as printed the word "sixty" is duplicated. If there be no objection the duplication will be omitted.

Mr. VEST. I will ask to insert the tables from which I have read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The tables are as follows:

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. Before the roll is called I will ask the consent of the Senate to do what I neglected when the gun schedule was under consideration. I was not able then to prepare an analysis of the effect of it. I will ask the consent of the Senate to insert that also at this time in the RECORD. I wish to have it preserved.

Mr. HOAR. What is it?

Mr. HOAR. What is it?
Mr. VEST. It is an analysis of the rates of duty upon the gun schedule which were adopted some days ago. I have not been able until now to furnish it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand what the Senator means by a statistical table coming from some authority. If it is an argument, I think it ought not to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. It is no argument. Of course, I do not propose to print any speech here.

Whose analysis is it? Mr. HOAR.

Mr. VEST. An analysis made by an expert for me.
Mr. HOAR. I shall object to it unless the Senator will state more fally what it is. We do not know from what source it emanates.

Mr. VEST. The table which I wish to put in is nothing but a statement of the effect of the duty. It is just simply this: The Lefaucheux gun costs in Liege 20 francs, say $4; the present duty is 35 per cent.; the present cost in New York $5.40; the proposed duty is increased to 85 per cent., making the cost in New York $7.40.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator what expert prepared that table in Leeds?

Mr. VEST. Not Leeds; Liege, in Belgium, or wherever it is. The Senator can examine it if he thinks there is any "gunpowder plot" involved in it.

Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. No, I will not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Purchasers of these guns pay from $10 to $15 apiece for them in America, and they will probably not pay any more under this duty

Mr. VEST. If I may be permitted I would like to go into the testimony on that. The schedule is one of the worst in the bill, but it is a little better now than the substitute, and I did not make war upon Mr. VEST. it as determinedly as I would upon the substitute itself for that reason. The increase, however, is upon the cheapest article, which goes all through the bill from beginning to end. I will ask leave to have this table printed, or I can read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the table will be so printed.

The table is as follows:

Description.	Cost in Liege.	Present duty.	Present cost in New York.	Pro- posed duty.	Proposed cost in New York,

Mr. STANFORD. Yes, sir; and it then passed the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I call up the amendment which I gave notice some time ago that I should offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer it as a proviso to come in at the end of paragraph 2671, on page 127.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to paragraph 2671 the fol-

Mr. VANCE. I object to debate.

Mr. HOAR. I am not debating. I am stating an amendment, which is my right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was in error in stating the terms of the agreement under which the Senate is now proceeding. On the 20th of December it was agreed that upon the 21st of January, which was subsequently extended to the 22d, there should be no further debate after the hour named without unanimous consent. The Chair expresses his regret that he declined to entertain the request of the Senator from Florida for unanimous consent, as he was entitled to do under the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 106, line 495, I move to strike out "two-tenths" and insert "one-tenth;" so as to make the proviso read:

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of "20 per cent. ad valorem," I move to insert "1 cent," "one-half of 1 cent," and "one-fourth of 1 cent a pound."

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13, in the first section of the proposed amendment, after the word "office," it is proposed to insert the words "or other sufficient cause;" and between the words "duty" and "malfeasance" to strike out "or;" so as to read:

Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or other sufficient cause.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. VANCE. Were we taking the vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas or the modification which he proposed?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification the Senator proposed did not require any action by the Senate. The question was taken upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VANCE. It was not known here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator states that the vote was taken without his understanding the question, it will be again submitted. The question is on the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Has section 2508, on page 194, been read?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read.
Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is ascertained by the last vote that a quorum is not present.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not demand a quorum.

Mr. VANCE (at 6 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.). I think it is manifest that we can not finish this bill to-night. I move that we adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Ihope not. I think it manifest we shall finish the bill in a few minutes if we just pay attention to it. There are only a few more amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to state that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is temporarily absent and paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will allow my vote to stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 181, line 2350, it is proposed to strike 754. Sponges.

Mr. CALL. If it be in order I will accompany that motion with another: to insert in line 1787, after the word "pearls," the words "sponges, 30 per cent. ad valorem." This will take sponges off the free-list and impose a duty of 30 per cent, on them. The existing law is 25 per cent.

The SECRETARY. On page 181, it is proposed to strike out:

754. Sponges.

And to insert as a new paragraph: 4251. Sponges, 30 per cent. ad valorem

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two amendments will be treated as one question, if there be no objection.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the memorial of merchants of New York representing the Florida sponge fisheries and of fishermen of sponges residing in Florida, protesting against placing sponges on the free-list, presented by me yesterday, be printed in the RECORD. The memorial relates to the amendment which I have just moved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition of the memorial does the Senator desire?

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with the amendment in relation to sponges

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. memorial will be inserted in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned merchants of New York, representing the Florida sponge fisheries, and we, the fishermen of sponges, residing in the State of Florida and following our vocation in the sponge-fishing waters of Florida, hereby petition that the article of sponges be not placed on the list of articles to be admitted free of duties on the tariff bill now under consideration for the

to be admitted free of duties on the tariff bill now under consideration for the following reasons, namely:

First. The present rate of duties is 20 per cent. ad valorem, and the revenue derived from the payment of the same does not exceed $80,000 per annum, which is no appreciable item on a surplus revenue.

Second. The rate of duties now exacted is sufficient to protect the fisheries of Florida, and only sufficients to compensate the fishermen in fair day's wages.

Third. The admission of sponges free of duties will result in consignments on commission from the Mediterranean and Bahama Islands, and will exclude the sponges of Florida by reason of the competition, lowering the price of the Florida product, and finally compelling the abandonment of the trade.

Fourth. The capital now represented in fishing boats, tackle, and other plant will become valueless from abandonment, our occupation unprofitable, compelling a seeking of new fields of labor, breaking up our homes, and scattering our families.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 174 I move the amendment which I send

Mr. ALLISON. On page 174 I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to consolidate the paragraphs from 644 to 666, inclusive, as one paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not necessary to reread those paragraphs. It is an amendment of which I gave notice some days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.
The SECRETARY. In paragraph 382, on page 152, line 1646, after the word "process," it is proposed to insert "photograph, autograph, and scrap albums, wholly or partially manufactured;" so as to make the paragraph read:

382. Papers known commercially as surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, card-boards, albumenized and sensitized papers, lithographic prints from either stone or zinc, bound or unbound (except illustrations in printed books), and all articles produced either in whole or in part by lithographic process, photograph, autograph, and scrap albums, wholly or partially manufactured, 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. The word "and" should be inserted before the word "photograph."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made, if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 124, paragraph 247, I move an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 247, line 949, it is proposed to strike out "1 cent" and insert "1½ cents;" so as to read:

Chicory root, burnt or roasted, 11 cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 130, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend paragraph 294, on page 130, by adding thereto:

De gras, 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa indicate whether the word "de gras" is spelled correctly—"d-e-g-r-a-s?"
Mr. ALLISON. "De gras," I think it is.

Mr. ALLISON. "De gras," I think it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend paragraph 294, on page 130, so as to read:

294. Tallow, 1 cent per pound. De gras, 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A semicolon will be inserted instead of the period after the word "pound" where it first occurs.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 167, line 2003, I believe there was an amendment added. At the end of that amendment I move to insert "and watch jewels."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.
The SECRETARY. On page 167, at the end of line 2003, it is proposed to insert the words "and watch jewels."

Mr. VEST. Is that the free-list? Mr. ALLISON. It is the free-list.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.
Mr. ALLISON. I would rather withdraw the amendment at this moment of time than spend the time in taking the yeas and nays on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment now which is a mere consolidation of paragraphs.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to consolidate paragraphs 720 to 741, inclusive, into one paragraph, as follows—

Mr. ALLISON. It is not necessary to read that.

Mr. HOAR. It is a mere method of arranging the items.

The SECRETARY. On page 169, line 2051, after the word "matting," it is proposed to insert "20 per cent. ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

561. Floor-matting manufactured from round or split straw, including what is commercially known as Chinese matting, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC.—. That all laws and parts of laws which exempt from the payment of duties any articles of commerce upon which duties are imposed in this act, when such articles have been entered in the custom-houses of the United States and are in transit through the United States, to or from the Dominion of Canada or any province thereof, are hereby declared to be inoperative: Provided, That this declaration does not apply to Article XXX of the treaty with Great Britain, concluded May 8, 1871, or to that part of any act of Congress which gives operation and effect to said article.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that. *

Mr. HOAR. Is that amendment in order? Is it germane to the bill? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair knows of no reason why it is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I heard the amendment read imperfectly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear any suggestion on that subject. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to have the amendment again read?

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.
The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. VANCE (at 6 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones], otherwise I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I with draw my vote, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], with whom I am paired, is not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before proceeding further the Chair feels it to be his duty to call attention to the terms of the original agreement made on the 20th of December. The Secretary will read a few paragraphs that relate to the question of the final consideration of this bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection—
Mr. Allison. I do not object, but I think it ought to be also understood that at the session on the 21st of January we shall have a final vote upon the bill before adjournment that day. I think that is important.
Mr. MORRILL. That is according to the proposition.
Mr. Allison. I suppose that is the understanding.
Mr. SHERMAN. That is in the proposition.
Mr. HALE. Yes, that is in it.
Mr. Allison. Is it understood that the proposition shall comprehend the final vote upon the bill before the adjournment on the 21st of January?
Mr. Aldrich and Mr. Harris. Certainly.
Mr. SHERMAN. After the hour of 1 on that day there is to be no further debate.

Mr. VANCE. If the agreement was that we should have a final vote to-day before adjournment, I owe an apology for moving to adjourn; but I did not so understand the agreement. I understood that the debate was to cease at 5 o'clock, and then that the vote should be taken without debate on amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. My understanding of the agreement entered into subsequently to the one read from the Secretary's desk was that the final vote on the bill should be had to-day at 5 o'clock. I have been very much misled if that is not true; and now it is very nearly 7 o'clock and we are still voting. I should like to know what was the understanding. That was my understanding.

Mr. ALLISON. The time was extended from 1 o'clock to-day until 5 o'clock for the beginning of the vote on amendments without debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood that the final vote was to take place at 5 o'clock, and we are here now voting two hours after 5 o'clock

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there an amendment pending?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], on which the eas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad to have some understanding as to when this business is to cease, and therefore, with a view of testing the sense of the Senate, I move that at 8 o'clock the final vote be taken on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was agreed by unanimous consent many weeks ago, or many days ago, that to-day we should dispose of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. That is exactly what I have insisted upon, but it seems the Senator from Vermont and I are both wrong about it. I thought we were to vote at 5 o'clock on the bill, but it seems I was mistaken. The general debate under the ten-minute rule was to cease at 5 o'clock, and then the amendments were to be voted upon without debate. Now, it seems to me that we ought to have some understanding as to when that operation shall cease.

Mr. HOAR. We are through on our side.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether you are through on your side or not. That is what I want to get at, not as to one side or the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can only proceed by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from South Carolina proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply want to come to some understanding as to when we shall have the final vote on this bill. If we are going to stay all night, let us understand it. If we are not going to stay all night, then I can arrange my movements accordingly.

Mr. EDMUNDS.* Mr. President—

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to move an amendment to the bill.
Mr. BUTLER. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the final vote on the bill be taken at 8 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to reply to my friend from South Carolina. By an honorable understanding, which has never yet been violated in the Senate, it was agreed, as I understood, that this day, and now, this bill, every Senator having a right to offer amendments, should be finally disposed of; and for one I feel bound by that engagement, whatever other gentlemen may do.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not propose to deviate from that engagement. but when is it to end? Are we to go on offering amendments until day after to-morrow?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was to end before we adjourned this day.
Mr. BUTLER. I understand that perfectly well. I do not propose to violate any agreement, but I should like to have some time appointed when we are to take the final vote on the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, I will state that there is no limit to the right of Senators to offer amendments. Debate is closed on amendments and on the bill, and it is to be hoped at an early hour we may come to a direct vote upon the substitute for the House bill, but so long as Senators desire to offer amendments without debate they have a right to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that perfectly well. I have not questioned the right of Senators to offer amendments, but I wanted to astioned the right of Senators to offer amendments, but I wanted to ascertain, if possible, about when that practice would cease.

Mr. HARRIS. No Senator can tell.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 1086, page 130, I move to strike out "25 cents?" and insert "50 cents," which is the present duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1086, it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "50," before the word "cents;" so as to read:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the amendment of the Committee on Finance, as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having made one amendment to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment will be considered as concurred in, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. No, the amendment will not be concurred in without a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that upon the question of concurring in the Senate with the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

ment that is peculiarly personal?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have voted right along with the Republican party here for their bill, and with the committee, and have so stated time and again. There is nothing in the bill that would have justified me as a representative here of a constituency in voting for it after the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. Therefore if I had not been paired, and had not felt under obligation to preserve that pair, I should not have voted for the bill.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-SMALLS VS. ELLIOTT.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for present consideration the contested-elec-tion case of Smalls vs. Elliott, from the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina.

Mr. RANDALL. I must raise the question of consideration upon that. I know the gentleman from Georgia has a right to call that up, but I think, if the gentleman will permit me to say a word or two, that there are good reasons why I should raise the question of consideration. I think the river and harbor bill and the sundry civil appropriation bill should be proceeded with immediately. I think that the election case will not suffer by a day or a week's delay.

Mr. CRISP. I only want to state in reply that I have heretofore made two efforts to get this report considered by the House. It is here, ready for consideration; and it is the desire of the parties that it should be taken up and disposed of. So far as the appropriation bills are concerned, this case will not interfere with their consideration or passage in ample time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say that if the election case be not proceeded with to-day, the river and harbor bill is to come up.

Mr. HOUK. I simply desire to say that while I am a friend of the river and harbor bill, I think justice to Mr. Elliott and Mr. Smalls and to this House requires us to take this case up. Here is a member who has been knocking at the door for two whole years. The session is about to expire, and yet consideration of his case is still attempted to be antagonized upon the floor before it is determined.

The question was put, and the Chair announced that he was unable to determine.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. HOLMES and Mr. OUTHWAITE objected.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills. As this may seem to be an indirect motion in this connection, I am not willing to make it except with full knowledge on the part of the House of what I am about to accomplish, if I can, which is the consideration of the river and harbor bill to-day, so that the sundry civil bill will come next in order. It was necessary to harmonize the friends of those two measures, and the understanding is that the river and harbor bill is to occupy this day. The objection which has been raised prevents my going directly to the execution of that understanding, but if this motion carries I shall ask general consent to lay aside the appropriation bill so as to give free transit to the river and harbor bill. I was unwilling to make this motion, however, without a full, free, and frank statement of the purpose I have in view

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, my reason for objecting is that too often this morning hour has been blotted out. There are now pending two measures reported from the Committee on the Militia and one from the Committee on Pensions, both of which have had one hour's consideration, and I desire that this morning hour may be used by one or the other of those committees to finish their business, so that other measures may have an opportunity for at least as much consideration as can be had in one hour.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman I will remind the House that the bill to which he refers as having been reported from the Committee on Pensions proposes to increase expenditures and will cost the Government a quarter of a million of dollars.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall] moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills, and states that his purpose is, if the motion is carried, to ask that the sundry civil bill shall be passed over in the Committee of the Whole in order that the river and harbor bill may be taken up and disposed of.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 100, noes 41.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 148, noes 18.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. McMILLIN in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay that bill aside for the present.
Mr. CHEADLE. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and under the rule the committee will rise in order that the question may be submitted to the

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McMillin reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, objection was made to laying it aside, and, under the rule, the question was submitted to the vote of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the usual procedure under the rule.

the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House order that in Committee of the Whole the bill be laid aside?

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 2. Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole to pass over the sundry civil appropriation bill?

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 4. So the House directed that in Committee of the Whole the sundry civil appropriation bill be passed over.

The Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the rule, resumed its session, Mr. McMillin in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By direction of the House, the bill the title of which was last reported by the Clerk will be passed over. The Clerk will report the title of the next general appropriation bill. [A pause.] The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the next appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, has not yet come from the Printing Office. The Chair is informed that there is no other general appropriation bill on the Calendar. The bill which now comes up as unfinished business will be reported by its title.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and reservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other pur-

The Clerk will report the pending amendment, offered, when the bill was last under consideration, by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 13, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" so that the paragraph, if amended as proposed, will read:
"Improving harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, Michigan, continuing improvement, $15,000."

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee of the Whole when it last rose was dividing on this amendment, no quorum having voted. I desire now to withdraw the pending amendment and offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "ten," in line 6, page 13, and insert in lieu thereof "twenty."

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is in accordance with our agreement. Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan will not prevail. In the act of August 11, 1888, Congress appropriated $10,000 for this improvement. This balance is still unexpended and available for this work. In the bill now before the Committee of the Whole the Committee on Rivers and Harbors recommended an additional appropriation of $10,000, which, with the amount on hand, makes $20,000. Why the necessity for the increase proposed by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, in consequence of the confusion in the Hall I have not been able to hear what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] has said, and therefore I make no reply.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON, there were—ayes 77, noes 15.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think I can make a brief statement which would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion can not be had except by unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan. Is there objection?

Mr. SOWDEN. I object. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. No quorum having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 142, toes 21.

1 oes 21.

So the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON was adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, when the eleventh page of this bill was acted upon by the Committee of the Whole I had not the information which I now have in regard to the rights of certain persons to a county road or other roads leading across the dock company's property at Grand River to the river and across. An appeal now comes to me from certain farmers and others, living back of the river, asking that their rights in certain roads may be protected by a proviso to be added to this portion of the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent to offer a proviso saving the rights of those people to the public ways across a proviso saving the rights of those people to the public ways across

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole return to page 11, that he may offer the amendment which he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask whether the proposed amendment in any way increases the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. - It does not. I have received a communication stating that the provision of the bill as it stands might result in an obstruction of certain highways

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the amendment is only a proviso with reference to that matter, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlem in from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that the Committee of the Whole recur to page 11, already passed, in order that he may move a proviso to line 13 on that page? The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR was read, as follows:

At the end of line 13, on page 11, add the following:
"Provided, That the owners of such dock property shall not obstruct or close up the existing streets, roads, or ways leading to the said river, but shall leave and preserve the existing roads, streets, alleys, and ways in as good condition for travel as though this act had not been passed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I propose the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 6 insert:
"For harbor of refuge on the Atlantic seaboard at or near Point Judith, Rhode Island, $50,000."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect the House will pass this amendment, and I make it with the view of submitting a motion that certain documents be published in the RECORD for future reference, which I think, sir, is a very good custom.

1 am put in charge of this matter by the Chamber of Commerce of New York. The Maritime Association of the city of New York and others have furnished me with some documentary evidence as to the necessity of this harbor of refuge at Point Judith. These papers show the number of vessels wrecked at that point, as well as the imports and export of merchandise which go and come along that coast, and they are enormous in their quantity, and are in constant peril.

The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York states this portion of the Atlantic coastator near Point Judith is considered by mariners or c of the most dangerous points on the seaboard, and there is no harbor for 29 miles along the shore where passengers and crews of vessels in distress can with safety make a landing, and disaster in this locality has resulted usually in general loss. The wonder with me is that this bar-bor at Point Judith, Rhode Island, has not been established ere this. It is in the line of the large steamers which come down along the New England coast, and although this is the beginning of the harbor of refuge, and although it may not be deemed by the gentleman having in charge this bill to be in order under the rules of proceeding here, I ask these papers from different commercial associations, giving statements of disasters at Point Judith, and showing the perils of that coast, be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The papers referred to are as follows:

PRELIMINABY EXAMINATION OF COAST NEAR LIFE-SAVING STATION, EAST POINT JUDITH, RHODE ISLAND, WITH A VIEW TO CONSTBUCTING A BREAKWATER.

Engineer Office, United States Army, Newport, R. I., December 14, 1888.

ENGINEER OFFICE, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Neuport, R. I., December 14, 1888.

GENERAL: In compliance with instructions contained in Department letter of September 29, 1888, I have the honor to submit the following report upon the preliminary examination of coast near life-saving station, East Point Judith, Rhode Island, provided for in river and harbor act of August 11, 1888, and made by Capt. Thomas L. Casey, Corps of Engineers, on the 11th of October last.

Point Judith is the southeastern extremity of South Kingston Township, Washington County, Rhode Island, and marks the southwestern entrance to Narragansett Bay.

Captain Casey recommends the establishment of a harbor of refuge in this locality. His report is accompanied by two sketches and a list of vessels which have been wrecked there between 1883 and 1888. I have been told that the loss of the larger of these vessels was caused by fogs, and not by storms. The amount of commerce passing Point Judith is too well known to require detailed description. The point is an exceedingly dangerous one to navigation. While vessels of large size can ride in the trough of the sea to a safe shelter in Narragansett Bay, a harbor of refuge for smaller vessels is much needed.

Such a harbor can be established by the construction of break waters, at a cost, roughly estimated, of $300,000, which would also afford relief to the commerce of the neighboring villages, and furnish a landing for the boats of the Point Judith life-saving service, which now often can not be effected nearer than Newport or Block Island. I am therefore of the opinion that East Point Judith is worthy of improvement by the General Government, and estimate the cost of a survey of the locality at $300.

Point Judith is in the collection district of Newport, which is a port of entry. The amount of revenue collected at Newport in the last fiscal year was $2,184.51. The nearest light-house is Point Judith light. The nearest fortification is the fort on Dutch Island, Rhode Island. The population of South Kingston

At a monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, held January 3, 1889, the following preamble and resolutions reported by its committee on the harbor and shipping were unanimously adopted:
Whereas the section of the Atlantic seaboard at and near Point Judith, Rhode Island, is considered by marinersone of the most dangerous parts of the coast; and

Island, is considered by mariners one of the most dangerous parts of the coast, and

Whereas there is no harbor at present for 29 miles along the shore where passengers, crews, cargo, or vessels in distress can with safety make a landing, and, in consequence, disaster in this locality has generally resulted in total loss of vessels and cargoes and the destruction of human life; and

Whereas by the construction of harbors of refuge at the locality lives and property will be saved and the coastwise commerce of the Atlantic seaboard be benefited: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That harbors of refuge at the point designated seem to this chamber to be urgently required by the coastwise commerce of this part of the Atlantic seaboard, whereby the safety of the lives of seamen and the property of its citizens will be greatly enhanced.

Resolved, That our Representatives be requested to urge upon Congress the importance of immediate construction of such harbors of refuge, and at such points as, in the judgment of the United States engineers, are required in the neighborhood of Point Judith, and that the appropriation required to carry the same into effect be made.

THIRD UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING DISTRICT, Point Judith Station, December 27, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of the 26th instant, asking for the number of vessels that pass this station during a year, is received. In reply will say that I have taken an average of the different vessels, and, making allowance for the summer months, nights, and thick weather, think it will be safe to say that about 167 ships, 175 brigs, 24,110 schooners, 7,483 steamers, 1,080 sloops, and 5,383 barges pass this station during a year, or a grand total of about 38,398 vessels.

Very respectfully yours,

Mr. F. W. HOUGHTON, Superintendent Maritime Exchange, New York City.

HERBERT M. KNOWLES.

The following steamers regularly pass Point Judith on their way to and from New York, namely, Fall River Line, for Newport, etc., daily; Fall River Line freight-boats, daily; Providence Line, daily; Merchants' Line, for Providence, weekly; New Bedford Old Colony boats, three per week; Boston Outside Line, three per week; Portland, Me., two per week; Bangor, Me., one per week; Red Cross Line, Halifax, and St. John's, Newfoundland, etc., besides the transient steamers from Boston and vessels bound to and from the East, including large fleets of coasters, colliers, coal-barges, etc.

In addition to the above the following lines of steamers, namely, Fall River, for Philadelphia, two per week; Providence, for Baltimore, two per week, etc.

THIRD DISTRICT LIFE-SAVING STATION, Point Judith, January 15, 1889.

Point Judith, January 15, 1889.

Dear Sie: Your communication of the 12th instant, asking for my opinion of the needs and establishment of a harbor of refuge at Point Judith, etc., is received. In reply will say that it would not only be a great advantage to shipping and commerce, but to the fishermen, and particularly to the saving of lives.

Owing to a large cove being on each side of Point Judith, I am quite sure that good harbors could be obtained on either or both sides of the point simply by building a breakwater from the shore out to a suitable depth of water. A breakwater of this kind at Point Judith would be the means of saving many a good vessel and their cargoes.

Suppose a vessel comes ashore in a light or moderate sea in thick weather at low water, which is generally the case, and as the tide rises is floated, leaking more water than the pumps can take. She could easily be sheltered by a breakwater if one was near at hand and the vessel and cargo saved. On the other hand, the harbors or place of shelter being miles away, the vessel and her cargo is either allowed to sink in deep water and both become a total loss or else run ashore again, only again to be dashed to pieces by a coming storm. Cases of this kind occur on all shores, but oftener here than elsewhere, because we have more wrecks. Again, suppose a vessel springs a leak and is making more water than can be kept out by the pumps, or a small leak with pumps choked; she must either sink in deep water and be a total loss or beached, which are the only two things that could be done under the circumstances.

Within the past few years the following vessels: Schooners Alida, of Newport, R. I. Palladium, of Harwich, Mass.; Almon Bacon, of New York, and Mary Natt, of New York, sprung a leak, sunk in deep water, and were a total loss. I am quite sure if a breakwater had been here for these vessels to run behind and beached, each, with their cargoes, would have been saved. The steamer Thetis, of the Neptune Line, bursted a water-pipe and was run ashore on this point to keep from sinking; also the schooner Adelaide, loaded with moldingsand. Owing to good weather these vessels were saved.

I inclose herewith a copy of the report to the General Superintendent United States Life-Saving Service relative to the wreck of the large three-masted schooner Mary A. Drury, of Boston, Mass, which came ashore here last winter. Had there been a harbor of refuge here this vessel and cargo would certainly have been saved. On Christmas morning, 1885, which is fresh in the minds of every citizen of the United States, I went to a couple of wrecks which had collided during the night some 5 or 5 miles off shore. A heavy sea was running at the time, the wind increased to a 60-mile gale, and we were driven before the gale to the nearest place of shelter, which, fortunately, was Block Island. We landed on the sheltered side of the Government breakwater, going through the surf in good shape. I have often mentioned the fact to my crew that had it not been for the breakwater we would in all probability been drowned, for a tremendous sea was running on all sides of us. And I assure you that a breakwater mear this place (Point Judith) would some day be the means of saving many lives. Just

25, 1885.]

At 7.40 a. m. I discovered the masts of a two-masted schooner about 5 or 6 miles southeast of station, and another two-masted schooner capsized about 1 mile north of her. Upon examination with the glass objects were seen resembling men clinging to the rigging of each vessel. The wind at this time was northeast, blowing a brisk gale, and heavy sea running. I thereupon ordered the life-boat launched and we got away with considerable difficulty through the surf at 7.55 a. m., well prepared with clothing, provisions, etc., for whatever occasion might require. Pulling through a heavy, choppy sea we arrived at the schooner, lying upon her beam ends, anchored; observed no signs of life upon her.

schooner, lying upon her beam ends, anchored; observed no signs of life upon her.

What had appeared through the glass to be people clinging to her side and shrouds proved to be scupper doors and a loose top-sail that were awast; we carefully observed the surroundings and that her boat was gone from davits; satisfied myself that there was nothing living upon her. The surface of the water was covered with the débris in large quantities composed of lath and joist. Squaring away we pulled through this for the sunken schooner, which lay about one mile in a southerly direction, the wind in the mean time increasing to a severe gale and the sea to rise much higher. Arriving at the sunken schooner, after careful examination found that no one had sought shelter in the top-sails or otherwise.

ing to a severe gale and the sea to rise much higher. Arriving at the sunken schooner, after careful examination found that no one had sought shelter in the top-sails or otherwise.

All indications pointed to the fact that the crew had either perished or been rescued by some passing vessel. The débris nowhere exhibiting signs of life, thereupon I gave orders for return to the station. For about thirty minutes we strugdled with the now tremendous sea and wind to accomplish this purpose. I discovered that we were steadily going to the leeward; the elements were too powerful for us, and I therefore found it absolutely necessary to make for the nearest refuge to the leeward, which was Block Island. With the greatest difficulty and by careful management of the boat I was able to avoid the seas which every instant threatened to engulf us, and at last safely reached and beached the boat upon the said island near the harbor United States life-saving station, where we found Captain Ashford and his crew of four men of the sunken schooner Mott Haven. From him we learned that they had with great difficulty arrived there about 5 a. m. that morning in their yawl-boat, their vessel, the Mott Haven, having been sunk in collision with the schooner Willie De Wolf, both of Calais, Me.; the former from New York for Eastport and Calais, Me., with cargo of coal, kerosene oil, starch, and furniture; the latter from Calais, Me., for New York, laden with lath.

Of the fate of the latter's crew we could get no information. The gale continued with unabated force, the highsets velocity of the wind being between 6 and 70 miles an hour, as I learned of the signal officer stationed there. The next morning, being the 26th instant, at 9 o'clock the above-named schooner, Willie De Wolf, drifted ashore and shortly became a total wreck near the north end of the island, my own and the harbor crew giving effort so far as possible to save the cargo, but the high seas rendered our efforts unavailing. We remained storm-bound here until the next mornin

Mr. SOWDEN. The object of the gentleman I understand is to get before this House the information contained in the documents which he has asked to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COX. I do not insist if the point of order is made. Now do you make the point of order?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not understand the amendment is to be pressed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. That is right; I do not. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is wise on the part of members of Congress to place substantial docu-ments in the RECORD. I have been scolded by some members of the press because I have done that heretofore, but I have found it in my service here a most convenient thing and proper to place these matters in the RECORD

I now withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to strike out lines 7 and 8 on page 13: Improving harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Mich.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. Chairman, under the act of August 11, 1888, there was appropriated for this improvement $75,000, which is still on hand and unexpended. I should like some substantial reason to be given for this additional appropriation.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes eemed to have it.

mr. SOWDEN. I ask for a division.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 72.
Mr. SOWDEN called for tellers.
The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. BLANCH-ARD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 7, noes

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MILLS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Mc-COOK, its Secretary, announced agreement to amendments of the House to Senate bills of the following titles:

A bill (8, 332) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner; and A bill (8, 2765) granting a pension to Adaline A. Smyth.

It further announced the passage of the bill (8.3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Mount Vernon and making appropriation therefor; in which concurrence was requested.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to strike out the word "twenty," in line 8 on page 13, and insert "ten;" so that it will read:

Improving harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Mich.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN declared the noes had it.

Mr. SOWDEN. Division.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. SOWDEN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 7, noes

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to go back to page 6 of the bill now for the purpose of offering an amendment, not to increase the amount of the appropriation for New York Harbor, but to make a necsary insertion so that the present appropriation shall conform to the last bill and to the existing law. It is desirable that the plan should be continued as fixed in the last law; and I therefore send to the desk the following amendment, to take the place of line 1 on page 6. I will say that the chairman of the committee passed this over in consequence of my absence, with the privilege of recurring to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the words "New York" and insert:

"Improving the channel at Gowanus Bay, New York: Continuing improvement by deepening to 21 feet, mean low water, and widening the channel to 400 feet on the northern side from the foot of Pereival street along the wharves to the 23-foot curve opposite the entrance to the Erie Basin, $20,000."

Mr. BLANCHARD. The appropriations for the harbor of New York embraced in this bill were passed over at my request owing to the ab-sence of the gentleman from New York, with the privilege on his part of recurring to them after he returned if he should see proper to do so. The committee, therefore, have no objection to going back, nor is there any objection to the amendment. It does not increase the amount.

There being no objection, the amendment was considered, and adopted. Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to go back to page 12 of the bill in order to offer an amendment to lines 22 and 23, referring to the harbor at Monroe, Mich. I find that I was absent from my seat at the moment this part of the bill was considered. This portion of the bill was considered on the 3d day of January, when I happened to be absent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I now send up the amendment to which have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 12, strike out "$3,500" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is the only harbor on the west side of Lake Erie. It is upon the eastern side of the State of Michigan, north of Toledo, and is the center of the most industrious population of that great State, almost exclusively devoted to agriculture. This harbor, Monroe, is the only lake outlet, and the business of the harbor has doubled and quadrupled in the last few years. This appropriation has been recommended by the engineer in charge and by the Secretary of War. In his report the following lan-

As the business at this harbor has increased considerably in the last two years, with prospect of still greater increase, general and thorough repairs to piers should be undertaken at once, and considerable dredging done; and the whole of the estimated amount for existing project, namely, $20,000, could be profitably expended in one season's work in addition to the $6,000 needed for immediate repairs.

The whole amount appropriated for this harbor to date has been $215,515.27, all of which has been expended.

This is the report of the officer of the Government himself in charge of these appropriations, not merely of the engineer in charge; and, Mr. Chairman, there is no one harbor that can claim superiority to this as a matter of right, nor is there one which is more entitled to consideration in the preparation of bills of this character. As I have already stated, it is the only harbor on the east shore of the lake, and in case of trouble between this country and Great Britain it would be the only harbor of refuge for vessels in distress and where they could escape British or Canadian gun-boats. It ought to be put in a state of thorough repair without delay. The amount asked for is a mere bagatelle. If the amount can be appropriated by the House it would be used judiciously and wisely, in a manner which will produce the best results and give us what we have so much needed up there. I may state also that this is one of the oldest places in Michigan, or in the West, and, as I have shown, the money is needed largely in order to save from ruin work already done. Now, as the engineer in charge of the work and the Secretary of War both state in their reports to this House the importance of the harbor and the need of this appropriation, I sincerely hope that the usual rule which requires the House to keep within the appropriations recommended by the committee may in this instance be relaxed, because of its fairness, because of its equity, and because of its justice. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment should be adopted. The committee duly considered the interests of the harbor of Monroe, Mich., and allowed the sum of $3,500 upon an estimate of $10,000. The amount appropriated for the harbor in the last kill which was deather. last bill, which was double the aggregate of the appropriation here, was only $5,000; and the committee do not see that any particular exigencies have arisen since to justify any larger appropriation in pro-portion than was allowed in the bill of the last year. For this reason

I do not think that amendment should be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I also was absent, and beg leave to recur to page 9, in line 8, for the purpose of adding an amendment, which does not, however, increase the amount of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection. The amendment proposed by Mr. DIBBLE was read, as follows:

Add to line 8, on page 9, "of which sum $5,000 shall be expended in continuing the work on the Mount Pleasant shore of the harbor."

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand that there is no objection on the part of the committee to which this has been referred, and it does not in-

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment just read does not increase the amount of the total appropriation for Charleston Harbor, but makes the phraseology of it conform to the bill of last year in reference to the appropriation for that harbor. For that reason I see no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted. The Clerk read as follows

Improving harbor at St. Joseph, Mich.: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out "six thousand" and insert "five thousand." The reason for that is, the engineer in his recommendation says $5,000 is all that is needed. That being the case, I do not see why $6,000 should be put in there.

Mr. BURROWS. The engineers asked for $20,000 in this case.

The question was taken on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 3, the noes 70.
Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.
Mr. BURROWS. I think the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his amendment when he discovers that the report he speaks of refers to St. Joseph River and not to the harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr.

BLANCHARD].

Mr. KERR. My attention had been called to St. Joseph River in- on account of sickness.

stead of St. Joseph Harbor in making my former statement, and therefore I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to strike out the item.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it. Mr. CHEADLE.

Division.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 2, noes 92.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. CHEADLE were appointed tellers.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire how many votes are reported in the affirmative.
The CHAIRMAN. One in the affirmative.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The intellectual impudence of that one is remarkable.

The tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 111.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McMillin reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The vote in Committee of the Whole disclosed no quorum present. I therefore move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles;

when the Speaker signed the same:

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].
The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Marquette, Mich.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph I make that motion because it seems to me entirely unnecessary for this Congress to appropriate $20,000 for the continuing of this improvement. On July 1, 1888, there was a balance available for this purpose of $9,000.86, and in the act of August 11, 1888, an additional appropriation of $25,000 was made to prosecute this work; so that there is now an unexpended balance on hand and available for this work of $34,000.86. Why the necessity of appropriating $20,000 at this particular time? Had we not better first expend the $34,000 now on hand before making this additional appropriation?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. Chairman, I would say in reply to the gentleman that the harbor of Marquette is one of the most important on Lake Superior. The iron ore alone passing out of that port in a single season is a million of tons, and other articles increase the aggregate tonnage largely. The harbor is inadequate for the rapidly increasing business. Seamen often attempt to use it as a harbor of refuge, yet since it is so small and so many storms prevail at some seasons of the year on Lake Superior, wrecks at this point are of frequent occur-rence. This appropriation is for the extension of the breakwater and for the enlargement of the facilities required for the transaction of

The engineer reports that $175,000 is necessary to complete the work. As has been stated here, in August last $25,000 was appropriated, but in order to enlarge the facilities to the extent required it is necessary to increase the amount. It is not likely that another appropriation will be had before August, 1890, and during the early part of the coming year that entire amount will be expended, and also the amount of $20,000 which is proposed to be appropriated in this bill. The necessity for the improvement of this backer, the sity for the improvement of this harbor, the great amount of commerce on Lake Superior, and the few harbors of refuge that exist there, re-quire the construction and completion of this work at the earliest possible moment.

Taking into consideration the amount on hand, the Secretary of War has recommended the appropriation of $50,000 at this time; yet only the sum of $20,000 for this work is embraced in the present bill. So that, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, in the opinion of the engineers in charge, this amount is necessary, as much so as any item embraced in the pending measure.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, the importance of this work is admitted; but the propriety of appropriating an additional sum of $20,000 when there is still an unexpended balance on hand of more than $34,000 is the matter to which I take exception. I do not dispute the importance of this work; but the question in my mind is whether we can profitably expend the balance now on hand during the coming fiscal year. The propriety of any further appropriations by this Congress for this particular project is therefore doubted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEYMOUR. In regard to the amount named, I wish to say that this appropriation is for another fiscal year. The last appropriation was made August 11 of the present year. The coldness of the climate of Lake Superior and the difficulty of doing work there in the winter season making the procuring of timber and doing the necessary dredging impossible, I may say the letting of contracts, which would now show any considerable amount of work done, are reasons why this amount is shown to be on hand at the time of this report.

Whether the contract has since been let I can not say, but it would not be likely to be much before the opening of navigation. This appropriation, as I have said, is for another fiscal year; and the whole amount desired to complete this work is $175,000, of which the amount amount desired to complete this work is $175,000, of which the amount shown to be on hand, together with the sum now asked for, is much less than should be expended during the season of 1889. The gentleman from Pennsylvania admits the importance of the work, and yet, with the statement of the engineers before him asking for $50,000 additional to the amount now shown to be on hand, doubts the propriety of the appropriation of even $20,000. If any just criticism can be made on the amount named in this bill it is that the sum is entirely too small.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.
Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. The very argument advanced by the gentleman who represents this project is an argument in favor of my proposition, because he contends that this work can not be prosecuted during the colder portion of the year, during the winter season; and if this be true and there is on hand $34,000 for this work, how is it physically possible to expend this sum of money between now and the meeting of the Fifty-first Congress? Why appropriate $20,000 before the amount on hand has been expended?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

Sowden] want an answer?
Mr. GROSVENOR obtained the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will give the gentleman the answer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sowden] is made in actual good faith and not as a mere matter of delay. From this point of view I shall answer his argument. I concur in what has been said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SEYMOUR]; and I wish to add that the amount available (which has misled so many of our friends on this floor) will not be available at the time this proposed appropriation goes into effect. This appropriation will not be available until after the 30th of June, 1890; and therefore the Fifty-first Congress can not make an appropriation in time so that any part of it can be expended upon the harbor of Marquette. Hence, if it be true that the $34,000, which appears to be the stumbling-block of my friend from Pennsylvania, shall have been expended in a whole year of operations up there, there will then be another entire year without a dollar.

This is one of the most important of the smaller harbors on the lakes. Its commerce is growing constantly, and the importance of other har-bors depends upon the improvement of this harbor. Hence, this small appropriation—less than one-third of what it should be—ought not be attacked by anybody who under any circumstances favors the improvement of the harbors of the Great Lakes.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is evidently laboring under a misapprehension when he states that this appropriation is only to take effect after June 30, 1890.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, I should have said gentleman meant.

Mr. SOWDEN.

That is a fiscal year to which the present balance has no application. If it is expended during 1889, I apprehend that the Fifty-first Congress will convene as usual under the Constitution in December, 1889. Mr. GROSVENOR.

That is what we may presume, anyhow; and its appropriation bill for rivers and harbors, we may also presume, will be passed in July or August of the next year, and can not by any possibility have any effect upon these northern harbors during any part of the year 1890.

Mr. SOWDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the gentleman from Ohio is overzealous in his anxiety for the passage of this legislation. He wants to shift upon this Democratic Congress, which is about going out of existence, the responsibility of passing river and harbor appropriations amounting in the aggregate to nearly $35,000,000, something entirely unheard of in the past. This is the question-

Over $22,000,000 have able precedent he would have us establish. already been appropriated by this Congress for these improvements and the greater bulk of it is on hand and unexpended, and in the face of which we have another bill confronting us appropriating very nearly $12,000,000, making the grand total of nearly $35,000,000 in all from a Democratic Congress that came into power upon its distinct pledges in favor of economy in the public expenditures

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Sowden, it was not agreed to; there being-ayes 8, noes 132.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Ahnapee, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $3,500.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. No one realizes more than I do the importance of the commerce of these Great Lakes or the necessity of improving the various harbors that line them. I do not wish to delay the committee or to make any captious criticism on this bill, but I wish to extenuate my opposition to it—to show why I and other gentlemen are compelled year after year to record our votes in opposition to legislation of this class. Take this improvement in question. I find by reference to the engineer's reports, to state the question sententiously, that this is an artificial harbor and that it had originally but 2 feet of water in it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what harbor he is referring to?

Mr. McADOO. I am referring to the harbor of Ahnapee, Wis. Why, they have undertaken to make a harbor where there is no water save the 2 feet, which may have been rain-water. They have scooped out a harbor on this sand-bank on the shores of Lake Michigan, and after an expense of over $100,000 they find what? That they were on another man's farm, and that man is levying to-day, and has been since the first dollar was expended on this harbor, a tribute on every man who ships a ton or a pound of freight from it.

If gentlemen will turn to the map of the engineers which accompanies the report on this improvement, they will find that the picturesque commerce as represented on the map consists of two small warehouses, a hay press, and a large brewery. [Laughter.] Now, I can readily account for the charms that this brewery has for the hardy mariners on Lake Michigan, but I can not on my own responsibility and conscience as a Representative consent to vote for a continuance of this monopoly to this one man.

Now, M , to show that I do not exaggerate the merits of this que____iet me read an extract from the report:

From the commencement-

Says the engineer-

much trouble has been experienced in carrying on the work at this harbor, owing to the fact that a private party claims to own the entire site of the harbor, from the piers to the highway bridge.

Why, Mr. Chairman, have we come to this in our river and harbor improvements that we are going around throughout the country looking for sites where we may possibly, by an expenditure of Government money, make a harbor or turn a river?

The engineer goes on:

This man was the owner of a landing pier, from which he derived a handsome revenue before the Government undertook the improvement of the harbor. He has built a warehouse just in the rear of the south pier, and has continued to make his own charges for all goods shipped by the steamer, which stops there three times a week. As Ahnapee has no railroad communication and as this man claims to own the land on both sides of the river, no one can reach the piers except as he may direct.

They have already available to continue the improvement a considerable sum, for there has been appropriated up to date for the enlargement of this purely artificial harbor, dominated and controlled by this one man, who stands there and, as I have said, levies actual tribute upon the whole commerce of the place, $155,000, and we are asked by this bill to appropriate still further the sum of $3,500.

The last appropriation bill for this purpose contained a very wise provision—that before any more money should be expended on this improvement the Government should obtain from the people of that vicinity a free right to the harbor. That has not been done up to this date, and says the engineer:

The efforts of the citizens for free wharfage have been unsuccessful, and consequently there have been no operations carried on at this harbor during the past fiscal year.

Now, what is the reason, so far as the engineer's report goes, for making a further appropriation? It is this: About a half a mile from the entrance to the lake there is a bridge, and the engineer says that if they give a still further sum of money he will dig up into the interior of the country and get beyond the property of this man who owns this site. In other words, Congress, after having expended $155,000 to dig a hole on the shores of Lake Michigan for an artificial harbor, is asked to expend further a sum of $20,000 to continue the excavation beyond the limits of the property of this man, and these limits are not specified in the report.

Gentlemen will find in this report, by reference to it, a map looking from the proposed improvements up the river, and will see there is a bridge, and the engineer asks you to give an appropriation of $20,000 to continue the work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SOWDEN was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. McADOO. Mr. McADOO. Now, the truth is this. We are asked to place implicit reliance upon the reports of the engineers, and they enjoy a vast amount of the confidence of the people. But is not that confidence doubly shaken when we find that the Government has embarked in the digging of an excavation for an artificial harbor upon ground which was the property of a private citizen? Why did Congress embark upon that appropriation in the first instance? I do not remember whether my distinguished friend from Louisiana was then chairman of the committee or not, but at any rate here was a case in which Congress deliberately embarked upon the digging of this hole on land which was held in title by another, upon the recommendation of the Engineer Corps

Now it must be true that if the engineers were mistaken in this case, and if this is a fair sample of their action, although I trust it is not, then we have no guaranty whatever that in the thousand and one appropriations we are making they were not misled in many other instances; and that being the case every man will see and willingly concede that we should not embark further in such a project as this until we know when we make an excavation like this on the shores of Lake Michigan for an artificial harbor, that the Government is doing it on land over which it can exercise control.

Now we have embarked upon this enterprise, and what is the argument of the engineers? That we have gone so far that unless we make further appropriations to protect the work, or unless we put our structure upon them, that the work so far done will be dangerous and obstructive to navigation. Mr. Chairman, it is a much better thing to stop the work now and make a small appropriation to take away the obstruction and break up this monopoly there existing than to continue the work under such conditions.

I would like to know from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the nearest point at which there is another harbor, because I want to be fair in the matter; and if another port is very distant it may have been more justifiable, as I find on examination that this place is very small according to this report.

Upon no other ground can there be any possible argument for such a wild-goose chase, such a rainbow chase, such a moonshine chase, to take white-goose classe, such a rainbow chase, such a moonsmine chase, to take the hard-earned money of the people to dig fish-ponds and make aquariums on these Great Lakes for the advantage of one single citizen.

Now, look at the statement in respect to the commerce of this place.

Very ingeniously they state as the number of steamers "six hundred and over." How do they make that up? I am afraid they make it up by the weekly trips of one steamer. Do they count canoes, rowboats, sail-boats, and dug-outs, or do they make it up by simply counting every trip that a steamer makes? Do they count it as one steamer when it enters the port and another when it goes out? The tonnage is when it enters the port and another when it goes out? The comage is made up in the same way.

Gentlemen will notice on the map another thing which strikes me. It is one of these beautiful town sites which spring up when that enterprising country of the Northwest has a boom to make. Is it an unreasonable suspicion that the gentlemen who boomed this Eldorado on the shores of Lake Michigan and laid out this beautiful town of Ahnapee came to Congress to get water up to the town to further the real-estate boom at Ahnapee? [Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDD. I fear that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Mc-ADOO] is confounding some man in his imagination with the man who is charged with standing at Gibraltar and demanding toll of the commerce at that place, and from whom we derive the word "tariff." I can assure him that we have no such man in Wisconsin, and no such tax-gatherer at the harbor of Ahnapee; have no place on Lake Michigan where the Government is endeavoring to "scoop" a harbor "out gan where the Government is endeavoring to scoop a harbor out of sand and rocks." The town of Ahnapee lies at the mouth of the river Ahnapee, which in times past has been navigable, and which is bridged. The gentleman speaks of it appearing on the map as some 3 miles from the lake. That is like all the rest of the picture he has drawn. There may be a map of the place, but I have never seen it. His statement is entirely a matter of fancy and not of fact. This bridge is less than 30 rods from the lake shore itself. There is a valuable harbor at Ahnapee, and it is of great assistance to the commerce of our great unsalted sea, Lake Michigan. Not only one steamer, but many steamers weekly land there.

I have myself stood upon the shore at this thriving village and seen forty vessels heading for Ahnapee at one time. This is one of the great wheat depots for our State at one season of the year; and it is also a coal depot for other ports of Wisconsin and the West. There is no fancy about this. My friend can not conjure up a Duluth and make a Duluth speech in reference to Ahnapee. In years past money has been expended to create a harbor there, and now we only ask this, or at least the committee have only allowed $3,500. Why? Because in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress $15,000 was appropriated at the request of the engineers, but it was coupled with a provision that until the claim of somebody who claimed to be the land-owner and was levying a sort of tribute over those who were shipping goods there should be set aside, that appropriation was not to be used. Subsequently it was ascertained that this man had no legal claim and the bar or restriction was removed and the $15,000 became available. That was two years ago. Some part of that money is still unexpended, and that is the reason why a small appropriation is called for this year.

If we can have what is now put in this bill with that which is left over it would go far to make a valuable harbor at Ahnapee. I would be glad to see my friend from New Jersey [Mr. McADoo] there. He would find that they are not dug-outs which enter the port, but good, substantial steamers that accommodate and carry out the freight they have for shipment there and bring in freight for the West. I trust that there will be no attempt made to amend this provision, or to strike it out from the bill. It is a just, a fair provision, and one that ought to

Mr. CUTCHEON. How about its being a hole "scooped out" of private property?

Mr. HUDD. It is not private property. It is well known that the United States does not own land in any of the harbors which are being improved, or which are under construction, but that there are riparian owners all along them. At Ahnapee one gentleman owns a small tract of land on one side of this harbor. He has a warehouse there, which is on the lake shore, which is used as a freight depot and warehouse, and he has the right and privilege of charging rent for its

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. HUDD. Certainly.

Mr. McADOO. He says it is not owned by a private land-owner. It is not my fancy, but here is the language of the engineer:

From the commencement much trouble has been experienced in carrying on the work at this harbor owing to the fact that a private party claims to own the entire site of the harbor.

Mr. HUDD. If my friend had followed my remarks he would have heard me say that that was a misunderstanding. It was so understood by the engineers, but on subsequent investigation and on proofs which were laid before the Secretary of War and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors it was ascertained that this gentleman had no legal right to this land, and the claim is now abandoned.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman from Louisiana will call attention to the fact that the project of the engineer is to extend deep water beyond the private rights in the river, he will be able to point out that the landing will then be open and free to the public, and disposes of the entire point made by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was about to state that in addition to the reasons given by the gentleman from Wisconsin why the very small appropriation of $3,500 was placed in this bill for a continuation of work at the harbor of Ahnanee the statistics submitted to the con-work at the harbor of Ahnapee, the statistics submitted to the committee, and which are now before me, showing the commerce of the harbor, fully justify the recognition which the harbor has received in the present bill.

Mr. Chairman, there entered at this small harbor in the last fiscal year 280 steam-vessels and 330 sailing-vessels, making 610 vessels in all, that entered and cleared from the harbor in the time mentioned. The commerce of the harbor was: Exports, $538,000 in value, and imports, $275,000 in value; making more than $800,000 worth of commerce in one year, which showing of trade and of business I submit amply justifies the small appropriation embodied in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will ask the gentleman where he gets his figures?

Mr. BLANCHARD. They are statistics gathered and furnished to Congress by the Engineer Bureau of the United States under the author-ity of law. It is made the duty of the engineers in charge of these Government works not only to report concerning the progress of those works, but also to report to Congress the amount of business, commerce, or trade existing in the different localities; in other words, to report as to the necessity for appropriations for harbor or river improvement, as the case may be, at such points, and statistics thus gathered from com-mercial men and from boards of trade and other reliable sources are undoubtedly reliable and trustworthy. Does the gentleman from New York dispute the correctness of the statistics?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will answer the gentleman in my own good time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If he does, I hope he will furnish us the true statistics. These figures are furnished to Congress by the United States officials in charge, who are trustworthy and disinterested.

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. McADOO. The gentleman has stated that these statistics of the commerce of these ports have been collected by Government offi-cers. Now, if he will turn to page 1847 of this document he will find it stated that "the commercial statistics for the calendar year 1887 have been furnished by M. T. Parker, esq."

Mr. BLANCHARD. These statistics are furnished by the engineer officer in charge and he appends them to his report, and, in that connection, he states the source from which he obtains them,

Mr. McADOO. But he does not verify them. He simply states that one "M. T. Parker, esq.," came into his office and handed him a bundle of statistics; but how are those statistics to be verified?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the engineer in charge is not supposed to be at the given locality all through the year, and in collecting statistics he must necessarily get them from some reliable source. Is is not to be presumed, as the gentleman from New Jersey would seem to intimate, that the engineer obtains them from an unreliable source, and when these figures are furnished here upon the authority of the engineer officer they are entitled to as much credence as any figures that could be obtained in any other way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the project for improvement of this harbor was adopted by Congress in 1875. The project, therefore, has been inherited, so to speak, by this Congress, and by the Congresses immediately preceding. Before many of us had entered Congress the work was begun, and it is not good policy or wise economy to stop short in such a work before it is completed. We found that the work had been prosecuted to a certain point, and that the commerce of this port had increased until it amounted to $800,000 a year, and we thought it was wise and proper to make this small additional appropriation of $3,500 to continue the work. In connection with this I desire to read what the engineer says:

It is very desirable that work at this harbor should be resumed, and it is recommended that the proviso about free wharfage be omitted from future appropriations, as after the channel has been excavated above the present site of the bridge steamers can land above the limit of the land now claimed by the owner of the warehouse and his monopoly will then be ended.

So that if this work be now completed it will end the monopoly of which the gentleman from New Jersey complains, and will give the people who use this harbor free facilities for their trade and commerce.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, it seems that whenever it is necessary the Congressman residing in the district where the appropriation is made knows more about the appropriation than the Board of En-

A MEMBER. He ought to. Mr. CUMMINGS. And w A MEMBER. He ought to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And whenever it is necessary that he should know nothing about the appropriation he falls back upon the report of the Board of Engineers. We have had from the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Blanchard], the chairman of the committee, an exact statement of the commerce of the port of Ahnapee as given by the Board of Engineers. When the river and harbor bill vetoed by President Arthur was before the House we had similar reports from the Board of Engineers. I propose to give extracts from one of them. It is in reference to the immortal appropriation for the immortal Cheesequakes Creek of New Jersey. [Laughter.] Its commerce, as every man living near the creek and many a fisherman in the city of New York knows, is confined to row-boats, flat-boats, and other small craft. Yet the Board of Engineers, this exquisite Board of Engineers, which goes to the United States records for its figures, puts down the commerce of Cheese-quakes Creek at 152 sloops, 30 schooners, 146 barges, and 232 steam-vessels in one year. Such a statement is utterly preposterous. It is evident that the board in making it was suspicious of the accuracy of the figures, for they say-

The amount of commerce is estimated by one of the parties interested at $110,000 per annum.

And it is a pretty shrewd guess that the man who "estimated" it was the Congressman who is said to have been interested in the marlbed and the brick-yard on Cheesequakes Creek. Thus much for the accuracy of the figures of the Board of Engineers. Their reports, for years past, present similar inaccuracies.

The discovery of the gentleman from New Jersey has led me to again after my protest against this log-rolling scheme. To secure a molety enter my protest against this log-rolling scheme. of the money needed to facilitate the commerce of our great ports we are asked to wink at appropriations for puny streams, cut-offs, creeks, and channels. Indeed, the advocates of the bill condone the jobbery upon the ground that the benefits to be derived from it excuse it. I quote the remarks of my colleague, Mr. FITCH:

quote the remarks of my colleague, Mr. FITCH:

His second argument, I confess, has much more weight with me. I am sorry to see these small creeks, these inaccessible places, where only the lumberman or the trout-fisherman ever shows himself, coupled with the magnificent national improvements of which I am strongly in favor. But I must choose and he must choose—every one of us who has important national works going on in his district, improvements employing hundreds of men, and bringing incalculable good to the vicinity—we must choose between taking this bill as it is or not taking it at all, and I say for myself that I believe the expenditure of this money in improving the Harlem River alone will bring in more wealth to the commerce of this country than all the money that may be wasted in all the rest of this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Sir, this proposition of my colleague recalls the scheme of the Hon. Flavius Josephus. He paid from the public treasury to the robbers of Galilee such sums of money as he thought they might steal each year, and claimed that the arrangement was of great benefit After dismissing his two fellow-legates because they to the province. took bribes, and after he had become sole governor of Galilee, he entered upon his log-rolling administration on business principles. [Laughter.] He details them thus:

When I had sent for the most hardy among the robbers, I saw that it was not in my power to take their arms from them; but I persuaded the multitude to allow them money as pay, and told them it was better for them to give them a little willingly rather than to be forced to overlook them when they plundered their goods from them. And when I had obliged them to take an oath not to come into that country unless they were invited to come, or else when they had not their pay given them, I dismissed them and charged them neither to make an expedition against the Romans, nor against those their neighbors that lay round about them, for my first care was to keep Galilee in peace. So I was willing to have the principal of the Galileans, in all seventy, as hostages for their fidelity, but still under the notion of friendship. Accordingly, I made them my friends and companions as I journeyed, and set them to judge causes, and with their approbation it was that I gave my sentences, while I endeavored not to mistake what justice required and to keep my hands clear of all bribery in those determinations.

Like Congressmen and others interested in this bill, I presume. with my colleague [Mr. FITCH]. He admits that this bill may be the source of undefined jobbery; but he is honest, and out of it will get a little for the benefit of the country. By bribing the robbers he would keep peace in Galilee. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, are the gentlemen here so sodden in selfishness as not to see that an increase of the appropriations for our great commercial ports, where they are really needed, will prove of more real advantage to their sections of the country than to reduce them in the interest of scores of infinitesimal streams and alleged harbors? Must Savannah, the queen commercial city of the South on the Atlantic coast, forever bow the knee to the Feather River? Must the appropriation for the harbor of proud Galveston always be held subservient to appropriations for Gordon's Landing? Must the welfare of the great harbor of New York be for time immemorial dependent upon appropriations for Petaluma Creek? Let the money be put where it is really needed, and next let it be honestly expended. Then the country will draw a long breath, open wide its eyes, throw up both hands in astonishment, and with one acclaim exclaim, "Thank God! we have at last a sensible Congress." [Applause.]

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, not a single dollar was expended upon this work. On July 1, 1888, there was a balance on hand for the continuation of this improvement of $15,274.62. The amount appropriated by the act of August 11, 1888, was $5,000, making the sum available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, $20,274.62. The engineer in charge of this work says that it required for its completion $15,000, and that the amount which could be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, is $10,000.

Why not expend this balance of $20,274.62 before coming to Congress and asking for an additional appropriation? Why was this work not prosecuted during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, when there was over $15,000 on hand to be expended upon it? Why ask now for $3,500 when there is over $20,000 on hand for expenditure upon this project?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with amazement to some of the speeches which have been made on this bill here to-day. I grant, sir, that New York is worthy of the highest consideration at the hands of Congress; I am ready now, and shall be at all times, to vote liberally to comply with the just demands of that great city.

But, sir, I wish it understood, I wish it understood most emphatically, that New York does not comprise the entire great United States of America. [Laughter.] There are other sections to which New York is not tributary, but upon which New York is entirely and absolutely dependent.

The assault which is made here upon the Great Lakes and through the Great Lakes upon the great West, the hostility which has been shown to these appropriations is born of ignorance of the situation or of intense selfishness which will not admit the just claims of that great section. The Great Lakes, sir, are the avenues of the prosperity of New York.

I would ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sowden] what would become of his district, what would become of his great manufactories, if you attempt to stop up the waters of commerce which pour through the Great Lakes? Even his own beloved home for which he has fought so manfully here, and for which I hope in the end he will fight successfully, even Allentown would become a desert and grass would grow in its streets. [Applause.] The truth is this: There may be here and there, and I am not going to say anything concerning this appropriation for Ahnapee, there may be here and there—there necessarily must be in a bill comprising so many subjects of appropriation—items which are unworthy. I do not know what name the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings] used, whether it was Cheesequakes Creek or not, but I know no instance of appropriations for the Great Lakes, from beginning to end, for which the appropriation is not for a worthy and necessary object.

I have no local appropriation in the bill. I am not here to support any merely local measure. I am here in defense of the entire system. I am for the great water way stretching a thousand miles from Buffalo to Duluth and a thousand miles from Buffalo to Chicago, through which both that and a mousaint innestroin build to chicago, through which pours the commerce of a continent. I am here to support the general improvement of that great water way, to the attainment, if possible, of a mean depth from one end to the other of 21 feet, and as incidental to that I am here to support the improvement of all the harbors, the harbors of refuge, the harbors of commerce, to support any and every measure necessary to make commerce across the continent safe, and to make it profitable to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the assault made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] on the general scheme for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which necessarily involves and implies an assault upon the Engineer Corps of the Army, is not new in this country. He does not enunciate for the first time the doctrine that the people of the country should pay tribute to the port of New York and receive nothing in return. I suppose the gentleman will join with his people in New York in insisting that the people along the Columbia River and over on the Pacific shore shall be taxed to provide for the dumping of the sewerage of New York ontside of the vide for the dumping of the sewerage of New York outside of the 3-mile limit. [Laughter.]

I wish to commend to the gentleman who seems to have gone into the examination of the bill, and who talks so eloquently about "creeks," the creek called Newtown Creek in New York; and I wish him to make a report of the number of sugar refineries at one end and the outlet into the East River at the other. And I wish him to give the reason for the demand for $4,000,000 for cutting a channel between Harlem River and the East River for the purpose of extending the navigation and extending the transportation of the freight of the canal system of New York down into the bay of New York, a work peculiarly local to New York

Mr. Chairman, this is a country too large to be narrowed down to the outlet to the ocean at New York City.

A MEMBER. You mean the New York Sun. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Without the improvement of rivers and hardeness bors the people of this country would not for one moment continue the improvement of the harbor and bay of New York. The one system is the complement of the other.

The Congress of the United States, since I have had observation of it, has been peculiarly and lavishly generous to the harbor of New York, considering the enormous appropriations which had before that time been made for this New York Bay; but the time has come, and I say it in all friendliness to my friends over there who represent New say it in all friendliness to my friends over there who represent few York City, that the great lakes, the great harbors, the great channels of intercommunication, the great checks on railroad extortion, the great arteries of the commerce of this country are to be the especial objects of the interest of the people of this country.

And wherever a channel leads into a great lake there is an appropriate subject of improvement if commerce is there; and I might as priate subject of improvement if commerce is there; and I might as well say in this connection to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. Mc-Adoo] that it is not always that a Congressman calls attention to the commercial importance of the point at the time when he asks for an appropriation. I have listened to the very eloquent arguments by members in this House in the direction of appropriations for dredging canals at points along our shores where there was practically no commerce at the time, but the argument was based on the future prospects. They were looking forward to the day when the particular point would ultimately be benefited and draw such commerce to it. This is wise and judicious. In this way the great system is being builded up and fitted together.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the great West, and I have a great deal of respect for the Great Lakes; and I may also say that I have great respect for my friend from Michigan who has but recently spoken; but I would like to call the attention of this committee again back to the case now before us. I do not wish to indulge in any general remarks for the purpose of meeting the many things that have been said on both sides in this discussion, but simply desire to ask the House now to honestly consider the facts of this individual then and give its conclusions upon them in the light of the facts. If that is done, then I believe the House will agree to strike out the whole of this item, which I think is a very improper one, and if it be stricken out it will have a great moral effect upon river and harbor bills in future by showing a disposition to eliminate from them, as far as practicable, improper and unwarranted expenditures.

But, Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I was disappointed that the distinguished and practical chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should have advocated and defended this item. Let us consider briefly what that defense is. The gentleman from Wisconsin says it is not a fact that all of the land upon which this harbor is situated is owned by a private individual. He says that the citizens there can get free access to the waters of the harbor and to the improvements that the Government is making. Mr. Chairman, if that be true, if the gentleman is not mistaken in his statement, then why did not the engineers expend the $20,000 which you appropriated in the last bill? It is not my fancy with which I am now dealing, but simply the facts as they are stated by the engineer himself. He did not expend the money because, he says, the land was claimed and is owned by a private individual; that after two years of agitation and effort the citizens there have been utterly unable to get free access by any means to the will avoid it by deepening the channel of this river that flows into this harbor. Suppose we give the money? What guaranty have we when we get up through this harbor to the bridge that we will not find another man claiming territory on both sides of the river, and the citizens of Wisconsin will find in the end that notwithstanding the appropriation they have only changed masters? Let us then thoroughly understand what we are doing before we take the money of the people and improve this harbor and the adjacent river, and be sure that the citizens of Wisconsin can find free access over the public property to the river or harbor bank.

The gentleman from Louisiana says that this harbor has a very important commerce. He tells my friend from New York that these are facts from official sources; but I have called his attention to the fact that the commercial statistics of this harbor, as stated in the report, are not from official sources except indirectly, because they are furnished by a Mr. M. T. Parker, a gentleman who does not, so far as I am aware, bear any relation to the Congress or to this Government, and is presumably a private citizen of the State and interested locally in getting all the money he can for his section.

My friend from Wisconsin says it is a flight of fancy on my part, and that it is the high tide of exaggeration by me when I talk of cances and dug-outs, and would lead us to suppose that the United States would place the whole fleets of merchant marine that he saw on the salt seas with their prows turned for Ahnapee.

If he will read the report of the engineers he will find it stated there, and it is not my statement, remember, that the one weekly steamer is a vessel upon which this tribute is laid, showing that the one weekly steamer represents the whole commerce of the place.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HUDD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee and hope we shall proceed at once with the bill. I understand that there is no motion pending, but notwithstanding that they have taken my poor little harbor of Ahnapee to make speeches against the general policy of river and harbor bills and against other against the general policy of river and harbor bills and against other items which have no relevancy to the pending question. But to the gentleman last on the floor, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania who made the same inquiry as to the amount of money which it was said was unexpended and available for this project, I desire to say but a single word. I have endeavored to explain before that it was owing to an idea on the part of the engineers, an overcaution on behalf of the interest of the people, that the money had not been expended, on the ground that the man who had erected a warehouse, which he on the ground that the man who had erected a warehouse, which he had a right to erect on his own land, had by consent of the people themselves been using that point as a shipping point. But if the peo-ple saw fit to land their goods at this warehouse and pay a certain sum for the privilege, I do not see that that has anything to do with the general question of improving the harbor or that it was any interference with the free use of the harbor.

After making that report the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in the early part of the Forty-ninth or in the Forty-eighth Congress, put a proviso upon the bill that the money which was appropriated for the continuation of the improvement of this harbor should not be used until this embargo or tribute was removed; and it was removed to the satisfaction of the committee and the Government. Then there was an unexpended balance. That balance of nearly $20,000 has already been used or contracts have been entered into covering it. The work has been commenced and the entire amount will be expended. We only ask $3,500, or that is all that is given to us in this bill.

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUDD. Certainly.
Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman explain to me and to this House how it is that the engineer in the report says this?

The efforts of the citizens for free wharfage have been unsuccessful, and consequently there have been no operations carried on in this harbor during the last fiscal year.

Now, will the gentleman, in case my amendment be not accepted, vote to put the same restriction on this appropriation in the present bill, that not a dollar of the appropriation shall be expended in this way unless we shall have free access for the people to this wharf?

Mr. HUDD. I certainly should not; because that would be unfair to this man. The harbor has gone beyond this man's property, and is now beyond his wharf to where others are making other warehouses.

I do not understand that in any harbor the rights of the riparian owner are surrendered to the Government. The Government does not gain the right of warehouseman. That belongs to the riparian owner. There seems at the outset to have been some misunderstanding. It now appears clearly to the War Department and to the Committee on now appears clearly to the War Department and to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that this hindrance will no longer exist.

Mr. SPINOLA. It is with great reluctance, sir, I find I am compelled to say a word in defense of the city of New York, which has been so voluntarily and, in my judgment, unwarrantedly assaulted on the floor of this House this afternoon by my friend from Michigan and my distinguished friend from Ohio. One would suppose from listening to their remarks that the State of New York was depending upon the Congress of the United States for her existence. But it is almost directly the reverse of that fact. We exist from our own resources. We take care of all the people of the country when they come to New York. We protect gentlemen who visit that city not thoroughly up in all the ways of the world, and see that no harm befalls them.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Mr. SPINOLA.

Mr. SPINOLA. Certainly.
Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. What is your population?
Mr. SPINOLA. Of New York City? About 1,600,000 to-day.
Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Have you not had a book published there within a few months saying there were only 40,000 there?

Mr. SPINOLA. That came from the Republican side—the aristocracy—for which the great mass of the population is not responsible. [Great laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Is it true? Mr. SPINOLA. You must go to the Republican authority to find that out. I do not mingle with that class of people much in New York, for I have discovered they are dangerous at times, and therefore shun them. [Laughter.]

Now, so far as "Ahna Pee" is concerned, I wish to say I am for Now, so far as "Ahna Pee" is concerned, I wish to say I am for "Annie Pee," and, notwithstanding what my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania has said (and I have just as much love and respect for him as any one in this body) and my eloquent friend from New Jersey [Mr. McAdoo], I am still going to support "Ahna" in this bill, and you may leave the "Pee" off if you want to.

Now, sir, if the committee had done what I think they should have done, and taken the report of the engineers and adopted their recommendation for the city of New York; if for that great harbor, the benmendation for the city of New York; if for that great harbor, the benefit of which is felt all over the country, not by the citizens of New York or the residents of that great city only, but whose pulsation is felt throughout the length and breadth of the American continent, a proper appropriation had been made, a good work would have been done. We ask you to continue to aid us in such a way as to strengthen done. that pulsation.

The Board of Engineers recommended for the improvement of Harlem River and East River $500,000, and they could use that amount with great economy during the coming year. It is one of the greatest improvements now being considered by the American people. That should have been embodied in the report and provision made up to the full amount recommended by the Board of Engineers. There should be $500,000 for the clearing of East River and Hell Gate. Give us what we want to have in New York and I will vote for all the creeks in the country. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SOWDEN. That is the source of our complaint against this character of legislation.

Mr. SPINOLA. If you would do justice to that great port I would vote to put jetties along the entire length of the Mississippi River and reclaim millions upon millions of acres of valuable land, from which sugar enough could be produced to supply the people of the whole

Suppose we spent $100,000,000 on the banks of that river. In our present great financial strength we would not miss what would be spent. Suppose it took $5,000,000 a year for twenty years, and at the end of that time we had a vast territory reclaimed that would be able to furnish sugar to the whole world, the question of duty on sugar would be solved forever. And so it would be with all other great improvements. We never make large enough appropriations in the first instance. They should be large enough to complete the work and the money should be spent under the careful supervision of proper authorities. New York asks no special favors at the hands of Congress or anybody else. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. SPINOLA. I trust the Ahnapee will not be stricken out, but will be provided for.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. McADOO. I hope the gentleman will accept my amendment. The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 20, after the word "dollars," insert: "Provided, That no part of this money shall be available until a free passage is secured to the Government pier."

Mr. HUDD. I would say to the gentleman that that amendment would be entirely useless, as they now pass away out beyond the pier. I trust the bill will not be encumbered with unnecessary amendments. Mr. McADOO. Then I will strike out "the Government pier" and insert "the harbor," and then I trust the amendment will receive the gentleman's support.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I will call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McAddo] to the language used with reference to this harbor in the bill of last session. I do this for the purpose of showing him that if his amendment be now adopted it will undo what was done by the river and harbor bill of last session. In that bill an appropriation was made for this harbor, which read as fol-

Improving harbor, Ahnapee, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $5,000. And so much of the act of August 5, 1886, for the improvement of rivers and harbors as relates to the harbor of Ahnapee is hereby amended by striking out the words "and no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the wharfage over the Government pier shall be made free."

It seems that in the bill of 1886 the proposition which the gentleman from New Jersey desires to incorporate in this bill was adopted, but it was found not to operate advantageously.

Mr. McADOO. Why? What was the reason it did not work?

Mr. BLANCHARD. For the reasons stated in the report of the engineer for the last fiscal year it was found not to operate, and on the recommendation of the engineer in charge of this improvement Congress repealed in the bill of last session that restricting clause

In the engineer's report, upon which the present bill is based, the same recommendation is made, and hence the omission in the bill of the restricting clause which the gentleman from New Jersey now asks to have incorporated in the bill.

Mr. GRÔSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the operation of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McAdoo] would be exactly opposite to that which I am sure he intends. Here stands a riparian proprietor demanding toll or wharfage as a condition of the landing of commerce upon the bank. So long as this condition remains in the appropriation bill just so long he will have the power to hold that monopoly; but when you authorize the improvement of the river above him, then you get rid of the monopoly. That is all there is of the matter. there is of the matter.

Mr. McADOO. I should like to have a vote upon the merits of the amendment. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Blanchard] states that this provision was incorporated in the act of 1886, but that the engineer found he could not expend the money although it was appropriated because this man ownedall the land around the harbor, so that if he went on with the work this man alone would be benefited, and that thereupon the engineer asked Congress in his report to take away the restriction. Now the engineer says, "Give me more money and I will dig, not in the harbor but away up the river beyond the bridge, and I will keep on digging until I come to some neighborly man who will let the Government go across his land to get to its own property."
Mr. HUDD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the $20,000 has already taken off the embargo, because it has operated to carry the improvement beyond this monopoly. The improvement is now beyond the bridge.

Mr. McADOO. My amendment provides for that. It differs from the old restriction. It takes in the whole harbor, and the money can be expended provided the citizens can get access to any part of the harbor. I do sincerely trust, in the interest of honest legislation, that the House will adopt this amendment. And I further trust that gen-tlemen who are in favor of this river and harbor bill—and I am so myself, because I believe that in the main these improvements are necessary—I trust that they will give a fair and impartial hearing to other gentlemen who criticise in good faith its policy, its measures, and its items, and seek to amend it. I hope that we shall now have a vote in good faith on this amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. McADoo; and there were—ayes 28, noes 83.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Mr. McADOO. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will withdraw the point of "no quorum." I have offered my amendment, and the House has voted it down.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the point. So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Superior Bay and St. Louis Bay, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $35,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to strike out the paragraph just read in relation to improving the harbor at Superior Bay and St. Louis Bay, Wisconsin. On July 1, 1888, there was a balance of $10,270.33 on hand for expenditure on this work; and under the act of August 11, 1888, an appropriation of $50,000 was made for its continuance; so that there is now an available balance on hand of $60,270.33. It does seem to me, therefore, that this sum ought to be a sufficient amount to carry on this work for the next year.

Mr. Chairman, this bill contains three hundred and thirty-seven items of appropriation, including many of the small and unimportant rivers, harbors, creeks, and bayous of the country; and evidently a large number of these unnecessary and wasteful appropriations are included in this measure for no other purpose than to secure the necessary appropriations for the improvement of the more important rivers and harbors of the country. This reflects no credit upon this House. No one objects to appropriations of a reasonably large amount for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of War, or some other responsible officer of the Government, for the improvement of the more important rivers and harbors of the country in the interest of commerce.

But, as the President said in his last annual message, it would seem that Congress is incapable of providing for the improvement of the great harbors and water ways of the country in the interest of the commerce of the nation without adding to these appropriations large sums of Mourland—to the Committee on War Claims.

Stelly—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12370) for the relief of the heirs, etc., of Francois Mourland—to the Committee on War Claims.

money to be wasted upon the most unimportant rivers, harbors, and creeks in the various Congressional districts of the country, and through the expenditure of which not a particle of benefit results to commerce, nor is the public good, in the least degree, subserved thereby.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. Sow-DEN, there were—ayes 6, noes 79.
Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Sowden and Mr. Blanchard were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—aye 1, noes

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee rise.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A quorum having failed to vote, do not the rules require that the roll should be called?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be the course taken had not the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Blanchald] that the committee rise intervened. This motion, being equivalent in committee to the motion for an adjournment in the House, takes precedence, it being at all times the right of the Committee of the Whole to rise.

The motion of Mr. BLANCHARD was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McMillin reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11765) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on the construction, repair, and for other nurroses, and had come to no resolurivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House adjourn.
Mr. DAVIS. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent to reort a bill-

Mr. BLAND. Regular order. Mr. BLANCHARD. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Iassachusetts

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw the demand for the regular order?

Mr. BLAND. No, sir; I think we had better adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the question must be taken on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was read: Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to report to the Senate the salaries due postmasters, computed upon applications presented to the Postmaster-General under chapter 119 of the laws of 1893, upon the basis of chapter 61 of the laws of 1864, agreeably to the requirement of section 8 of chapter 114 of the laws of 1865, and chapter 119 of the laws of 1883, as the requirement of said laws is laid down and published by authority of the Postmaster-General in "Exhibit A" of Senate Executive Document, No. 146, Forty-minth Congress, first session; and in Post-Office Department circular, form 1223; such report to exhibit in each case the amount of computed salary for each biennial term of service, and for each fractional biennial term of service, less the amount of paid salary for the same term of service in all cases in which it appears that postmasters of the three classes within the acts, received as laries 10 per cent. or more less than they would have received in commissions under the act of 1854, had not the acts subsequent to 1854 been enacted, and to be made from time to time as report of such claims already computed can be prepared and tabulated in each State. And that the Postmaster-General be directed to make a like report to the Senate, as early as practicable, of all such claims presented to the Postmaster-General prior to January 1, 1887, which have not yet been computed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. That would involve an incalculable amount of labor in the Post-Office Department. It seems to me that the information called for by the resolution has already been covered by a resolution previously introduced and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was reported adversely by the committee, and is on the Calendar. I must, therefore, move that the resolu-tion be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the resolution is in the usual form.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is all I wanted to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

agreeing to the same.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ROBERTSON.

I ask that the resolutions may lie upon the table, and I give notice that I shall call them up on Friday, the 15th of February next, at 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Louisiana.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLODGETT. Mr. President, I ask permission to make a personal explanation

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. BLODGETT. I notice in the RECORD this morning that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is reported as have ing made an explanation of his position upon the Senate substitute for the tariff bill, in which he stated that he would not have voted for that bill. As I was paired with that Senator, and acting entirely in good faith, it is due to the Senate that they should understand all the circumstances of the case.

cumstances of the case.

The junior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] asked me to pair with the Senator from Virginia, which I did, and I announced when my name was called that I was so paired. I understood—in fact, I had a right to suppose and believe—that the Senator from Virginia was in favor of the passage of the Senate bill until after I had made the announcement. I then found the Senator from Virginia and told him that I had announced my pair with him; and at his request I allowed the pair to stand. That is all the explanation I desire to make.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, there is no difference between any statement that I could make and that which the Senator

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. Fresident, there is no difference between any statement that I could make and that which the Senator himself has made. I suppose that I could correct him in one matter, and that is that he and I both thought that the vote which was then being taken was a vote on an amendment and not on the Senate subbeing taken was a vote on an amendment and not on the Senate substitute. I think the Senator will agree that the misapprehension was mutual. He came into what we call the cloak-room here, and he said, "Well, let this pair stand." I think the Senator fron New Jersey will agree that we both misunderstood it at the time, because the hour of 8 o'clock had not arrived. Neither, I think, would attack the integrity of the other on the question of a pair between Senators here. That being understood everything was understood.

Mr. BLODGETT. I will only say that I had no information that the Senator from Virginia was opposed to the passage of the bill. I paired with him in absolute good faith, believing him to be in favor of the passage of the bill, and I want that fact distinctly understood by the Senate.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 593) for the relief of James Al-

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to antagonize the Senator's bill, a local bill, but I wish to call up the bill to declare unlawful certain trusts; and I should like to have it passed as soon as possible.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not think there can be any objection to this bill. It will only take the time to read it and pass it. It is a local matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall try to get up the trust bill after that is disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps it is proper that I should say to the Senator from Ohio now that I have given some careful study to his bill with reference entirely to making it more certain and accurate in its defini-There are one or two amendments which have been suggested to me by a very high quarter indeed (I will not call the name of the person publicly), which I should like to submit to him. I think if he would let the bill go over one day it would be more convenient.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes no difference as to the consideration of the bill to-day. The Committee on Finance have one or two amendments already agreed upon to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 3, after the word "way," to insert "and grounds adjacent thereto, as provided in section 2;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and grounds adjacent thereto, as provided in section 2, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; and also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 18, before the word "regard," to insert "due;" so as to read:

But no right of way shall yest in said railroad company in or to any of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the con-Mr. SHERMAN. sideration of what is known as the trust bill, stating that at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I will not ask for a final vote until to-morrow, as he desires to offer one or two amendments; but I should like to have it read now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view, or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that competes with any similar article upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which shall be transported from one State or Territory to another, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend to advance the cost to the consumer of any of such articles, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

SEC. 2. That any person or corporation injured or damnified by such arrange ment, contract, agreement, trust, or combination may sue for and recover, in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, of any person or corporation a party to a combination described in the first section of this act, the full consideration or sum paid by him for any goods, wares, and merchandise included in or advanced in price by said combination.

SEC. 3. That all persons entering into any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination described in section 1 of this act, either on his own account or as agent or attorney for another, or as an officer, agent, or stockholder of any corporation, or as a trustee, committee, or in any capacity whatever, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any district or circuit court of the United States shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not more than five years, or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States of the district in which such persons reside to institute the proper proceedings to enforce the provisions of this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out in lines of and recover.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out, in lines 9 and 10 of section 1, the words "competes with any similar article upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which," and to insert in lieu thereof, after the word "that," in line 9, the words "in due course of trade;" so as to read:

Or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another, etc.

I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment to the amendment reported by the Finance Committee, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 9 and 10 of the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "competes with any similar articles upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in due course of trade;" so as to read:

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another.

Mr. SHERMAN. I promised the Senator from Massachusetts to let the bill lie over until to-morrow, as he has some amendments that he desires to propose. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the bill. I do not wish to say a word about it, but to-morrow I will call it up for final action.

Mr. HARRIS. Who desires that the bill go over until to-morrow? Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] desires to offer two or three amendments, and I give notice that to-morrow, when he has prepared them, I shall call up the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I will repeat, for the information of the Senator from Tennessee, that some week or two ago I gave some careful examination to this bill, desiring to make it a little more stringent in one or two particulars, and I consulted a gentleman of very high character and great legal ability, whose name I will state to the Senator from Tennessee in private. It is not necessary to state it publicly. He suggested two or three amendments which I should like to submit to the Senators having the bill in charge, which I think they will find will help to carry out their object, but by an accident I have them not with me this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course there can be no objection to having the bill go over for that purpose; and the more stringent you make it the better it will suit me.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether he had made any amendment to the bill reported by his com-

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is a substitute for the original bill, and contains three sections, one of which I believe was mainly taken from a bill introduced by the Senator—the punitive clause.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill reported from the committee. I was out and did not know whether the Senator made any suggestion to further amend the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submitted one amendment from the Committee on Finance; and the bill will come up for further amendment to-mor-

Mr. PLATT. Has the bill been read as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the committee, reported as a substitute, has been read and an amendment offered to it and agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have an order that the bill as now amended shall be printed in the RECORD, so that we may all see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee has not been agreed to. The Senate has not acted on that. The committee reported an amendment which was practically a substitute, and the Senator from Ohio offered an amendment to that amendment, which was agreed to. Now the question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. What the Senator desires will be done anyway, because the Secretary has read the bill, and the bill as it now stands will be printed in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. That is all I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed until tomorrow, if there be no objection.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, formerly Louisiana State Bank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not object to the Senator's calling this bill up out of order, but I beg leave to give notice now that the next bill on the Calendar I shall ask a hearing for, a bill that I have several times tried to get up out of order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall help the Senator all I can. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. That bill has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 3715 has been already read, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to insert an amendment, which I send to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 15, after the word "court," it is proposed to insert the following words:

So far as the same may be legally competent and proper under said rules and practice,

So as to read:

That the testimony and original papers filed by said bank before the Treasury Department of the United States in connection with said claim be, and the same shall be, received by said court, so far as the same may be legally competent and proper under said rules and practice, as evidence as if taken or filed under the rules of said court.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that I am not in favor of the passage of this bill. I know that it has passed the Senate two or three times, and very possibly it may pass again. But I desire in some way to re-cord my opposition to the bill. I will not call for the yeas and nays on its passage, unless other Senators feel that they desire to vote against the bill, because what I am now saying will declare my position upon it.

Without going into the facts particularly, it is a claim made by the State Bank of Louisiana, arising when it was the agent of the Confederate government, as I understand, for the purchase of cotton. barred by the statute of limitations. A suggestion is made on behalf of the bank, as I understand, that since the bar of the statute of limitations has run against the claim there has been a decision of the Supreme Court on the law, and that if it had known that the law was as it is now declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, it could and would have brought its case before the Court of Claims within the time required by the statute of limitations

I may not be exact about it, but I think that is the general claim upon which the bank asks that it may go into the Court of Claims. am opposed to removing the bar of the statute of limitations in such cases. There are a great number of these cotton cases, to say nothing about the fund of some $10,000,000 which is now in the Treasury of the United States, derived from the proceeds of captured and abandoned cotton, upon which we shall be asked to remove the bar of the statute of limitations—and I do not think it ought to be done—to take that fund which is in the Treasury of the United States, amounting to about $10,000,000, the proceeds of captured and abandoned cotton, for which no claim has ever been made by the parties to whom the cotton originally belonged, and who could not within the time before the statute of limitations ran make any claim according to their under-statute of limitations ran make any claim according to their understanding of the law, because a requirement for making that claim was, as it was supposed, certainly upon the face of the statute, that they should be able to prove their loyalty.

Since the time in which they could bring those cases has elapsed, as in this instance, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has held that pardon and amnesty estopped the Government from setting up in such cases that the party was disloyal; and if we remove the bar of the statute of limitations in this case, it seems to me that no reason can be urged, when parties who were disloyal come forward to make claim for this $10,000,000 which is in the Treasury, against removing the her of the statute of limitations. It appears to me that if moving the bar of the statute of limitations. It appears to me that if we follow precedent we shall be bound to remove the bar of the statute in those cases, that being the only thing which stands now between the Treasury and the recovery of the fund of $10,000,000 in it as the proceeds of captured and abandoned property.

This case, therefore, is of so much importance as a precedent that I

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I concur with my honorable friend from Connecticut in the opinion he has just expressed, as I do on almost every opinion he expresses in this world, so far as it is a matter of principle. ciple. I know no person more unlikely to be mistaken in a matter of principle. But it does seem to me that this is a case to which the general principle he has announced does not apply.

In the first place, this is not a claim against the Government in the sense of a claim to any property treated or recognized by the Government as its own. It is not a claim against the Government for any wrongdoing or injury inflicted by itself or its agents. It is not a claim for any indebtedness on its part in the ordinary sense. It is a claim to what it took into the Treasury as a trust fund to be held solely for the owners and has always been treated as such. It found certain property, a good deal of it property of Union men, which it collected, gathered, and sold, placing the proceeds in its Treasury to be recovered by the owners when they should establish their right to it; and it never recognized this as captured and abandoned property which had been forfeited or as property which was to be treated as booty.

The present case is the case of a party who presented his claim to the Quartermaster's Department of the United States, there being a provision that application should be made within a certain time, which has, of course, some general analogy to the ordinary statute of limitation; but it is not the case of a usual statute of limitation. It is the case rather of an executive officer having a particular power to deal with this for a limited time and before he had made the final determination upon the subject the right of prosecuting the remedy expired, the right of going into the Court of Claims expired. That being the case and the Supreme Court of the United States having clearly established the title of this party to this property, it does seem to me that it would be a very strange thing for the United States, the trustee, to say that the cestui que trust did not come in soon enough and therefore the trustee will pocket this trust fund himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this claim of the State Bank of Louisiana is not a new one for consideration in Congress. It has been here a good while as I believe, and is one of the cotton claims, the cotton having been seized under the captured and abandoned property act of March, 1863. That act did not confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury any authority to decide to whom the money, the proceeds of the cotton, should be paid, but in Mr. Johnson's administration the then Secretary

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to correct him in a fact in the statement made by him? I am sure he would like to be correct. This was not seized in 1863, but after the war ended, in 1865.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator would patiently listen to me a little while he would see what I mean. I have not, I think, made any wrong statement of fact, and the Senator does me the justice to say he does not suppose I would intend to do so.

I think I may safely repeat that this cotton was seized under the captured and abandoned property act. It was the only act of Congress that I know of which would have justified any officer of the United States, civil or military Mr. HOAR. The Senator said that it was seized in 1863.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather suspect that the Reporter's notes will show that I said it was seized under the act of 1863. I was not ignorant of the fact-for this matter I am confident was once before the Committee on the Judiciary—that it was seized in 1865, as the Committee on Claims think after hostilities had terminated. I do not think it was seized after hostilities had terminated in the sense that the Supreme Court has decided when the war ended.

It became important some time ago, in causes arising between parties, for the Supreme Court to determine, as it was their mission to do in a case between parties, when the war between the United States and the so-called Confederated States of America—or whatever may have been the title of that establishment-ended; and my present impression is, without referring to the decisions to fix it, that the court held that the war terminated later than June, 1865, if that was the date of the seizure. My impression is that it was sometime in August, but, as I say, I am not now speaking by the book, and it is a long time since I have seen the decision.

My friend from Massachusetts corrects me again, and very properly, that the Supreme Court held that the war in the sense of the rights of parties terminated in 1866 and perhaps in some sections of the country earlier than others. I thank my friend for the candor (although he is in favor of this measure) of stating that fact. Now let us see what the act of 1863 was and whom it was intended to benefit. Here it is. The first section provided-

That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury from and after the passage of this act, as he shall from time to time see fit, to appoint a special agent or agents to receive and collect all abandoned or captured property in any State or Territory, or any portion of any State or Territory of the United States designated as in insurrection against the lawful Government of the United States by the proclamation of the President of July 1, 1862.

And so on. It then provided that that property might-

Be appropriated to the public use on due appraisement and certificate thereof, r forwarded to any place of sale within the loyal States as the public interest

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding under Rule VIII. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I ask unanimous consent to go on, for I do not wish to interrupt the will of the Senate if they choose to pass this bill; but it can not be justly debated in any five minutes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection at all to the time being extended.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand that we are proceeding under the five-minute rule. There was a motion made to proceed to the consideration of this bill. It did not come up on the Calendar regu-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was absent attending to other business of the Senate when the bill was brought before the Senate, but he subsequently understood that, the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] moved the consideration of this bill, and no objection was made to it. It was not taken up by vote. The Chair thinks that when the Calendar is in order under Rule VIII, unless a bill is taken up by vote, the five-minute rule applies. If there be no objection, the Senator from Vermont will

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was proceeding to say that the act provided that the property which was not appropriated for public use by the Army, etc., at the time might be sent for sale in any of the loyal States, and that the proceeds should be paid into the Treasury of the United States. I will stop there on that section and tell you what took place. The very large sums of money, probably more than twenty millions at times, accumulated at the end of the war, in 1865 or 1866. Although the statute said that the proceeds should be paid into the Treasury of the United States, it was found on inquiry that in the technical sense, on the books of the Treasury, the money had not been paid into the Treasury at all, and that although it was in the Treasury building or in the subtreasury in New York, or somewhere, it stood in such shape that on the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, without any appropriation by act of Congress (which alone can take money out of the Treasury of the United States), it could be paid to anybody that the Secretary chose to give it to. He, of course, acting under his just sense of responsibility, gave it to people whom he thought were the original owners of the cotton and ought to have the money back. That was called to the attention of Congress, and Congress passed a law, in which I had some part, directing peremptorily that every dollar of that money thus held outside of the technical Treasury of the United States should come into it, so that no further order of any Secretary of the Treasury could take a dollar out of it until Congress had passed on the question as to whom any part of it should go to.

The result was that the money which was left, ten or twelve, or per-haps fifteen million dollars, was turned into the Treasury in the proper and legal and constitutional sense. That ended that part of it; and there was no time, so far as I understand the law, with great respect to the committee, when lawfully the Secretary of the Treasury had any authority to decide upon the question as to whether the alleged owner of the original cotton was loyal or disloyal, whether he was the owner or not, or to make any order concerning the return of the proceeds of the cotton to him. So the claim of this bank that it was delayed in filing its application in the Court of Claims because the matter had not been determined adversely to it by the Secretary of the Treasury is totally without foundation. It has, according to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief, nothing whatever to stand upon.

Then came the remedial part of the act, which provides that-Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion—

Which, as my friend from Massachusetts reminds me, the Supreme Court determined was long after 1865—prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that—

Now I beg Senators to notice-and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase-money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of said property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof.

The point of the law was first that cotton being really a contraband of war, and furnishing really, as we all know that it did, the whole sinews of war to the Confederacy, was declared by this act of Congress to be one of the things that should be seized wherever it could be found by capture, or if abandoned by retreating troops or the departure of the owners of plantations who had gone into the rebellion it was to be taken up; but Congress saw that it might happen, as it did often happen, that the owner of that cotton had stood by the flag and that he was rejected by the Confederacy as a traitor to it, and they that he was rejected by the Confederacy as a traitor to it, and they therefore through their officers would take his cotton without paying for it, as they had a perfect right to do so long as the state of war ex-Congress therefore declared that no man (and I take it the Supreme Court has decided that corporations are men within the protection of the Constitution as to depriving people of rights, etc.), no person, no corporation, I will say, although the word "corporation" is not used in the statute—no set of men, under whatever form of organization they may style themselves or associate themselves, should be entitled to any return of the proceeds of this cotton unless he or they had been on the side of the United States during the rebellion; and it stood upon just and broad principles of public policy and public

What was the next step in this drama of events about this money in the Treasury? The Supreme Court of the United States decided that a pardon by the President of the United States of a person who had levied war against it, and therefore according to the Constitution had been guilty of treason toward it, was equivalent to his having always been a loyal man in fact, and that it puthim in point of law under this statute in the same attitude as if he had been fighting on the side of his country instead of against it. That they said was the law; perhaps it was; and they said therefore that this clause in the statute which said that the claimant of the cotton must prove to the satisfaction of the court that he had never given aid or comfort to the rebellion was satisfied by his producing a paper signed by the President of the United States stating that he had forgiven him for that, and that therefore he was entitled to a standing in the Court of Claims just like a really loyal

It became, then, of some consequence, if the real will of Congress was to be carried out, to hold up this statute in its other respects which the Supreme Court could not get over if they wanted to, one of which was the statute of limitations that the rebel who applied thus having been made a loyal man by the President of the United States must apply within the time that the statute had provided. There was one safety left for the Union side and for the Treasury, although the Supreme Court had overthrown the other part of it. And accordingly all these cotton claims a few years ago went to the Committee on the Judiciary as relating to the instituting of judicial proceedings in court; and if I am not wrong in my recollection (as I think I am not) that committee, when it had among its members the late Senator from Ohio, Judge Thurman, and the former Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Garland, and two or three other Democratic Senators, probably not more than two, had several cases of exactly this character as it regards the statute of limitations, where the time had gone by to sue in the Court of Claims, and where the claimants appealed for relief to that committee (which, as I say, was then given the duty of considering and reporting to the Senate on these questions), and asked us to pass an act waiving the statute of limitations; but that committee, I believe unanimously, certainly with the assent and with the decided approval of the Democratic members I have mentioned-I am confident of that-determined that there was no justification in cases of this character in Congress removing the statute of limitations. So we declined to report bills to do that thing, and I think he reported some adversely, although it very often happens in that committee, as I suppose it does in others, that when all the committee are opposed to a particular relief being granted and they are oppressed with so many things, they just let it lie in the committee without making any report at all.

My present impression is that there will be found in the files of the Senate written reports upon some claims involving the question of the statute of limitations under this captured and abandoned property act, adversely, upon that very ground that it was due to the interests of the United States, due to the good order of its laws, due to the safety against false claims, in fact, the manufacture of evidence, after the seizing officers and the circumstances of seizure had been lost sight of, to bring up persons on plantations to swear that there was cotton and that it had been seized, and all that sort of thing; that every principle of justice and of policy required that the bar of the statute of limitations should not be removed unless the claimant could show a clear case of that fraud or accident or mistake which sometimes leads courts of equity to relieve against the bar of the statute of limitations in the jurisprudence of the various States.

That is what became of these claims upon this question in the Committee on the Judiciary when we were honored with the confidence of the Senate in considering them. Such cases latterly, for several years, have been withdrawn from the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary and sent to the Committee on Claims. It appears that in this instance the committee has reported in favor of removing this bar. Now, upon what ground of justice can it stand? This corbar. Now, upon what ground of justice can it stand? This corporation, although a person not existing otherwise than in contemplation of law in the technical sense, was still a corporation that was composed of citizens of the United States who managed that bank. The bank was situated in New Orleans. It was a Confederate bank in the sense of carrying on its operations under the Confederacy, and under its direction during four years of the war, and as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Platt] says, and as I believe is true, it was the fiscal agent of the Confederacy, and for aught I know—and I should be strongly inclined to believe it to be a fact, but I can not prove it at this moment—the very funds that the bank sent into the country to collect and buy this cotton were made up of the deposits which the collect and buy this cotton were made up of the deposits which the Confederate government had made in that bank; but that, as I say, I do not state upon any evidence which is in my possession. It is merely a surmise, a belief of mine, because I wish to state everything, as of course every Senator does, with absolute fairness and candor, so far as I understand it.

That bank, then, having bought this cotton and it having been seizedhaving bought the cotton for the purpose of gathering it in and making a profit for itself and the Confederacy, or both—did not get it within the lines to dispose of it for English gold, until the armies of the United States got in a condition where it could not be done, and so it staid at the various plantations and depots where it happened to be. Then it came forth. Then it was seized under this act of 1863 that I have recited, and the proceeds—at least I will assume—got into the Treasury, and now it is proposed that this fiscal agent of the Confederacy, probably acting with Confederate money, is to come to the Treasury of the United States after every other man is shut out by the statutes of limitations long since, and be repaid. It does not seem to me to be right.

Mr. HOAR. I ask consent of the Senate to occupy a few minutes in reply to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont has stated the names of some eminent gentlemen, not now members of the Senate, who he thinks, either publicly or privately, agreed to a certain policy in dealing with captured and abandoned property when legislation was desired.

I do not question at all the wisdom of those gentlemen or the accuracy of the Senator's recollection so far as it applies to the question with which they were then dealing. But I think this case is entirely dis-tinguishable from the class of cases to which the Senator's argument referred and the class of cases which Judge Thurman and Mr. Garland considered; and perhaps as the Senator has referred to a matter of authority it may not be improper for me to state that this matter was considered very carefully by the late Senator from Tennessee, Judge Jackson, one of the fairest-minded men with whom we were, any of us, ever associated in the public service, and a man who set his face like flint, although himself from the section of the country formerly in rebellion, against all that class of Southern claims, so called, to which any reasonable doubt anywhere attached, either on grounds of honesty or on grounds of general public policy. There was no Senator to whom the Senate looked in his time for a more faithful, thorough, and rigid examination of such things, a member both of the Judiciary Committee and of the Committee or Co mittee and of the Committee on Claims, and this matter has been be-fore the Committee on Claims in several Congresses, and I believe on investigation the favorable report has been always unanimous. I am not aware of any dissent.

Now, this does not come within the class of captured and abandoned property in its principle at all. A number of Louisiana planters sold to the State National Bank of Louisiana certain cotton, and that was in violation of the non-intercourse act. Probably the contract of sale was illegal. But after the forces of the United States had been in possession of New Orleans for years, late in the year 1865, after an assurance had been given to that people that they would be dealt with in all respects, so far as their rights of property were concerned, like other citizens of the United States, after the war had ended all over the country, although technically it extended to 1866—because it was necessary, of course after subdoing the grown to hold the grown to the second the second to the second the sec of course, after subduing the enemy to hold the grasp upon them until peaceable relations could be re-established—after the ordinary war had ceased, these planters who were in possession of their property and had a perfect right to hold it and keep it against all the world, including their vendee, if they chose to set up this technical objection to the validity of the contract, as honest men and as honorable men delivered the cotton in pursuance of their previous contract to this bank. They had been paid for it, and they delivered it.

The State National Bank of Louisiana, whatever its predecessor might have done—its predecessor was the State Bank before it was reorganized as a national bank—in relation to the Confederacy when it was in control there, was a lawful corporation of the United States, exercising all the rights of citizenship.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who bought the cotton?

Mr. HOAR. The predecessor had bought it and the national bank received it after the war was over; and under these circumstances the authorities of the United States took that cotton, and its proceeds went into the Treasury under a policy well established in legislation. The United States received that property as a trustee and not as a captor, to be accounted for to the owner and not to be treated as booty or prize

The claimants went to the Treasury and said, "This property does not come within any principle or policy or purpose of the United States to seize it and to hold it; it was taken from us long after the war was over and when the character of a disloyal or rebel citizen could not possibly be imputed at the time to any man within the limits of the United States, as in the case of the old capture or abandonment while the war was flagrant, and you must give it up to us, whether the statute has given you a right to deal with this general captured and abandoned property fund or not, because you have taken it unadvisedly or by mistake." The Treasury Department considered that question and they held erroneously that they could not give it up to the bank be-cause of the illegality of the old contract of sale, not adverting to the consideration that it was not now a question of the illegality of the old contract of sale, but a question of the legality of the delivery and the ratification of that old contract and the making of a new one after the non-intercourse act had by the President's proclamation expired.

President Johnson had issued his proclamation long before that time, in which he announced the restoration of the rights of intercourse to all parts of the country. I had it on my desk a moment ago. That proclamation was issued June 24, 1865.

Under these circumstances the bank went into the Court of Claims under this law, and the Court of Claims said, "You are too late; the statute of limitations has applied." The question now for Congress is, is that laches? I do not think it is laches. The parties went to the Treasury in time, and it was a mere blunder or error of the Treasury Department not to return the money to them, and they were perfectly justified in not going into the Court of Claims and incurring the expense and costs of a lawsuit until they got this decision. Then they came, and came seasonably, to Congress

The Senator from Vermont dwells, and dwells with emphasis, as if he thought it was of some importance—and I take it he utters no word that he does not think of importance—on the fact that this claim has been here a good while. It has been here a good while through the fault—or the condition of business, whether the fault or not—of Congress, because whenever it has got examination from a committee of Congress it has had a unanimous recommendation of its justice and a recommendation that it should pass.

I ought further to say that it was not until the decision of the case of the United States vs. Klein, in 13 Wallace, decided in December, 1871, that it was generally understood or supposed by the profession that this class of claimants could go into the United States courts at all.

So we have got this naked proposition that here is a trustee holding this property for the owner, never desiring or claiming or proposing to keep it himself; here is an owner, a lawful owner, without a suggestion of flaw in that owner's title; and that trustee is asked to take this property from the innocent owner, or the proceeds of it, and put them into his own pocket and keep them, because, it is said, the owner applied to the wrong officer of the trustee by mistake to get his property back.

I have never been able to understand those arguments which pro-I have never been able to understand those arguments which proceed on the ground that the moral law and the law of honor do not apply to that great, noble, moral being, the United States of America, and should not govern it in its dealings with all mankind just as much as they should apply to a private citizen. I can not understand how my honorable friend from Vermont can ask his country to do a thing which he would burn off both his hands to the stump rather than do it himself. There is not a member of this body who would not feel a sense of infinite mortification, shame, and humiliation if he were to suppose that any of his grandchildren or great-grandchildren a hundred years hence would discover in looking over the records of the United States that he had done in his private relations to mankind the thing which the United States of America is asked to do to this bank, thing which the United States of America is asked to do to this bank, to wit, take a lot of trust property, pocket it, cheat the owner out of it, and plead the statutes of limitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont may proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I disagree with my honorable friend from Messachusetts as to this centured and abandoned property money.

from Massachusetts as to this captured and abandoned property money being a trust fund for anybody except for that owner of the seized cotton who should have been on the side of the United States during the rebellion and not against it. That is what the act of Congress the rebellion and not against it. That is what the act of Congress says in explicit terms. And although the Supreme Court of the United States thought they were bound to hold as a matter of law that a pardon gave a rebel the legal status of never having been engaged in the rebellion, they certainly could not hold, and Congress could not hold, and no lover of his country could hold that that gave rebels the status of falling in fact within the description of the persons whom Congress could not hold, and that the interpret and shandard representational that the contract and shandard representations. intended that this captured and abandoned property should be returned

Mr. HOAR. This national bank never set up a pardon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it never set up a pardon. I am speaking about the principle of this trust fund, so called, and I repeat that the plain and explicit language of this act was that there was no trust whatever in favor of any enemy of the United States, and the fact that that enemy got pardoned afterwards did not create a trust; but, as the Supreme Court said, in point of law as the law then stood, they were bound to declare that he had never been in the rebellion at all whether Congress meant it or not.

Now, when not availing themselves of the decision of the Supreme Court on that question, they come to Congress and ask us to remove the two years which Congress had provided as the time within which the claim of every loyal citizen must be presented, I think I have a right to say that I will disregard the technical effect of a pardon and declare that property captured from the enemies of the United States and its proceeds turned into the Treasury shall not be returned to them, whether they were pardoned or not pardoned.

The difficulty about the pardon question applied to this would be the technical fact that this rebel fiscal agent of the Confederacy was an ideal entity, and probably therefore, in the legal sense, not capable of a pardon, and perhaps in the legal and technical sense not capable of being guilty of treason, although every one of its stockholders and every one of its directors was a secretary of state of the Confederacy or a brigadier-general in its service.

I do not propose to be a party to any kind of reasoning of that character; but when the gentlemen who managed this bank, the old State Bank of Louisiana, from whom the present national bank was a mere purchaser or successor to its assets, if it had any, shall set up the idea that it was not an individual person capable of committing treason, I may submit; but if its managers and agents and operators and its funds were exerting themselves in favor of the Confederacy when in 1863 they took Confederate money, as I believe, and paid it for this cotton and waited until after they could, in a military sense, get it into New Orleans, I must decline to facilitate their being paid for it from the Treasury of the United States. That is my position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. EDMINDS. Is there any amendment, pending? If not, I

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any amendment pending? If not, I move to amend, in line 5, by striking out the word "belonging" and inserting the words "alleged to belong." I do not propose in this act of Congress, if it should pass, to admit upon ex parte evidence before a committee that this bank is the owner of the cotton. Let them prove it just as anybody else must.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "cotton," it is proposed to strike out "belonging" and insert "alleged to belong;" so as to read:

For the payment of the proceeds of cotton alleged to belong to said bank.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 12 and the succeeding lines, all after the word "law" to the end of the section, and inserting these words:

But the claimant shall not be entitled to recover unless it shall appear that the managers of the Louisiana State Bank were at the time of the purchase of and the payment for said cotton in fact loyal to the United States, and had never been in fact engaged in the rebellion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont send his amendment to the desk in writing?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am afraid the Secretary can not read it. I was in hopes it had been taken down as I stated it. I will write it down more plainly—the Secretary can not possibly read it as I have it now—if the Senate will pardon me for a minute's time.

Mr. HOAR. While the Secretary is writing that down I may as well go on and comment upon it as I would do otherwise.

go on and comment upon it, as I would do otherwise.

The rights which this bank is entitled to prosecute were acquired long after the rebellion was over. Now, the idea of sending a claimant into court after the rebellion is over and saying he shall not have a legal or equitable right against the United States which is clearly his unless he proves that long before he acquired it his predecessor did not do something to aid and comfort the rebellion!

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire upon what grounds the Senator from Massachusetts says the rights of this bank to this cotton were acquired after the war?

Mr. HOAR. The right of this bank was acquired in the year 1865. I do not mean after the technical end of the war, but long after any human being in the country gave aid or comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. PLATT. But this bank bought this cotton during the war, in 1863, paid for it in 1863, and did not get possession of the cotton till 1865.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. Mr. PLATT. But the Mr. PLATT. But the Senator will permit me to say that after the war was closed the cotton was delivered. Now, was that a new contract?

Mr. HOAR. The very question that the Supreme Court decided makes the right to date from that delivery in 1865. That is the whole substance of the decision.

Mr. PLATT. What decision of the Supreme Court is that? I do not understand that the Supreme Court has decided that this was a new contract; nor do I understand that their question is left to the Court of Claims to decide by this bill. If it were, there would be more reason for the passage of the bill. There is nothing in the bill, as I remember it, which would leave the Court of Claims to reject this claim if it should be found that that was not a new contract, but simply an execution of the old contract.

Mr. HOAR. The non-intercourse act—
Mr. PLATT. I can not see how that question is left to the Court of Claims by this bill. I may be mistaken upon that point. I have not examined it sufficiently so that I can speak with certainty about it, but a hasty consideration of the bill led me to suppose that that question or the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be pardoned for one more suggestion, this contract was made with the bank in 1863, when there was a prohibition of intercourse. New Orleans was in our possession and other parts of Louisiana were not. In 1865, after President Johns in had issued a proclamation removing all obstructions to intercourse, after the war was practically over, after the last person who aided and comforted the practically over, after the last person who aided and comforted the rebellion had got through, these people went in and delivered the cotton, as they were bound in honor to do, to the bank, and after that it was taken possession of by the officers of the United States. If that does not make a good title founded on that delivery, in 1865, it is, as Judge Jackson said, like a contract invalid if made on a Sunday, but if you deliver on Monday the thing agreed to be sold on Sunday, that is a good contract. If that is not so, then these people have never got the bill to this cotton and will not recover under this bill, any more than they did before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Pasco in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will be in line 12, to the end of the bill, as follows:

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out after the word "law,"

That the testimony and original papers filed by said bank before the Treasury Department of the United States in connection with said claim be, and the same shall be, received by said court as evidence if taken or filed under the rules of said court, if legally competent and proper under said rules and practice; that the said bank and United States may take further evidence as may be deemed proper, subject to the rules for taking testimony in said court.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

But the claimant shall not be entitled to recover unless it shall appear that the managers of the Louisiana State Bank were at the time of the purchase of and payment for said cotton in fact loyal to the United States, and had never been in fact engaged in the rebellion.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Vermont proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In support of this amendment I have to reply to my honorable friend from Massachusetts, who thinks it a very improper amendment, after this long period of peace, to require anybody that makes a claim against the Treasury for an event which took place during the war to prove that he fell within the intent of the act of Congress that provided for such cases. I have to say that I do not see the force of his argument.

force of his argument.

I have only to repeat what I said before, and I wish to repeat it with all the earnestness of which I am capable, that when a fiscal agent of the enemies of the United States, although it is a corporation, engages in the act of purchasing contraband of war, not only in violation of the laws of war as between enemies, but also in violation of the nonintercourse act, which was merely in accordance with the laws of war, and got a delivery of that property, which, the war still pending, was seized under and in conformity to a constitutional act of Congress then in force, and the proceeds turned into the Treasury, and Congress said they should not go out to any man that had been an enemy of the United States, when he asks Congress to relieve him and let him go into a court after everybody else is cut off, no matter how loyal he was, he shall prove as a fact that according to the spirit and intent of that act of Congress he stood in an attitude to have any right to claim that this seized property should be returned to him. On this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, on which he calls for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. EUSTIS (when his name was called). I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he considers this a political question?

Mr. HOAR. If it was I should vote the other way. Mr. EUSTIS. Then I vote nay.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], but I doubt somewhat whether in his design that pair covers a question like this. I will ask the Senator's colleague what view he takes of it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not think there is any objection to the Senator voting on this question.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. My colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].
Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2563, being the bill providing appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to dispose of the bill which has been pending.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object to that, but I want to take up the appropriation bill. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas propose to withdraw his motion?

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw it for the purpose of allowing the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts to be concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the further considera-tion of the bill which has been under consideration during the morn-ing hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. ing hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to strike out all after the word "law," in the twelfth line, to the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "law," in line 12, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "court," at the end, in line 19, as follows:

That the testimony and original papers filed by said bank before the Treasury Department of the United States in connection with said claim be, and the same shall be, received by said court as evidence as if taken or filed under the rules of said court so far as the same may be legally competent and proper under such rules and practice; that the said bank and United States may take further evidence as may be deemed proper, subject to the rules for taking testimony in said court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the generosity of my friend from Massachusetts and of the other gentlemen who have voted with him in support of this claim ought not to ask us or induce him, when we have reinstated this ancient Confederate bank and agent to all that it has lost by not conforming to the law of the statute of limitations, and when we have waived any requirement that the bank shall prove itself to have been loyal to the United States, to add to that the facility of its proving its claim by papers and evidence that it filed in the Department of the Treasury, taken ex parte, without any notice to the United States, and for a purpose in the Treasury Department that the law did not recognize at all, because the Secretary of the Treasury never had any power or authority to exercise any jurisdiction in deciding upon these cotton claims under the act of 1863.

Now, having granted to this bank a waiver of its treason, and having granted to it a waiver of the statute of limitations, I can not see upon what ground it is that its ex parte affidavits, taken in support of its claim and filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be received as evidence. If that is all stricken out the case will stand in the Court of Claims, if the bill becomes a law, just as every other claimant's case stands, to be proved by evidence that is lawfully admissible and by witnesses who can be cross-examined.

I should hope that even the gentlemen on the other side, whose friend this bank was in the time of it, to be sure, would see that in protecting the Treasury of the United States it is right that whoever now makes a claim upon the Treasury and is relieved from the other disabilities, should prove his claim just as anybody else would be required to prove his.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll. Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire, before the vote is taken on the passage of the bill, to ask the Senator from Massachusetts or some other member of the Committee on Claims who is in favor of this bill, as it removes the bar of the statute of limitations in this case and allows these plaintiffs to recover the proceeds of captured and abandoned property in the Treasury of the United States under the captured and abandoned property statute, if they are in favor of, and propose to recommend, a general removal of the barof the statute of limitations in cases of a similar nature; in other words, whether they propose to open the Treasury of the United States to the demand of all claimants of captured or abandoned property where the statute of limitations has now run, or whether they propose to open it in this single case or in special cases merely? I should like to know what the views and purposes are of the Senators who advocate the removal of the statute bar in this

Mr. HOAR. I must have failed to make myself clear in the apprehension of the very clear-sighted Senator from New Hampshire in what I said before. I do not think this is captured and abandoned property in any true sense of the term. It does not come within the principle or the policy of it. I do not think it is a case really where the statute of limitations can properly be said to be removed. Although, when they went into the court the court said it was too late, yet it does not seem to be the class of property to which that remedy in the Court of Claims was intended to apply.

It is property, let me repeat, which a national bank, under the national-banking law, acquired in 1865 after the war was all over. It is not to say that they shall not have their title established to property which they acquired, without showing that their managers, some of whom were managers of the old bank which they succeeded, in the time of the Confederacy, were loyal to the United States. There is no purpose on the part of the committee to reopen the door, which is shut, in the matter of captured and abandoned property, or to recognize any different policy from that which has always obtained.

Mr. DAWES. I have not been able to examine this claim in detail.

I should like to inquire of my colleague what it is that the new bank

Mr. HOAR. The old bank made a contract in 1863, which was invalid in consequence of the non-intercourse act, for certain cotton. In 1865, after President Johnson had issued his proclamation restoring intercourse between all parts of the United States, after profound peace had taken place in this country, the owners of the cotton, considering, I suppose, that it would be dishonorable for them to set up that thing, went in and delivered it to this national bank, which had been organized out of the old State Bank of Louisiana, and which the Senator from Vermont says was the fiscal agent of the Confederacy. I know nothing about that, and care nothing. That was seized under a mistake as being captured property of a disloyal person. The bank went to the officers of the Treasury to have it given up. The officers of the Treasury declined to give it up on the ground of the violation of the non-intercourse act, which prevented any property being vested in them, notwithstanding the delivery after intercourse was restored, by the owners, who had kept it up to that time. Then they came to Congress years and years ago, and they have had a unanimous report from every committee that ever investigated it; and I believe if my honorable friend from Vermont had understood all the facts and had had the case presented to his legal mind he would have been as earnest for it as any-body. But of course I can not undertake to vouch for him. Mr. CHANDLER. I think I did understand the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts nearest to me, both his first statement of the case and the statement which he has now made in answer to his colleague. I understand him to say that in his view, and in the view of the Senators who support the bill, the taking of this cotton was not a taking of captured or abandoned property, but I also understand the fact to be that every pale of this cotton was taken and the proceeds put into the Treasury under the captured and abandoned property act. I do not suppose the Senator will dispute that. He thinks that it was mot captured or abandoned property.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that it was taken at a time when tile right of capture had long passed away and the armies of the United States had gone. You might just as well say that if a bale of cotton in my possession was taken by the General of the Army this morning as I walked down Pennsylvania avenue, that was captured or abandoned property.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a wide distinction between the case. suggested by the Senator and this case. The Senator may say there was no right to take this cotton as captured or abandoned property at the time that it was taken; but I still say that it was taken by the officers of the United States in the exercise of the authority given by the captured and abandoned property act. When the Senator says there was no authority under that act to take possession of cotton which had become the property of the Confederate States, I say he is mistaken about it, and that the authority existed long after the close of hostilities, if cotton was found which had become the property of the Confederacy, to put the proceeds into the Treasury of the United

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend pardon me for suggesting to him that that would not be on the ground of the right of capture? It was on the ground that the United States succeeded to all the property of the Confederacy as owners. If they had found these bales of cotton in the port of Liverpool, where our war power certainly did not extend, belonging to the Confederacy, the agents of the United States would have been upon it and taken it, by consent of Great Britain, of

Mr. CHANDLER. I well understand the distinction between the taking of cotton on the battle-field as captured and claiming it after the battle as the result of the capture. I understand the distinction which the Senator undertakes to set up perfectly well, but I dispose of it by saying that in all these cases the proceeds of the cotton were put into the Treasury of the United States under and by virtue of the captured and abandoned property act, and there has been but one way to get the proceeds of that cotton out, and that was to bring suit in the Court of Claims within a certain period. To those suits the statute of limitations has been applied, and now the question is whether the limitations has been applied, and now the question is whether the statute of limitations shall be removed in these cases.

I for one might have been willing to allow this one claim to go to the Court of Claims without the bar of the statute, but as discussion has arisen upon it I am bound to say that I do not see how this statute bar can be removed in this case without being removed in every case. It seems to me that if this bill passes it will be a precedent for the removal of the statute bar in every case, and for the opening of the doors of the Court of Claims to every man, loyal or disloyal, because, under the construction of the Supreme Court of the United States, it makes no difference whether a man was a rebel or not, if he has been pardoned. Under that decision of the court loyal men and disloyal men all stand equal in the eye of the law, provided they can get into the Court of Claims or into the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is nothing that stands in the way of any disloyal claimant, of any rebel whose cotton may have been seized on the battle-field and put into the Treasury of the United States under the captured and abandoned property act, except the statute of limitations.

I say to the Committee on Claims that if they propose to remove the statute bar and allow every claimant to come in without regard to loyalty or disloyalty, let such a bill be brought in here and let it be dealt with on its merits, but do not let us take one claim and another claim and remove the statute bar simply because the Senator from Massachusetts thinks the claim is a little better than some other claim, and that it is not strictly a claim for captured or abandoned property. Do not on that ground undertake to make a distinction between one case and all the others, but bring in a bill that will let in all these claimants, and then the Congress of the United States will have to decide, not whether it will give this bank $300,000 or $400,000, or whatever the amount may be that is claimed, but whether it will pay to rebels whose cotton was taken, rehabilitated by the decision of the Supreme Court, not $1,000,000 but $10,000,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I must be excused if I say a very few words more upon this subject, for I think the last statement of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar], in answer to his colleague [Mr. Dawes], does not justly represent the history of this case. I will try to state it as far as it appears in this report, and then add something of my own information and belief about it.

"The State Bank of Louisiana," this report says, was "a banking corporation chartered by the laws of Louisiana, and located in the city of New Orleans, in 1863, while said city was in the permanent occupa-tion and control of military forces of the United States." That is the first statement of the report. The first step in this history, therefore, is to know what sort of an institution that State Bank of Louisiana was when General Butler and Admiral Farragut went in there and got it into our military possession.

The State Bank of Louisiana, as I am informed and believe (and nobody has disputed the statement I have repeatedly made upon the subject here), was a bank of the State of Louisiana while that State was a member of the Confederacy and in hostility to the United States. It was the fiscal agent and operator for the Confederacy. Whether the money in the bank was deposited by the Confederacy or not, I do not know. You can not prove it at this moment; but I believe the deposits made by the Confederacy itself, which depended upon cotton to carry on its war (and I think the war was somewhat fervent in the year 1863, although the city of New Orleans had been captured), were sent out into the parts of the country that then were not in the military possession of the United States, the extreme regions of Louisiana, and over in Arkansas and in the Confederate country, and with this Confederate money cotton was bought of the various planters.

They could not ship it to England to get more gold for the Confederacy then, because we held New Orleans and the key to the entrance into the Mississippi River. Accordingly, this Confederate bank, having used these funds and bought this cotton and paid for it, waited until 1865, when one supporter of the Confederacy had assassinated President Lincoln and Mr. Johnson had become President. Mr. Johnson issued a proclamation allowing commercial intercourse between certain parts of the United States and certain other parts of the United States that had not been allowed before. Then this Confederate bank, having turned itself into a national bank of the United States, and as the sucssor of the Confederate bank the national bank took all its claims, rights, assets—a mere transformation—sent its agents up into the country that had been rebel country (and it was rebel country until the 20th of August, 1866, when the war terminated), and got this cotton, and brought it for shipment to various places to send it to New Orleans, when it could then be got out, if the United States did not seize it.

Mr. DAWES. Before August?

Mr. DAWES. Before August.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before August. In June. It having thus been discovered, the agents of the United States acting under the act of 1863, either rightfully or wrongfally seized it and turned its proceed into the Treasury of the United States, as the law required.

Then this transformed and rehabilitated Confederate bank applied to the Secretary of the Treasury to get the money. The Secretary of the Treasury had no more business to pay them the money, whether they were entitled to it or not, than I have at this minute, out of the Treasury, because the law said that the money should be paid into the Treasury and not into the pocket of the Secretary to be paid back by him at his discretion. Congress found out that the Secretary of the Treasury was exercising a jurisdiction that did not belong to him, and that the money had not technically been turned into the Treasury, the whole sum. Congress instantly passed an act to have it turned into the Treasury. Then it got into the Treasury, so that the Secretary could no longer deal with it illegally as he had been doing before.

Now come these people and say, "We got outside the statute of limitations because we did not sue within the two years, and our excuse for this laches is that we were honestly struggling with one of the Departments to get that money, and that Department did not give it to us." That is a little too much for me.

Mr. HOAR. The facts suggested by the Senator from Vermont are entirely the creatures of his own fancy. In the first place, he said in answer to my colleague that this was before June, 1865.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before August.

Mr. HOAR. It was expressly after.
Mr. EDMUNDS. It was before August.
Mr. HOAR. June 24, 1865, is the date of the President's proclamation, and this is found to be subsequent to June 30. But if there were any pretense—there never has been a word from any quarter so far as I know—that it was the property of the Confederacy, that is a perfect defense before the Court of Claims and before the Supreme Court of the United States open to the defendant there. The only question is whether it is sound policy to have facts of that kind ascertained in the courts or taken from the excited fancy of Senators in the heat of de-

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the House of Representatives be asked for a conference on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11651, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. Under special orders the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded the Ath January 1868," was made a special order for Wedness. on the 4th day of July, 1868," was made a special order for Wednesday, December 12; and Senate bill 3401, which is the bill touching the Pacific railroads, was made a special order for December 4, eight days before the time fixed for the consideration of Senate bill 994. The latter was necessarily postponed on account of the tariff bill then under consideration, and it seems to me that Senate bill 3401 properly is to-day in advance of Senate bill 994. I do not understand that any objection is urged against this view, or at any rate against placing the Pacific railroad bill in advance.

Mr. DOLPH. I was about to state that, being in temporary occu-pancy of the chair at the hour of 2 o'clock, I examined the record, and it appearing upon the Calendar that the bill referred to first by the Senator from Maine was on the 1st of October last made a special order for the 12th of December, and that on the 15th of October last the bill concerning the Pacific railroads was made a special order for the 5th of December, and that it was postponed until the 12th of December, the rule seemed to require that the bill which was last made a special order should be given preference. Therefore the occupant of the chair laid before the Senate the bill which was made a special order for the 12th of December on the 1st of October.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is to say, Senate bill 994.
Mr. DOLPH. That bill was laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock.
Mr. FRYE. Iask unanimous consent, the Pacific Railroad bill being one of great public importance, that it may have precedence of Senate bill 994 and may now be taken up, and if it is taken up I will then yield to the Senator from Kansas for the consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the special order (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned, may have precedence in the list of special orders, and be first assigned for considera-

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine whether that will interfere at all with the unanimous consent which the Senate gave for the consideration of the British extradition treaty?

Mr. FRYE. It will not. I do not mean that it shall.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. In that case I do not object.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object if the only effect is to transpose those two special orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the effect.

Mr. HALE. What is the other special order?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Special Committee on the Pacific Railroads, whether it is his intention to call up Senate bill 3041 for consideration this week.

Mr. FRYE. It is, immediately, only I will yield to the Senator from Kansas to proceed with the District appropriation bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire further from the chairman of the committee whether there has been any action taken by his committee on an important amendment introduced by me and referred

Mr. FRYE. There has been consideration, but not final action.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no disposition to interfere with this matter if it can be postponed until next week. However, unless the chairman of the committee is willing that the bill shall not be proceeded with until next week, I shall feel like objecting.

Mr. HALE. I was going to express the hope that my colleague would get this bill out of the way as soon as possible. I am desirous of calling up the bill providing for the next census, which is an important matter, and may take some time in the Senate; and I wish to bring it up as soon as at least the Pacific Railroad bill is out of the

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he had better ask unanimous consent to consider the bill some day next week, so that we may have an opportunity to be prepared. I think quite a number, probably, of our friends would object to its being taken up for consideration immediately after the appropriation bill. While I have no disposition on my part to object, I suggest that the Senator fix a day next week, say Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. FRYE. The trouble is that appropriation bills will be coming in then.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to suggest that I understand there are to be one or two pretty full speeches on the bill, explanatory of the measure, one or two pretty full speeches on the bill, explanatory of the measure, and after those are made undoubtedly there will be no difficulty in a postponement of the further consideration of the bill until next week. Those speeches will probably take all the week, and we shall not sit on Saturday this week. To-day is Wednesday, and it is now 3 o'clock. Mr. GORMAN. With the understanding that there shall be no vote taken on the question until next week, I shall interpose no objection. Mr. CHANDLER. Speaking with reference to the order of business, I desire to say that it was my intention this morning or some time to-day to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], however, indicated to me that he desired to speak on the resolution, and would not be prepared to go on to-day. I wish to say that I shall at the first convenient opportunity, certainly not later than Friday of this week, make a motion to proceed to the consideration of that resolution, and I trust the Senator will be prepared at that tion of that resolution, and I trust the Senator will be prepared at that time. If the investigation proposed by the resolution is to be ordered at this session of the Senate, it is certainly important that the subject should be acted upon at an early day, and not later than Friday I shall make that motion.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator testing the sense of the Senate on that question whenever he desires to do so, provided I may be present. If there is any memorial here from any member of the Legislature of Louisiana or any citizen of Louisiana asking for an investigation, I should be glad, if that citizen feel aggrieved, to move that the investigation shall take place. But I am opposed to an investigation being made at the request of a citizen of New Hampshire against the wishes of the people of Louisiana.

Mr. CHANDLER. The whole Republican party, I think, is ready for an investigation except the two colored men who, I see, were run out from Louisiana yesterday for undertaking to organize the Knights of Labor in that State.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is the understanding that no vote on any proposition connected with the funding bill shall be taken this week, I have no objection to the change in the order of business asked for by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3401 may be assigned first in the Calendar of special orders. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to know if a vote will be asked on any matter connected with the bill this week. Mr. FRYE. To-day is Wednesday. No; I will consent that no vote shall be taken this week.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. Senate bill 3401 has precedence on the Calendar of special orders, and the order heretofore made laying Senate bill 994 before the Senate is reconsidered. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeds to the consideration of the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11651, being the District appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield for that purpose?
Mr. FRYE. I do.

PUNISHMENT OF RAPE.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield just a moment, that I may secure action on the conference report upon House bill 5870, to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape.
Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference was presented, and was laid on the table at the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state that the Senator from Florida does not care about making any remarks upon the conference report, or I should not have asked the Senator from Kansas to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report, which has been read.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to know what the report is. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read. The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The next amendment was, or page 12, after line 6, to insert.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia may at any time proceed to condemn lands for streets, alleys, roads, and highways, to the ascertainment of the costs thereof, under the provisions of chapter II of the Revised Statutes pertaining to said District: Provided, That in all cases where there are no fundsupplicable to the same no further proceedings shall be had until payment of the condemnation money, and all such condemnations not paid from moneys furnished or appropriated for shall, after six months from their respective dates, become void for all purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment: In line 14, to insert "twelve" instead of "six," so as to allow twelve months.

The Senator will see that sometimes appropriations are made a considerable time in advance of the beginning of the fiscal year and do not take effect until the 1st of July, and sometimes in the long session they are made after that time.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the Senator's amendment?

Mr. FLOMB. What is the Senator's amendment?
Mr. SHERMAN. On page 14, line 12, in the amendment proposed by the committee, I propose to make it read "twelve months." It should be at least that, and I think really it ought to be two years; but I suggest twelve months instead of six months.

Mr. PLUMB. The point in reference to that is that the property-owner ought to be taken into account. When his property has been condemned, that is, when all the machinery for condemnation has been set in motion and the property has been appraised, he is entitled to know within some reasonable time whether it is to be taken or not. This is designed more specifically to cover cases where individual property-owners, individual persons, owners of adjacent property or otherwise, having an interest in the subject-matter, are willing to put up the wise, having an interest in the subject-matter, are willing to put up the money, but can not put it up until they know the amount which will be necessary, and that can only be determined by the appraisal provided for in this section. It seems as though six months should be long enough to keep the property-owner in that waiting condition after the appraisal is made until the time when the owner can know whether the property will be taken or whether it will be abandoned.

I may say to the Senator that the courts have held that under the present law, unless there is money appropriated and actually under the control of the District commissioners for the payment of the appraised price of property to be taken under condemnation proceedings, no condemnation proceedings can be had. We have designed here to cover a condition of things in which the necessity for the condemnation might exist, but for which no money could be had, leaving the question open as to whether the money might come in one case from the adjacent property-owners, as I have said, or in the other case from Congress by appropriation after report made.

While I have no objection to having the time made twelve months, it seems to me to be unjust to the property-owners to keep them in that uncertain condition for so long a period.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will take some time to make the condemnation, and then the property-owners ought to have at least twelve months afterwards to raise the money or make their arrangements.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object to the extension of the time to twelve months.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention has been called to this matter by a person who is interested as a property-owner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 14, of the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, it is proposed to strike out and insert "twelve" before the word "months;" so as to read:

And all such condemnations not paid from moneys furnished or appropriated for shall, after twelve months from their respective dates, become void for all

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 18, line 14, after the word "Provided," to strike out the following proviso:

That no more than 40 cents shall be paid for each light per night burning from sunset to sunrise, and each are light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candle-power, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting after September 30, 1889, by means of wires erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That no more than 60 cents per night shall be paid for any light burning from sunset to sunrise, and no more than 50 cents per night shall be paid for any light burning from sunset to sunrise and operated wholly or in part by overhead wires; and each are light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candle-power, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting after September 30, 1889, by means of wires that may exist on or over the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend, on line 23, page 18, by striking out "fifty" before the word "cents" and inserting "forty."

I desire to say that I think the proposition of the House of Representatives is better than the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not think that these electric lights running on wires overhead should be tolerated in the city of Washington at all. They ought all to be placed under ground. We have noticed the calamities which have overtaken persons and horses in various cities where these wires have been strung overhead. They are always a source of danger. Every time a building takes fire, if a fireman approaches and happens to touch one of these wires, it is death to him. Therefore I think that, instead of giving these corporations an opportunity to place these wires overhead, they ought to be compelled to place them under-ground.

So far as the pending proposition is concerned, I do not think that the difference between 50 and 60 cents is sufficient to compel the companies to put the wires under-ground. If the present system is to be tolerated at all, I want to have the difference in the amount allowed for lighting large enough to induce them to place the wires under-ground.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator has not observed, I think, the latter part of the committee amendment. If he will read that, he will see that after the 30th day of September next none of the money appropriated by this bill will be available for the payment of any lamp which is operated by means of a wire carried overhead.

If he looks at that amendment carefully I think the Senator will find that it is superior to the provision contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, because it provides, which the House bill does not, in a practical way, as the committee think, for the proper adjustment of this matter, and the sum of 50 cents has heretofore been fixed as the proper sum for overhead lighting. The District commissioners, the engineer commissioner especially, say that that is the proper sum; and we only design to carry this on to the 30th day of September, at which time every single dollar of this appropriation ceases unless the wires are put under-ground.

Mr. MORRILL. But still I would not authorize the construction of these wires overhead.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a positive provision in the existing law forbidding the erection of overhead wires, which went into effect on the 15th day of September last, and no overhead wires have been put up since that time.

The amendment of the committee not only constitutes an inducement to these people to put the overhead wires under-ground, but it provides that unless they do so by the 30th day of September next, they shall not have any of the money appropriated by the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. The explanation of the Senator from Kansas is entirely satisfactory, and I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question, then, is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 19, line 7, after the word "shall," to insert "investigate, ascertain, and;" in line 9, before the word "electric," to insert "gas and;" and in line 10, after the word "contracts," to strike out "and that they be authorized to invite proposals for supplying said light at reduced rates, and in this they are not limited to any one system;" so as to read:

The next amendment was, after line 24, on page 24, to insert:

That the commissioners shall have all the powers conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury and other officers of the United States by the act of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes," for the condemnation of land for sites for school buildings, engine-houses, and for police stations, and for circles to become public reservations. Applications for such proceedings shall be filed in the supreme court of said District, by the attorney thereof, under such orders as said court may prescribe in such cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then he is reading from another copy of the bill. In the copy I have it is on page 24.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator should insert his amendment on page 25, line 8, in the amendment of the committee which has just been read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a different print. I think it is an old print.

Mr. PLUMB. There was another print made for the committee. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 8 of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "reservations," it is proposed to insert:

And for streets, alleys, and roads authorized by law.

Mr. PLUMB. The commissioners already have that authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is a difference of opinion about it. If we insert these words, and the Senator does not find that the law to which I refer is better, the conference can strike them out; but the law regulating the condemnation of land by the Secretary of the Treasury for public-building sites throughout the United States is carefully framed, and has undergone the ordeal of the decisions of the United States courts as to the mode of condemnation.

Mr. PLUMB. So has the law which has been in existence here for many years, providing for the condemnation of streets. The commissioners and the attorney for the District—and the attorney for the District drew this amendment—said in response to a suggestion of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that no additional authority is necessary for that purpose, because ample authority is already conferred under the existing law, as has been settled by the

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator is sure of that, I shall not insist on my amendment, but I understand that the law I have referred to has undergone the closest scrutiny.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no question about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do, on the assurance of the Senator from Kan-

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 37, line 10, before the word "thousand" it is proposed to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Mr. PLUMB. It is necessary to make an amendment there in order that that may be, to use a printer's phrase, "run in" immediately following the word "same," in line 39, instead of being made a separate paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be arranged by the Secretary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have three or four amendments that I wish to offer, all of which I believe are estimated for in the regular estimates or in special estimates. First, on page 12, between lines 11 and 12, I move to insert

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 8, after line 25, I move to insert:

To grade and regulate Boundary street from Fourth street west to North Capitol street, $15,333.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer another amendment to make the appropriations for the suburban and outside streets conform to the provisions in the bill in regard to the streets within the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, after line 23, it is proposed to in-

For the grading and improvement of the county roads and suburban streets, estimated for by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in Appendix "CC" to their report, and not specifically included in this bill, to be expended on such roads and streets as they shall designate, $40,000.

Mr. PLUMB. That seems to be contradictory. I suppose the design of the Senator is to have the appropriation for the country roads correspond to the estimates.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator desires to do that he must leave out that portion which would authorize the commissioners to designate. The words "as they shall designate" ought to be eliminated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection. I simply found in the bill the amounts estimated for certain streets in certain schedules, leaving the appropriations to be designated by the commissioners of a certain Some of those estimated for have been omitted from the details of the appropriation bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The House of Representatives, in taking up this matter of suburban improvements, itemized, that is to say, individualized the various items of appropriation. The Senate committee accommodated itself to the House idea, inserting some additional ones, but not all of those estimated for. I have no objection if the Senator wishes to insert the remainder of them. If he wants to do it in a general way I have no objection to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. This will be better, because they are all set out in the schedule referred to.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well. The last part of the amendment, that authorizes the commissioners to put the money wherever they please, should be stricken out.

Wherever they please on the designated streets Mr. SHERMAN. and roads.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will leave out the last portion of the amendment it will be all right. I suggest to strike out "wherever they shall designate."

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the amendment the words "to be expended on such roads and streets as they shall designate." so as to read:

For the grading and improvement of the county roads and suburban streets, estimated for by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in Appendix "CC" to their report, and not specifically included in this bill, $40,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.
Mr. EDMUNDS. In Appendix "CC" of what year?
Mr. SHERMAN. Of the present year. It is referred to once or twice in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I will make one other suggestion to the Senator from Ohio, and that is that he should say not "Appendix 'CC' of their report," but "Appendix 'CC' of the Book of Estimates."

Mr. SHERMAN. It is referred to once or twice in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is first referred to on page 7, in lines 23, 24, and 25.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better use the same language that is used in the preceding part of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see how it reads now about the appendix when it is corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the letters "CC" insert:

Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1890.

Mr. PLUMB. The language will be found at the foot of page 7: For work on sundry streets and avenues named in appendix "CC," Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That language has been inserted.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

For the erection of a suitable brick building to be used by the German Orphan Asylum Association, and to be erected on the grounds now owned by said association, $10,000: Provided, That said association expends an equal amount in the erection of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I offer an amendment for an improvement that has been estimated for, I believe. I move, on page 8, after line 25, to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, after line 25, it is proposed to in-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 13, line 3, I move to strike out the word "five" before "thousand," and insert "twenty;" which is according to the estimate of the commissioners of the District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 3, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "twenty;" so as to read: To widen and regulate Brightwood avenue, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 13, between lines 23 and 24, I move to insert: For paving Kansas and Colorado avenues, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in on page 12, line 2, after the word "dollars."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 2, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

is proposed to insert:

All street-railway companies having tracks or road-beds on the streets of the city of Washington shall cause said rails and road-beds to be made level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said track or road-beds, so that no obstruction shall be presented to vehicles passing over said tracks. The cost of making the changes herein required shall be paid by the corporations owning said street-railroads, and if after being notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing to comply with the terms of this act the said corporations shall not within thirty days thereafter begin the work required to complete the same within a reasonable time, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and road-beds to be made, and the cost thereof shall be collected from the corporations respectively owning said street-railroads by suit in the name of the United States, to be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, against said corporations in the district court of said District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to have the Secretary read the first

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to have the Secretary read the first clause of the amendment, the descriptive clause of what it is that is to be corrected.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 2, page 12, it is proposed to insert:

All street-railway companies having tracks or road-beds on the streets of the city of Washington shall cause said rails and road-beds to be made level with the surface of the streets—

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough. I think that covers the point. Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Missouri to modify the amendment by requiring the street-railway companies to remove the present rails and use the flat rails.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection. That is my meaning. I want them to change the T rails, I think they are called, which extend now from half to three-quarters of an inch above the surface of the street, and use the groove rails or flat rails, which will present no obstacle to vehicles passing over them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have been required to do that hitherto, but in defiance of law, as I understand it, they have put down these T rails, which are an utter nuisance everywhere.

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say furthermore that, for instance, at New York avenue and Fourteenth street, whenever there is a rain, mud and water accumulate to such an extent that it is almost impossible to get across the street on Fourteenth street going north or south. I think the persons whose business it is to attend to that sort of improvement should have their attention called to it, so that the streets shall be kept in better condition.

Mr. VEST. As I understand the Senator from Massachusetts he wants to insert a provision for the use of flat rails. I think the amendment covers it now, but I am willing to make it as strong as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to modify the amendment?

If the Senator from Massachusetts desires it I have no spirit of the law has always required that they should be. In the State from which I come, on such occasions of private corporations having rights in streets, when they do not do what their charter requires them to do in regard to keeping the streets in order, the executive authority of the locality, no matter what we call it, is to go and do it; and in-stead of bringing an action, like any other tax or assessment that is laid in my State, the proper authority is to issue a warrant for the amount expended, to be collected out of the property of the delinquent then and there. If it is illegal the delinquent can sue and rectify himself.

If it is not, you get your pay without a five or ten years' lawsuit.

I am very sorry (there is no time at this moment to change it) that the amendment does not provide that whenever the corporations occupying the streets do not do what the law requires, and the public money is obliged to be expended to do it, a warrant shall go against their property then and there, like any other tax, and collect it, and pay it into the Treasury, and if they have any rights to defend let them sue the United States or the District, rather than our having to sue them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say a word about this matter. I am inclined to think that the amendment as now drawn will compel companies to use this new rail Will it not?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does it not require them to use the new Johnson

Mr. VEST. It does not specify the rail, but requires them to put the rails down on a level with the street upon each side, so as to present no obstruction to vehicles

Mr. SHERMAN. The trouble with the old-fashioned rail was that it was not possible to do that because of the flanges. It seems to me that when we are compelling the railroad companies practically to rebuild their roads we ought to regulate the motive power. I am in favor of doing that now. Whenever the Committee on the District of Columbia will take up the question I am in favor of requiring the railroad companies here, except one or two in remote parts of the town, but all the chief railroads, especially the Metropolitan and the Washington and Georgetown railroads, to put on a different motive power. When the railroad companies were chartered twenty-five years ago, it was considered a great advance, but now in no large city would such a thing be done or authorized, and the principal railroads ought now to be required to use some other kind of motive power than horses.

I think the railroad facilities in this city are much poorer than in many cities of the North. We discussed that question somewhat last year. In Chicago and all the chief cities they have now substituted to some extent either the cable road or the electric road.

Notwithstanding the criticisms made in regard to the electric road, that I believe is going to be the final railroad of the future. It may be necessary for them to devise some way of putting the wires below ground, but even above ground, as the road now built here shows, it is far superior to any other railroad in this city. I should be very glad indeed to see that system adopted, though it would be better, as the Senator from Vermont has contended very strongly, to put the wires

It seems to me, therefore, that when this proposition is made it ought to be accompanied by a provision requiring new motive power. These corporations, I am told, are strong enough and able to do it, at least two or three of them; and those in remote parts of the town, where probably the patronage would not justify the increased cost, need not be required to do it. I have been hoping all along that the District Committee would report some such bill.

Mr. VEST. I agree entirely with the Senator from Ohio as to the need for a change of motive power, and I have expressed myself in that regard several times pretty strongly. But there is one difficulty about There are provisions in the charters of some of these companies which would seem to give them control of the motive power upon their respective roads. Some time ago I got together all the acts in regard to the franchises of the street railroads in the District of Columbia, but I frankly confess that it was an undertaking beyond what I supposed it to be, and I gave it up because the press of other business took me away from it. But I went far enough to ascertain the fact that there are some provisions in the charters of these companies that would make an absolute (I will not use the word arbitrary, but absolute) requirement on them to give up the horse transportation and adopt that of the electric railway or cable road very oppressive.

I say that, while I have not the slightest sort of sympathy with the present system here, for I think it is the worst in any city of the United States, I have no doubt with my friend from Massachusetts that we have the right, that is, we have the power, to control these cor-porations and to force them to change their motive power. We have that power; but we did give them certain privileges in their charters, and we can escape from those grants only by just saying that we take them back or we nullify them.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, we would exercise our power to

Mr. VEST. If the Schator from Massachusetts desires it I have to objection, although I think the amendment covers the point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the last part of the amendment, which provides for reimbursement of the expense of putting these tracks and road-beds in the condition that the

there are great abuses existing here in the street-railway system of the They have no charter rights as to the way in which they put down the rails.

The Senator from Vermont is right when he says that the spirit of the existing law requires them not to put down the sort of rails they have in this District. They have rails here extending from one-half to three-quarters of an inch above the surface of the street. I can go to one place here, immediately on my way from the Capitol to my residence, where it is almost impossible at times for a delicate vehicle to go across the track without injury when rain and mud accumulate, and always the driver is compelled to go at a very slow rate of speed.

All this, as a matter of course, does not bring up the question of charter rights. They are putting obstacles in the streets here, and they are dangerous obstacles, and they have no right to do it. When you come to the other question of changing the motive power, I have no doubt of our having the authority to do it, but it is a little intricate as to whether we ought to exercise it absolutley in every case. words, putting it all in a single sentence, I want to start this reform with something about which we all agree; and if the Senator from Ohio wants to put it in an amendment or wants to change this as to motive power and thinks we ought to do so, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not prepared to make any proposition at this

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us go as far as we can now.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The amendment will be again read. The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 2, page 12, it is proposed to add:

All street-railway companies having tracks or road-beds on the streets of the city of Washington shall cause said rails and road-beds to be made level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said tracks or road-beds, so that no obstruction shall be presented to vehicles passing over said tracks. The cost of making the changes herein required shall be paid by the corporations owning said street railroads; and if, after being notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing to comply with the terms of this act, the said corporations shall not within thirty days thereafter begin the work required to complete the same within a reasonable time, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and road-beds to be made, and the cost thereof shall be collected from the corporations respectively owning said street railroads by suit in the name of the United States, to be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia against said corporations in the district court of said District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri, as corporations, I have discovered, are rather technical, to the language, which merely speaks of a corporation owning the thing. I suggest to him to modify his amendment in that connection by say "the corporation or persons owning or operating," so as to hit everybody who has anything to do with it.

Mr. VEST. That is right. I move to make that change.
Mr. PLUMB. I wish to make one other suggestion in regard to the atter. The amendment says "on each side of the track or roadmatter. The amendment says "on each side of the track or road-bed." That perhaps would mean only on the exterior, and not the space between the rails.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought of that, and thought of suggesting it, but I concluded that the word "road-bed" was intended to cover the space between the rails.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt of it, but the only question is whether it is broad enough to cover it. I only make the suggestion.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course they can not use the asphalt, because that would not permit of horse-power.

Mr. HALE. I do not rise to oppose the amendment, because it is in the direction, I take it, that all of us desire action; but I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether it is possible that such an amendment as that is needed in order to secure this very desirable change in the way that these tracks are placed. Is it not clearly in the power of the commissioners of the District, who are intrusted by Congress with the management of the District for Congress, for the people, for the country, to regulate such matters in a proper way?

Mr. DAWES. The claim is that they have been going on for twenty-

The claim is that they have been going on for twenty-five years in this way.

Mr. HALE. I supposed that would be the answer. I do not know what the Senator from Vermont would say in reply to that question. It may be that it is not material. Perhaps the answer would be, as indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that things have gone on in this way for years, and that now, in order to see that right is done, Congress has got to interfere. All I have to say is that it is none too

The people of no city in the country are imposed upon and ill-treated as are the people of Washington and the people who visit Washington by the street-railway companies in their manner of conducting business. The trouble is that every year it comes around and the grievance is felt by everybody here, and we grumble and fulminate and declare what shall be done, and Congress goes by and nothing is done. The committees do not report any schemes that will relieve us of the evil, the inconvenience, the trouble; and whoever are imposing upon us after a time get to feel that they can do it with impunity, and from year to year they continue. I have no doubt that when they get together and sit down and consider the subject, draw their dividends and go on for the next year, a part of the performance is to laugh in derision at the talk that is made in Congress about it. So we suffer ourselves, we suffer our constituents who come here, and everybody else, to be imposed upon.

If anything can come of this amendment of the Senator from Misouri, I hope it will be passed and become a part of the law. It is not half that ought to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reply to the Senator from Maine as to the state of the law by saying that I think he is right in supposing that the governing executive power in the District would probably have the right to require this very thing. Whether the existing law would give even such a weak and ineffectual remedy as is provided in this amendment, I do not remember; but the fact is, as the Senator from Maine has stated, that, granted the commissioners have the power to compel the doing of this rightful and necessary thing, they have not done it, and I am very much afraid it will be a good while before they will do it if left to themselves.

I can relate very briefly an instance in my own experience showing the relations or the contrast between the governing power in the District of Columbia and these corporations and their grace to private individuals. I take it it was just about a year ago that I wrote a formal letter, as one person resident in this District, to the commissioners of the District, calling their attention to the absolute nuisance of the two railway crossings, I think, at Third street and Massachusetts avenue, where you had to stop your horse to a walk and go as you would across a mountain brook full of stones to get across the railway tracks. I asked them to call upon the railways and compel them to make those crossings there in a condition suitable for traffic. They replied with great politeness and courtesy that they would attend to it at once, and they sent a notice to the railways to do it. From that day to this it has not been done, and stones larger than you can see in excavated Pompeii of twenty-five hundred years ago are now in the road-bed between the tracks there at those crossings in that street, standing just as they did a year ago when I made the humble and piteous appeal to the commissioners.

Having had that experience, and there being at Du Pont Circle a similar condition, though not nearly so bad, in getting over the railway tracks there, I gave up the commissioners entirely and addressed an humble and piteous and respectful petition to the masters, the railway company, without going to the commissioners at all, and appealed to them as an act of grace to everybody who traveled along there to have that thing put in order. I got an immediate gracious response that they would do it right away, and within two weeks it was done. So the way for any citizen of the District or resident here to get anything done in ameliorating these crossings is to apply to the masters of the situation, the corporations themselves.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment. I think the Senator from Missouri will accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the seventh line of the amendment, after "be" and before "made," it is proposed to insert:

Relaid with the flat grooved rail and

And in the fourth line, second page, after "corporations," to insert "or persons," and after the word "owning" to insert the words "or operating;" so as to read:

The cost of making the changes herein required shall be paid by the corporations or persons owning or operating said street railroads.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There may be another place where the very same phrase should occur. I think there is one somewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator suggest an amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there is another place where the same words occur in the original text, and the same addition should be inserted.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The clerks will carefully inspect the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere matter of phrase. The clerks can put in. I wish to call the attention it in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment first be disposed

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks are inspecting the amendment to see if it needs any further corrections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While the clerks are doing that, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to his description of the court in which a suit may be brought. "The district court of the District of Columbia," I think the phrase is. There is not technically any such court. It is the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST. Let that be changed. I did not have the statute before me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would be proper to make that change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment first suggested will The CHIEF CLERK. In the second line of the amendment, after the word "companies," insert "or corporations operating or;" so as to read:

All street-railway companies or corporations operating or having tracks or road-beds.

And also at the end of the second page, after the word "corporations," to insert "or persons," and after the word "owning" insert the words "or operating;" so as to read:

And the cost thereof shall be collected from the corporations or persons respectively owning or operating said street railroads.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is one other matter of phrase about the description of the court that ought to be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On the last page strike out the word "District" and insert the word "supreme;" so as to read:

To be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia against said corporations in the supreme court of said District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should read "against said corporations or persons." The words "or persons" should go in there also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] if the amendment proposed by him to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri contemplates a change of rail to be immediately adopted on all the roads in the city?

Mr. DAWES. That would be the effect of it. It has occurred to me since its adoption that perhaps that would be pretty hard on some of the new outlying roads, where it would not be so necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri, if I remember the general proposition, requires the work to be commenced within thirty days and completed within a reasonable time, I believe it is stated. It seems to me it may involve a very great hardship on the railroad companies to compel them to adopt an entire change of rail in so short a time.

Mr. DAWES. It would. Mr. HARRIS. I have no I have no objection to their being compelled to adopt the very best steel rail within such reasonable time as may be allowed.

Mr. DAWES. It has occurred to me that perhaps in conference that will be required to be subjected to some changes that may meet the exigencies. I should not want to require the outlying roads in the suburbs to dispose at once of their rails and adopt the flat rail. It would be an expense upon them that would be unreasonable.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me assure the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendment as it is drawn does not require them to lay down any other rail than they have now, because they have a flat rail. They must conform the rail to the surface of the street. That is all that is required. Of course if they were to lay down a new rail it would take a year or two years. They could not certainly get a new rail and lay it down without a very large investment of money and without a good deal of time, but the amendment does not require that, I think. Its fair and legal construction does not require them to get a new rail, but it does require them to make the rail conform to the surface of the

Mr. DAWES. As to the amendment adopted, I think the Senator is Whenever they have any other than a flat rail they would be required to replace it within the time fixed there, which I think the Senator from Tennessee rightly says might impose a very great hardship if they were required to do it within the time limited in the amendment. I think, however, it may be safely adopted, and we can leave that to a conference, though if the Senator can suggest any language that would be certain, that would not leave these roads to take their own time for doing the duty which they ought to have performed twenty-five years ago, it can be inserted now.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senators who are familiar with the horse-railroads in the city of Washington one question. I have never been able to understand why the United States and the cities in the United States allow their streets to be absolutely destroyed by these horse-railroads. One day in Liverpool I hired a horse and carriage to take a ride, and I was riding through several streets where there were horse-railroads, or tramways, as they call them. I avoided them the same as I would here, but accidentally I got on the track and afterwards I had no occasion at all to avoid the railroad tracks. No one riding would have noticed that there was such a thing as a railroad track there. There was not the slightest disturbance to the carriage, and you could ride over it in any direction. You could ride over it lengthwise, and it would not disturb the carriage in the slightest degree. I got out of the carriage and examined the rail, and I found that it was a very simple contrivance. Instead of a T rail, such as we have here almost everywhere, it was a simple U rail, the flanges of the rail coming just level with the pavement, and the slot of the U not being large enough to admit of an ordinary carriage wheel.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are some of those rails here in this city.

Mr. FRYE. There are some here? Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are they?

Mr. SHERMAN. Right in front of the President's House. Mr. HAWLEY. Just in front of the Executive Mansion. Mr. FRYE. Why do we not make every railroad in the city have U rail?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be glad to go farther when we do that, and go to the extent of having new motive power. The railroad upon New York avenue has a most beautiful rail. You can go over it without disturbing your carriage in the slightest degree, riding right over it, and it is concreted between. Your carriage can go anywhere, astride the rail, or across the rail, diagonally, or in any other way.

Mr. FRYE. Since my return I have never been able to understand why so many cities in the United States allow their streets to be sacrificed in that way. Mr. SHERMAN. Nobody else understands it; but we do not require them to adopt this new rail. A new rail is not provided for by this amendment. What we ought to require is a new motive power; that is, either the cable or the electric motive power. In my judgment the electric motive power is now far in advance of any other.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he thinks that the New York avenue street-car line is a model with their columns in the middle of the street and their death-dealing wires hanging over the street on both sides?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad the Senator asks me if I think that is a model railroad. It has wires above, but there is no unsightly aspect about them; a straight, open way with the columns 200 feet apart. At night lit with brilliant electric light, it is rather beautiful than otherwise. The "death-dealing wires" would not kill a cat, I imagine. The evidence is conclusive that the wires carrying electricity sufficient to light are very dangerous, but that the wires carrying electricity sufficient to light are very dangerous, but that the power, according to the tes-timony of experts, required for moving these cars is not sufficient to cause death.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that if the whole power a dynamo machine can generate for propelling the cars to which the Senator refers was put upon the wire, he would experience only a slight shock if he should come in contact with it; but when you come in contact with the wire that furnishes the power to the arc light, it is a death-dealing power.

Mr. TELLER. They have not only the power necessary for the street car, but for the lights, and they have their columns in the middle of the street. I do not know myself where they get authority to use the streets in that way

Mr. HARRIS. It requires no other power than the one I have already described, which is absolutely safe.

Mr. TELLER. I may be wrong about it, but I do not think that is the proper way to use the streets. For one, I do not intend, when I have an opportunity to be heard—and we seem to be powerless about it to give my consent to the use of the streets of this city for that kind. it—to give my consent to the use of the streets of this city for that kind of locomotion, although I know that the Congress of the United States is not to be consulted in the matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he is to be understood as saying that the electric current which passes through the wire which moves the car on the New York avenue milroad is not dangerous to life?

Mr. HARRIS. I do desire and intend to be so understood.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator say that the current from those wires which moves the car might be applied to an individual and not hurt him; that it might pass through him and not hurt him?

Mr. HARRIS. That is the concurrent testimony of every expert ho has been examined on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has made sufficient examination to advance that proposition as one of which he is convinced?

Mr. HARRIS. There are 400 volts used—a volt is the unit—in the locomotive power

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senate that these colloquial debates are very difficult to report.

Mr. HARRIS. The utmost capacity, as I am informed, of the chains that generate the electricity will not exceed 500 volts, and about 400 volts is the power employed to propel the cars and to furnish the incandescent light upon the poles.

Mr. HOAR. I will state that the manager of an establishment near Boston, which is a very large one, employing many hundred workmen, brought to me a letter during the last Congress from a gentleman whom I know well, and in whom I have absolute confidence, representing him as a person entitled to very high confidence, who stated that the workmen in that factory handled the wires when they are charged to the full extent of the mechanism with electricity for the purpose of propelling horse-railroads with absolute indifference.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator whether he means that they handled the wires when the batteries were on?

Mr. HÖAR. Certainly.
Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator omitted to state that. I would not be alraid to handle them myself when the batteries are not on.

Mr. HOAR. Of course I did not mean to have that loop-hole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not feel that part of the charge.
Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that new discoveries are all the time being made, not only as to the method of applying electricity but as to the effect of it, and that recently it has been discovered that what is a perfectly harmless shock to one individual is fatal to another, and that which is perfectly harmless to one individual at one time is fatal to that individual at another time. No one as yet has been able to say when any particular individual is safe who comes in contact with these electric wires. Human life is at the mercy of conditions if these wires are within contact. Within a few days the dress of a lady in a parlor lighted by electricity, upon which she had some metal buttons or ornaments, coming in contact with the wire, was set on fire.

Mr. HOAR. That was electricity for lighting.

Mr. DAWES. I know it was electricity for lighting. Whether these electric wires be for lighting, or for power, or for any other purpose, we have not yet been able to understand when we are safe and when we are in peril, except when we know they are beyond our reach. We are not safe whether they are used for one purpose or another.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am glad to learn from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] nessee [Mr. Harris] and from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] that electricity passing through these wires is safe. I am glad to learn that we are getting-over the dangers. I do not understand how it can be, because certainly there have been many fatal accidents reported. Every day we see that some workman has been instantly killed by contact with these wires. But now it seems that there is no danger. I am glad of it.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, speaking from the standpoint of such information as I have been able to obtain by having a lot of experts before a committee to which I chance to belong, charged a lot of experts before a committee to which I chance to belong, charged with the duty by the Senate of investigating and getting such information as we could obtain upon this question, it depends upon the energy and the amount of the current, no matter what wire the electricity is conducted by.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It depends somewhat on the nature of the current, because there are two different natures.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says it also depends somewhat on the person.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is somewhat if not entirely mistaken in that declaration. Different nervous organisms will be affected differently by electricity; I do not know to what extent. But the information the committee derived from that investigation amounts to something like this: No accident or injury to human life has been known to occur where a volume of, say, 500 volts has been employed. In the moving of the cars to which reference has been made about 400 volts is the maximum of power used. The batteries employed here on this railroad can not generate exceeding 500 But the arc light requires from 1,500 to 2,000 volts, and that is far beyond the danger line. Wherever a man comes in contact with that power, there is very great danger, if not absolute certainty of de-struction of animal life. That is the state of the information that we derived from the investigation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not prepared to take issue with so much learning as the Senators are able to exhibit on this subject. I am very glad if the facts which they state are correct. I had not supposed that the power used upon the new railroad on New York avenue was so slight as the Senator from Tennessee says. I want to ascertain what his figures are exactly. I understand him to say now, and I repeat it in order that I may be accurate, that the current used in moving those cars is not greater than 400 volts, and that the batteries which create the current are not capable of more than 500 volts.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the information I have.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that the scientific testimony of experts is that the limit of danger is within 500 volts of electric power.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no danger to man or animal.

Mr. CHANDLER. So I understand the Senator from Ohio also to vouch for the safety of the New York avenue railroad, asserting distinctly to the Senate that the electric currents which are used for moving the cars on the electric railways are not dangerous, and that the only danger from these wires is from the electric-light wires. I understand that to be the information communicated to the Senate.

I have not so understood the facts. I shall be glad if they turn out to be true, but I am myself under a suspicion that there is a conspiracy among the promoters of these electric railways (who are not willing to put their wires under-ground, and who are determined to occupy and disfigure the streets and avenues of the cities of this country with their wires) to misrepresent the amount of power used in the electric railway, and I am sorry to say I believe it is true. I do believe it, and I believe that we shall learn this eventually to our cost.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. SHERMAN. I desire a short executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN, I desire a short executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not particular about it, but I am not quite in a condition to hear lectures on the subject of electricity. If we are going to continue with those lectures, I shall move to resolve this body into a committee of the whole or adopt some other method by which to get rid of them. I shall insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not hear a word the Senator says.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. SHERMAN. There will be but five minutes of executive session required. Mr. VEST.

I withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw my motion.
Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion to adjourn?

Mr. BUTLER. For the present.

Mr. VEST. I hope there will be a vote on the amendment I have offered.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with accompanying communication, a list of exhibits for the national military and naval museum; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHTING THE CAPITOL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimate of an appropriation for lighting the Capitol building and grounds for the fiscal year 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHEROKEE FREEDMEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with accompanying papers, a draught, and recommending the passage of a joint resolution to secure to the Cherokee freedmen the proceeds of certain lands under the act of March 3, 1883.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to enable the Secretary to divide the money heretofore appropriated to the proper owners among these Indians.

The SPEAKER. The Secretary incloses draught of a joint resolution, and recommends its passage, making more specific distribution of the $75,000 heretofore appropriated by Congress to the Cherokee freedmen, and states that under the legislation already passed he is unable to distribute this fund.

Mr. PEEL. That is correct, sir, and I ask unanimous consent to consider that question now.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution recommended will be read.

The joint resolution was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas whether this is the same matter to which objection was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OWEN] when its consideration was sought in the last Congress?

The SPEAKER. On the 19th of the present month the Chair laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War in relation to the British vessel State of Alabama, which was referred, it seems, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks that the reference be changed from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which the Chair thinks is the proper committee, and if there be no objection the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SHAW. I wish to submit a privileged report.
Mr. SOWDEN. I also have a privileged report to submit from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. RANDALL. Against these reports I must raise the question of consideration.

Mr. SHAW. I ask for the reading of the report which I have sub-

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution providing for the payment out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of James K. Edwards, late Official Reporter of the House, the expenses of his last illness and funeral, not to exceed $500.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not like to interfere with the Committee on Accounts, but the arrangement of yesterday was that I should go on today with the sundry civil appropriation bill. I do not want to discriminate as between gentlemen or subjects, and therefore I am compelled to raise the question of consideration against all reports at this time.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the report that I have sent up. Mr. RANDALL. These reports can wait for a day or two. It will not interfere materially with them.

Mr. SHAW. Rather than consume the time I will withdraw the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order, which is the hour for the call of committees.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the hour for the call of committees, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make from committees may file them as heretofore at the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not necessary first to dispense with the morning hour? Mr. RANDALL. It has been dispensed with. Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not the consideration hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is but one hour recognized by the rules, which is the hour for the presentation of reports. The hour for the consideration of bills may be cut off by the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills or revenue bills, which motion has been submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And takes precedence of that order? The SPEAKER. It does, under the rules of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills, and the Clerk will read the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12003) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading at the place where it ceased when this bill was last under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter no plan shall be prepared or approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for any public building authorized by Congress to be erected until after the site therefor shall have been purchased and paid for; and he shall not authorize or approve of any plan for any such building which shall involve a greater expenditure in the completion of such building, including heating apparatus, elevators, and approaches thereto, than the amount that shall remain of the sum specified in the law authorizing the erection of such building as the limit of the cost of the site and building after the site shall have been paid for. That hereafter the United States shall not be responsible for or chargeable with any expense attending the paying or repaying of any streets surrounding or adjacent to any public building constructed by the United States outside of the District of Columbia.

I make the point of order on lines 21 to 25. Mr. CONGER.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order. Mr. CONGER. The point of order I make is under clause 3 of Rule XXI, that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman refer to the law?

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman will restate the point of order.

We can not hear anything whatever over here.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that this is new legislation, and that under clause 3, Rule XXI, it is not in order in an appro-

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I have been unable so far to understand to what the point of order is addressed.

The CHAIRMAN. To that part of the bill beginning at line 21, on page 4, and continuing to line 25.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think this is subject to a point of order since it does not change existing law, and is but an affirmation of the law as it already exists. There is no lawful authority anywhere to impose taxes upon the Federal Government for the paving of streets adjacent to public buildings in any of the States or Territories. In other words, it is now the law that the Government of the United States is not liable to be taxed to pave streets adjacent to public buildings outside the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman refer to that law?

Mr. RYAN. It is a general principle of law that a State can not tax the property of the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. That has been decided over and over.

Mr. RYAN. That has been conceded and decided over and over again. Now, I might disagree with my colleague from Pennsylvania regarding the policy of the Government in respect to the payment of a tax for paving streets adjacent to public buildings; but it is the wellsettled law of the country, repeatedly adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States, that Government property is not subject to taxation by a State. Hence, this provision is simply an affirmation of Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly. Mr. CONGER. Why, if that has been settled over and ever by decisions of the Supreme Court, is it necessary to put it in this bill?

Mr. RYAN. It is idle legislation.

Mr. CONGER. Why put it in here, then?

Mr. RYAN. So far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of putting it in; but it is not subject to the point of order that it is new legislation, or that it changes existing law in any respect.

Mr. CONGER. So far as to its not changing existing law or being new legislation, it has been the custom of Congress to make appropriations in this very bill to pay for the paying of streets adjacent to its public buildings. It was done, I think, in the Forty-seventh and in the Forty-eighth Congresses; and if there is any legislation in regard to it at all, and if there are any precedents, they are in favor of the Government's paying for the paying of streets around its public buildings. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is but just that it should do so. Why should the Government build buildings in my town, or in any other town, and then not be compelled, as the city government compels private citizens, to pay for the paving of the streets and the laying of the sidewalks about its buildings? It is not only right, but it has been the custom of Congress to enact legislation upon this very bill to pay for this work. Therefore an enactment prohibiting this is new legislation and subject to the point of order I have made.

Mr. RYAN. As to the merits of the question, perhaps myself and the gentleman from Iowa would not disagree. But upon the point of order we do not expect order we do not agree.

Mr. RANDALL. There is not a deed of dedication for any Federal building that gives a State or municipality the right to enforce any burden whatever by any State or municipal government on such property; and the auxiety of localities to secure public buildings is such that they readily make provision that they shall not be subject to such taxation. The deeds of dedication in every case show that they are not to be subject to such charge.

Mr. ADAMS. If it is not fair play to do that in this Congress the present Appropriations Committee can answer it by refusing the appropriation, and if it is not fair play in some future Congress to make a similar appropriation the Appropriations Committee in that future Congress can be trusted to take care of the matter. But the effect of this provision is to prevent some Appropriations Committee in some future Congress from making an appropriation for this purpose, however fair and proper it may appear to be.

Mr. RYAN. It does not change the existing law.

Mr. ADAMS. It does change the law. The gentleman from Kansas says it does not change the law. Why? He does not maintain that there is any existing statute on the subject. All he says is that there have been repeated decisions of the Supreme Court covering this point. If that were true it would still change the existing law; for when you take the decisions of the Supreme Court and put them into the form of a statutory provision, it is a provision changing existing law within the obvious intent and purpose of the rules of this House.

Mr. RYAN. Does not the Supreme Court simply declare what the law is, and not make the law?

Mr. ADAMS. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not even true to the extent to which the gentleman states it, that the provisions of the Supreme Court do cover this case. He says that that court has frequently decided that the lands of the United States can not be sold for taxes. Admitted. But it is a defect in remedy and not a defect in liability. And, moreover, the obligation of the United States to pay for a street improvement is not an obligation to pay taxes. It is something entirely different from a tax.

Mr. RYAN. How can you enforce it? Mr. ADAMS. I do not say that you can enforce except by making an appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. But if it is a legal tax you can enforce it.

Mr. ADAMS. You can sell the land for taxes, and public lands have been sold for taxes in my State, but the tax provision is practically valueless. That is all. The United States could be sued if the Attorney-General chose to enter the appearance of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Has there not been a decision of the Supreme Court that taxes levied upon Federal property can not be collected?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know.
Mr. RANDALL. I think I do.
Mr. ADAMS. Very well. I say that that does not cover this point, because this is broader than a tax. The obligation to maintain a street in good condition around a Government building, where the wearing out of the pavements may be due mainly to the passage of mail-wagons, is not an obligation to pay a tax. It is another and different obliga-

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, the distinction that I see in the case is this: While it may be unlawful for a State or a municipality to levy a tax against the Government, this provision, if enacted into law, ties a tax against the Government, this provision, it chartest into law, then the hands of the Appropriations Committee in reporting an appropriation to pay for an improvement. At present the Appropriations Committee are not so tied, and were they to bring in an appropriation for the purpose of paying for an improvement a point of order would not lie against it; but if this clause is enacted into law, then the point of order will lie against such an appropriation hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it will bind the Appropriations Committee any more in the future than they are bound now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] if he can refer to any law or decisions covering this point.

Mr. RYAN. I have no decisions of the Supreme Court at hand, but I do not think any lawyer will maintain for a single moment that the State has a right to levy a tax upon Federal property. That has been decided repeatedly. I think the Chair can safely assume it to be admitted that the law is as I have stated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact that the doubt which now exists in the mind of the Chair is as to whether the proposition he presents covers the point under consideration.

In the one case the question is as to the right to tax; in the other it is as to the right to appropriate.

Mr. RYAN. If the Chair is rendering his decision I do not care to interrupt him, but—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). The Chair is not rendering a decision at this moment.

Mr. RYAN. But if I am correct in assuming that the State has not authority or power to levy a tax upon Federal property, then if the Appropriations Committee should report here in a bill an item to pay such a tax it would be a violation of existing law and subject to the point of order. The condition in that respect would not be changed by the proposition in the pending bill. If it is now unlawful for a State to levy a tax upon Federal property, then it would be out of order for the Committee on Appropriations to report in an appropriation bill an item to pay any such tax the Committee on Appropriations to report in an appropriation bill an item to pay any such tax.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the Chair to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] presents, in my view, the real point involved here. This is not a question of taxation, but a question of appropriation. In regard to the point about which the Chair made inquiry, there is no question as to what is the settled law on that point. Ever since the decision of Chief-Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, it has been the settled law of the land that no State can fax the property of the United the case of McCulloch es. The State of Maryland, it has been the settled law of the land that no State can tax the property of the United States; for if that could be done, then a State might tax the property of the United States out of existence. So Chief-Justice Marshall, in an opinion which, in my judgment, is the greatest ever delivered in this country—an opinion which gave vitality to the Federal Government, an opinion which determined the question whether or not we had a Federal Government; which in point of fact clothed the great skeleton of the Federal Government with flesh and blood and life—beld that "a State can not tax a branch of the Bank of the United held that "a State can not tax a branch of the Bank of the United States established within it." That is the decision in McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton. So that upon that point the law is fully settled.

But that is not the point here. This is not a question of taxation. If no State can tax the property of the Federal Government, then a State has no power to delegate any such authority to a municipality of the State, and therefore no city can tax the property of the United States. Hence, any procedure whatever which may be set on foot by a municipal government of any State undertaking to impose any bura municipal government of any State undertaking to impose any burden upon property belonging to the Government of the United States (without reference to whether or not the State may have withdrawn its jurisdiction from such property) is an absolute nullity and void.

But the real question presented here is another one—whether the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of the power conferred upon it to construct public buildings, to condemn property for public purposes, etc., shall have the power to improve that property according to its own judgment. There is no law whatever prohibiting that, and a proposition to that effect would be a change of existing law and a proposition to that effect would be a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of the Chair is that this clause is obnoxious to the rule—

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Clerk read.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to remark that in his view language more forcible and to the point than that embraced in the rule could not be employed.

Mr. RANDALL. When I asked the Clerk to read I thought the Chair had concluded his decision. I understood him to hold that the clause in the bill is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. TRACEY. I was unable to hear the decision of the Chair. Mr. RANDALL. The Chair has ruled that the clause goes out. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all legal services connected with the procurement of titles to sites for public buildings shall be rendered by United States district attorneys, and without extra compensation therefor: Provided further, That hereafter in the procurement of sites for public buildings, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to require of the grantors in each case to furnish, free of all expenses to the Government, all requisite abstracts, official certifications, and evidences of title that the Attorney-General may deem necessary.

Mr. REED. I desire to make a point of order on this clause, on the ground that it is a change of existing law. Under existing law, United States district attorneys can be paid for these services

Mr. RANDALL. What is the objection of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]?

Mr. REED. The objection I have to this paragraph is that it seems to me decidedly unfair to the United States district attorneys to oblige them to examine the title of property without allowing them payment therefor, because the principle upon which these officers are paid is that of piece-work, so to speak. They receive a salary which is merely nominal, which is in the nature of a retainer, and a very small one at that. I do not see any reason why they should be called upon to do work for the United States and receive no pay for it.

Mr. RANDALL. The matter involved here is the examination of titles to sites for public buildings, and it occurred to the committee that the disirict attorney living in the locality where it is proposed to purchase any site and erect a building is the appropriate officer to do this legal work in connection with the title rather than any one outside, and we have a sort of right to call upon him for service of this character.

Undoubtedly, but why should he not be paid for it? LL. Well, we think the district attorney receives suf-Mr. REED. Mr. RANDALL. ficient compensation in connection with his other duties to warrant the Federal Government in asking the performance of this work under the $200 clause

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will strike out the clause which provides that this work shall be done without extra compensation, and then let the rest of the paragraph remain. Mr. REED.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Maine—and when he comes to understand the effect of this provision he will at once see its propriety—that in the past the Government has paid extraor-dinary amounts for services of this character. I will cite a few cases to prove the necessity for legislation of this kind. When the Government of the United States came to secure a title in Brooklyn whereon the public building was to be erected in that city, I find a charge for that legal service of $4,985.

I find in the city of Baltimore—and these charges are all excessive,

Ind in the city of Baltimore—and these charges are all excessive, but they run down—

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does the gentleman know the amount of labor for which the charge of $4,000 was made?

Mr. RANDALL. I relieve them in this paragraph of that part of the labor by compelling the vendor to furnish the abstract. The gentleman will not contend the extortionate charge of nearly $5,000 in the city of Brooklyn for examination of title is just.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does that charge include the making of

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does that charge include the making of the abstract of title?

Mr. RANDALL. That in in connection with that site. That included what went to the lawyer or lawyers

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The custom of lawyers is for the purchaser to pay for the abstract.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know what the custom is.

I want to go on and show what the charge was in other places. In Baltimore the Government was put to the expense of $3,500 for law-yers' fees in securing a title to the property there. Here is the little yers' fees in securing a title to the property there. Here is the little town of Hannibal, Mo.; the Government paid $800 for getting a title in that town. In Pensacola, Fla., it paid $527, and so on all the way through. In some twenty or twenty-five places there is an expenditure in that connection of $15,000. Now we want to break that up.

Mr. REED. Were these sums paid to the district attorney?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not able to answer that.

Mr. REED. Were they just sums? Were they proper sums?

Mr. RANDALL. I think they were outrageously high.

Mr. REED. Why, then, did the Department pay them?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not able to answer that. I can only answer for myself for myself.

Mr. REED. Is it not the presumption that they were fair charges?
Mr. RANDALL. I suppose the Department paid those sums believing they were due, or ought to be paid; I do not know what to say in answer to that question. But when I present this case of $5,000 to secure title to a building in Brooklyn, the gentleman, good lawyer as secure title to a building in Brooklyn, the gentleman, good lawyer as he is, must admit it is extravagant.

Mr. REED. If it is extravagant I think you should be able to show us the items which make it so. If the Department has paid out this large sum of money the presumption is it was paid because it was due. If it is due you propose to force the district attorney with his salary of $200 to do all the work for which the Department of Justice has seen fit to pay $5,000 in one instance, $3,000 in another, and $800 in another. It would be a trifle unjust to the United States district attorney. It may be these items for which $4,000, $3,000, and $900 were paid were items which are covered by the other portion of this amendment to which I have no objection. I do not think it is just to the district

Mr. RANDALL. In Brooklyn the charge was made an arbitrary one, being 1 per cent. upon the purchase-money or cost of the lot. I judge in some degree that is the mode of charge in other cases

But I am not here to defend the action of the Department in this direction. I am trying to correct what the committee believe to be a useless and extravagant expenditure of the public money. I want hereaster to provide that the vendor of such property shall supply this information to the Government and that then the district attorney of the locality shall make an examination and report to the Department upon it without extra compensation.

Mr. REED. Why not modify the proposition so that the Department of Justice may be at liberty to pay the officer a fair compensation for the additional work, as they do in other cases? All I am contending for is merely what I conceive to be an act of justice.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that an officer of this Government who is already paid a fair salary—ranging in the neighborhood, I think, of $3,000 a year—should be willing to assume a little extra duty, and that the district attorney ought to be public-spirited enough when the Congress of the United States has exhibited its willingness to erect a public building within his bailiwick, to do that additional work for the Covernment of the United States in addition to his other duties. It Government of the United States in addition to his other duties. It can not be very considerable.

But I am not tenacious about the manner of doing it. If the gentleman can show any proper way that is better to cut off this extravagance—this utterly unjustifiable expenditure of the public money—I am quite willing.

Mr. REED. Why not strike out that portion of it which provides that "this shall be done without extra compensation therefor" and allow the Department of Justice to pay what is reasonable for the service rendered

Mr. RANDALL. Because that would nullify the very provision itself and remit us to the same condition of affairs of which we now complain. They might come right back and say "You may pay the same percentage that private parties are compelled to pay for such service."

Mr. REED. Well, if private parties pay that why should not the Government?

Mr. RANDALL. Because primarily no private individual would have done so in the case of Brooklyn.

Mr. REED. Then the Department of Justice ought never to have paid it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not, also.

Mr. REED. Then the remedy would seem to be not to have the Department of Justice force such duties upon the district attorneys for nothing. They certainly are entitled to some compensation for it. It is not a fair thing. The Department of Justice day after day pays district attorneys for what work they perform. They do not undertake to appeal to the patriotism of the attorney to serve the people and the Government for nothing, but on the contrary we raise money on the patriotism of the people and distribute it pro rata in proportion to the work done, and our patriotism is supposed to be equal to the amount of property we have. Is that to be the rule?

Mr. RANDALL. The only defense in the Brooklyn case, as I understand it, was that the lawyers there had been in the habit of charging

1 per cent. commission as their rate for the transaction of such business; but I assume that was in ordinary cases and that no individual would be willing to pay 1 per cent. on a purchase of $500,000. I take it that a smaller sum would have been agreed upon. I do not believe that any individual would have been willing to pay that amount.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I will state to him that that is the uniform rate in New York. The lawyers pay that, no matter what the amount of the purchase may be.

Mr. REED. I think the object of the gentleman would be accomplished without that clause. But as it stands, it certainly seems to me a piece of gross injustice.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not so intended.

Mr. REED. I know it was not so intended, but that is its effect.
Mr. RANDALL. It is intended to break up, root and branch, one of the most unjustifiable expenditures to which this Government is subjected.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Why not say that they shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, because a lawyer may say to his fellow what was a reasonable compensation, which would not be accepted by a layman. There is no definite line.

Mr. REED. There is no definite line, precisely, for professional remuneration, and hence you have got to leave it to somebody to decide what is proper. It is a good deal better than refusing all compensitions.

Mr. ROGERS. If I can have the attention of the Chair for a moment, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask if the gentleman from Maine made any point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maine to raise an objection to the paragraph.

Mr. REED. I made the point of order in regard to it; but I suggested to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, upon striking out that clause, I would have no objection to the remainder of the paragraph. I dislike to interpose this point of order, which is an illustration of the one-man power, but I shall have to do it if the change is not made, for I regard it as a piece of injustice which ought not to be enacted into law

Mr. ROGERS. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment, I wish to state that I know nothing whatever of the extravagant charges to which the gentleman has alluded. Of course we would all of us naturally sympathize with any effort on his part to curtail extravagant and improper appropriations; but I submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is one aspect of the case, as well as one argument in regard to it, which I think he has overlooked. The mere furnishing of an abstract by the party who wants to sell property to the Government does not relieve the Government or the Government counsel, who represents the Government, from the responsibility and duty of verifying the correctness of the abstract. There are one or two cases within my own knowledge, and I apprehend about which there is no complaint whatever as to the rates, where officers of the Government have been compelled to go a hundred miles where a new court was to be located for the purpose of making an examination of title.

In a case of that character he leaves his court. He goes to the place where a new court is to be located and remains there a sufficient length of time to examine the titles. He pays his own expenses to and fro, his hotel bills, etc., and when he gets back home he gets his salary, but gets not a solitary cent for his services under the provisions of this bill as now prepared. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it seems to me, would at once recognize that this is an injustice to the district atthe this duty is to be imposed upon him. Therefore, if this provision is to go into the bill, it should be limited in such a way as that the Department would be allowed to pay at least such sums of money as the district attorney may have expended for the purpose of paying his own individual expenses. So I make this suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, without arguing at all the question of the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I understand the gentleman from Maine to make the point of order against the proviso

Mr. REED. I make it against the section, but I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he will strike out that clause I will withdraw all objection.

Mr. RANDALL. All right, then. We will have it to do. Strike out the words "and without extra compensation therefor."
Mr. REED. That is all right.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to offer this amendment after the words without extra compensation."

The CHAIRMAN. That is out now.
Mr. ROGERS. I beg pardon.
Mr. RANDALL. That goes out on the point of order; I admit that that is subject to the point of order, and therefore I had no remedy except to take what I could get.

Mr. ROGERS. I am in some doubt yet as to what has been done, Mr. RANDALL. We have stricken out that proviso, and provide We have stricken out that proviso, and provided that hereafter the district attorney shall do the work and the Department can pay for it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before that shall be adopted—

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been adopted. It went out on the point of order.

Mr. SPINOLA. I was desirous of expressing my views in regard to it. I wish to have a limit inserted, that for the searching of a title to a given piece of property in any State of this country, or in any large

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up his amendment? Mr. RANDALL (to Mr. SPINOLA). What do you want to make the limit?

Mr. SPINOLA. Not to exceed $250.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "that hereafter all legal services connected with the procurement of titles to sites for public buildings shall be rendered by United States district attorneys," "at a charge not to exceed $250."

Mr. SPINOLA. Now, sir, for the examination of the title for the Brooklyn city post-office I think they charged $6,000. Between $5,500 and $6,000 was the fee which was paid for the examination of that title. The examination of the title of that piece of property could have been made in one day. No question could have arisen of any character whatever that would have left the least cloud on the title of that preparty that certain flyerities or certain pate were all title of that property; but certain favorites or certain pets were allowed to charge between $5,500 and $6,000 for that service. It was an astonishing thing to the people of Brooklyn. It alarmed them, and they at once came to the conclusion that there was something wrong in the appropriation for the purchase of the site when the attorney for the examination of the title alone was allowed to charge

Now, sir, I am willing that our legal friends shall be well compensated for their services; but if they form a combination upon the floor of this House to take care of themselves against the people, then I will have to be against them. That is all there is about it. Two hundred and fifty dollars is what I want to go in, and I appeal to the good judgment of this House to adopt that amendment.

Mr. RYAN. The amendment will need to be modified. "without extra compensation" have been stricken out, and you should put it "at a compensation not to exceed $250 in any case."

Mr. SPINOLA. That is what I want.

Mr. REED. I care very little about this matter. It is not worth any great amount of argument. I do not know who are concerned about it, or who will be; but certainly $250 would be a very small, niggardly compensation for the United States to pay for looking up the title of a very valuable piece of property. If the United States were to pay $250 it would be likely to get but $250 worth of work and no more; and it might be very desirable that it should be more.

I can conceive of a case where the title of property might be very difficult to look up, where the property might be very valuable, and where the responsibility of the person who looked it up would be very onerous, and it seems to me that a proposition to limit the compensation to $250 in every case is a piece of mistaken economy arising from want of knowledge of what legal services actually are. It sometimes happens that legal services which take a short time to perform are nevertheless very valuable and carry with them an amount of responsibility of which the time occupied is no indication or measure. Everybody knows that where large amounts are involved and the responsi-bility is greatly increased a lawyer always gets from the world at large greater compensation, and I know of no reason why the United States should not pay a fair compensation in such cases except a survival of should not pay a fair compensation in such cases except a survival of the old idea that the king ought to command the services of his subjects for nothing, and that whatever he gives them is a gratuity. I supposed that we had got beyond that idea in this country, and that we gauged every man's patriotism on a level and expressed it by the taxes we exacted from him, and then proceeded to pay him for any services that he rendered without whining or begging him to take less simple homes the recovery less of the property of the state of services that he reintered without winning of begging him to take less simply because he was working for a rich client.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SPINOLA. I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed]. In the first place, the kind of property to which the gentleman refers is not a kind that the Government is likely to want to buy; and in the second place, as to his reference to the king's subjects, they were subjects of the Republican party to whom I referred, these men in Brooklyn who charged the Government $5,600 for doing work which the very first lawyers in Brooklyn would have been glad to do for $250.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do you know that?

Mr. SPINOLA. Therefore, sir, I am not surprised that our friends here desire to have the same system continued under the incoming administration. Now, let us look at this matter a little further. bill contains the following proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter, in the procurement of sites for public buildings, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to require of the grantors in each case to furnish, free of all expense to the Government, all requisite abstracts, official certifications, and evidence of title that the Attorney-General may Therefore, Mr. Chairman, under this clause in the bill the grantor has got to furnish all these proofs, and I think that $250 to a lawyer for simply running his eye over the documents after the grantor has furnished them is very liberal compensation.

Mr. REED. All I have got to say is that if the United States pays only $250, it will never get more than $250 worth of work.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will guaranty to furnish as good lawyers as there are in the city of New York, experts in this very line of work, real estate, who will do the work for that figure.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SPINOLA, and it was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer, by instruction of the committee, the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 2, after line 18, insert :

"For court-house and post-office at Fort Smith, Ark.: For iron fence and approaches, including stone flagging for sidewalks, $15,000.
"For public building at Frankfort, Ky.: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the persons named in House Executive Document No. 83, Fiftieth Congress, second session, the sums severally ascertained to be due them for labor and material supplied for the construction of the court-house and post-office at Frankfort, Ky., $6,119.18."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONGER. Where does that amendment come in?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to have it placed where

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 2, line 13. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] asks unanimous consent to return to page 2 of the bill-

Mr. RANDALL. I object. Mr. CONGER. We are on that page now. We have just returned to it and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has offered an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has modified his motion so as to have his amendment come in on page 5 of the bill. Mr. CONGER. Let this one come in on page 5, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HOLMES. I wish to inquire of the Chair or of the proper committee why there can not be provided a copy of this appropriation bill for each member of the House. There seems to be a great deal of "economy and reform" in regard to the printing of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a matter over which the Chair has any control.

Mr. HOLMES. I was simply inquiring why it is that a copy of this appropriation bill is not provided for each member of the House. Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. RANDALL. The number printed, I believe, is 1,500.
Mr. HOLMES. It is reported to us this morning that there are no copies of the bill to be had.
The CHAIRMAN. The number of bills printed is fixed by law, and the Committee of the Whole has no control over the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Nor the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. HOLMES. Still it would seem to be a matter of privilege connected with the business of the House that each member should be provided with a copy of the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Des Moines, Iowa: To defray the expense paying alley adjoining court-house and post-office at Des Moines, Iowa,

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that there is no authority of law for any such appropriation. The dedication of property to the use of the United States contains a stipulation that the Government shall be free from any such charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to be heard a moment upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. The appropriation proposed here is for paving a 20foot alley which adjoins the Government building in the city of Des Moines; it is practically the approach to the building, so that the building can be of no use to the public—can not be used for the purpose for which it has been erected—unless this alley is paved. This amendment proposes only that the Government shall pay one-half the expense. I notice on page 3 of this bill an item providing an appropriation for "approaches" to the post-office at Rochester. That may mean merely the steps by which the building is reached or it may mean the side-

Mr. RANDALL. The "approaches" referred to are exclusively on the ground owned by the Government of the United States. The idea of the Government paving an alley in Des Moines upon ground which it does not own is something quite novel.

Mr. CONGER. This building can not be used for public purposes without this alley. It is a 20-foot alley between the Government building and the adjacent buildings. You can not approach the Government building with a mail-wagon for the purpose of unloading it without the use of this alley, and in order that it may be used the alley must be paved, otherwise for nine months in the year it can not be used.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I am undertaking to show that the point of order is not good, because this alley is an approach to the building, and the building can not be used without it, and in the legislation which provided for this building this very thing was contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order well taken.

Mr. LAWLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for repairs and preservation of custom-house building at Chicago, Ill., $50,000.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no estimate for that. The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman from Illinois desire this amendment to come in?

Mr. LAWLER. Immediately after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

While there is no estimate for this, I wish to state that $158,000 was asked a year ago for repairs and preservation of this public build-Mr. CONGER. Where does that amendment come in?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to have it placed where it belongs alphabetically in the bill. I am not certain as to the line.

ing at Chicago; but the amount appropriated was only $28,000. There is a portion of that building the wood-work and walls of which have not been painted since the building was completed. The $28,000 appropriated in the last appropriation bill has been about all expended. For four years we have been asking for money enough to put this building into proper condition; and I submit that this large public building at Chicago should be allowed $50,000 for repairs.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, the committee has endeavored, as far as it could, to provide for the repairs of this building; but an examination of the appropriations heretofore made in this connection goes to show that a large portion of the amount asked under the head of repairs has gone in fact for salaries. There is no estimate for this appropriation; and I hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. LAWLER. The statement just repeated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was made when the last appropriation bill was being considered. I wish to say that the only officers on the pay-roll in connection with these repairs were a superintendent and a clerk. Those are the only two officers on the pay-roll now.

Mr. RANDALL. There ought to be a superintendent there without reference to repairs.

Mr. LAWLER. Wait one moment—

Mr. RANDALL. But there is a superintendent of repairs, attending to nothing else.

Mr. LAWLER. I wish to say that in this bill there is found for this building only an item of $2,000 for clocks. We have been en-deavoring for four years to obtain money for ventilating the building. No public building in the United States is more crowded to-day, there being a vast amount of work at that building as a general distributing point. It seems to me I am asking but very little for the third largest city in the United States when I propose that the House allow $50,000 for the purpose of putting in repair a building which cost over $6,000,000—a building which, since the time of its completion, has not seen paint on its walls or door-frames or other wood-work in the rear portion of the building.

I repeat the assertion—as the chairman of the committee in the consideration of this bill before raised that same point, that this appropriation was eaten up by salaries—that there are but two men on the salary-roll at this building, a superintendent and clerk.

I do not like to set myself up against the Appropriations Committee, but all our recommendations for four years have not received the slightest attention. We got only the meager sum of $28,000 last year when we should have a sum sufficient to supply adequately all needs of the service at Chicago. I say it is bad treatment to a city like Chicago when you have this bill up year after year, and see the liberal appropriations made in other cities not one-third the size of Chicago.

Mr. RANDALL. On three or four occasions we made this appropriation. This year no estimate was made. Of course it did not include any appropriation for any money required in this connection, as it can get it out of the $200,000 of the general fund which we know according to the estimates is for this general character of work.

Mr. LAWLER. When the Secretary of the Treasury did make his estimate for $158,000 for general repairs and preservation of the building at Chicago last year why did not the committee give it to Chicago?

Mr. RANDALL. I should dislike to be governed by the estimates made in connection with public buildings in the United States.

Mr. LAWLER. One word more. I wish the House to understand about the $200,000 for general repairs of all buildings in the United States and say that it would not give the city of Chicago $1,000. One year ago the Secretary of the Treasury made a recommendation for $800,000 for the preservation and general repairs of public buildings in eight large cities in the United States, and the Appropriations Committee never appropriated a dollar of that, but let us come in under the $200,000 of general appropriations. We can not get a dollar of that fund.

Mr. RANDALL. It is all expended each year. Mr. LAWLER. It may go over to Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL. It did not.
Mr. LAWLER. It did not go to Chicago.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word. Whether there is an estimate or not the gentleman knows better than I do.

Mr. RANDALL. I am able to say there is absolutely no estimate.

Mr. ADAMS. But the fact of the needs of that building in Chicago is unquestioned. I know it from personal inspection. I can verify every word my colleague has said. There is need of painting, of which my colleague has spoken, and there is need of ventilation. I supposed that would have been done out of last year's appropriation. The question is not what was done last year, but what is the absolute need this year. There is need of ventilation for the clerks who work there in the basement.

There can not be the slightest possible question in my mind, for I have been through it on purpose to ascertain the fact.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says we have $200,000. Yes, but that is for the whole country. If Chicago takes $30,000 or $40,000 of it some other city has to suffer. We need, according to the facts made by my colleague, a special appropriation for Chicago for the purpose of relieving the clerks in that building, or rather we need to put the building in a condition of repair.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no estimate, and it will be seen at once what the result would be if we appropriated without an estimate.

Mr. ADAMS withdrew his formal amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. LAWLER's amendment. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert the words "to complete repairs." The gentleman will not object to that. Mr. LAWLER. If he will make the appropriation $150,000 I will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert the words "to complete repairs," The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

Devil's Island light-station, Michigan: For establishing complete a light at Devil's Island, Apostle Group, Lake Superior, Michigan, $15,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to make a change in line 3 of this amendment, and also in line 5, by striking out the word "Michigan" and inserting "Wisconsin." It is an error which appeared in the first estimates, but has since been corrected.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the building of a new keeper's building at Bear Island light-station, Maine, $3,750.

For a light and fog-signal on Great Duck or Long Island, Maine, $30,000.

For a light at Green Island, near the entrance to Burn Coat Harbor, Maine, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not in accordance with existing law.

Mr. REED. There could be a law for it if the gentleman would not interfere. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. But as there is no law for it I can not make a dis-

Mr. REED. But if you will not interfere for a moment there will be a law.

Mr. RANDALL. But I must treat all alike, and however much I may sympathize with the object of the gentleman's amendment, I am compelled to perform what I conceive to be my duty under the circumstances and to make the point of order. The Committee on Appropriations has taken from methe power to do otherwise.

Mr. REED. But it has not taken from the gentleman from Pennsylvania the power to be silent on this point, and as I have said, if he will not interfere

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will get the Committee on Commerce to make a report in this connection and the House and the Senate to act jointly upon the bill, and the President to sign it, just as soon as there is a law for it the gentleman will find me providing an appropriation with alacrity.

Mr. REED. That is to say, the gentleman will not interpose an objection if it will be futile. [Laughter.]

I want him to refrain from interposing an objection now when his objection is effective. This is recommended by the Light-House Board, should be remembered.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no man in the House that I would run to do a favor quicker for than the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. That is the first time, I may be permitted to say, that am sorry that a sense of public duty on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been so strong. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For establishing new life-saving stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States authorized by law, $50,000.

Mr. McADOO. I want to ask unanimous consent to go back to that portion of the bill which makes provision for lighting the rivers and

Mr. RANDALL. There is so much confusion that I can not hear the request of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the request of the Light-House Board, I am simply asking now unanimous consent to go back to that portion of the bill providing for the lighting of rivers and harbers, to offer an amendment appropriating $1,000 to light the jetties on the Raritan River between the bay and New Brunswick.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not reached that part of the bill yet. It is further on. Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 2, on page 11, as follows:
"For the establishment and maintenance of a refuge station at or near Point Barrow, Alaska, on the Arctic Ocean, $15,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I must reserve the point of order,

I want to say that I recognize with the gentleman from Massachusetts that this is an appeal to our humanity, and that it is in the cause of humanity; nevertheless I interpose to make the point of order—
Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to state that this is reported by the Committee on Commerce, and pre-sents a different case from the other amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. Unanimously reported.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know how to yield without being inconsistent

Mr. DAVIS. The urgency is so great that I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a pretty close corner to drive a man into.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit the question.

There was no objection, and the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RANDALL. What has become of my point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted the question and there was mo objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I do not see but that this transfers my complaint from the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the Chairman of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. That is just what I expected you to say. [Laugh-

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the revenue-cutter service: For pay of captains, lieutenants, engineers, cadets, and pilots employed, and for rations for the same; for pay of petty officers, seamen, cooks, stewards, boys, coal-passers, and firemen, and for rations for the same; for fuel for vessels, and repairs and outfits for the same; ship-chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; traveling expenses of officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; instruction of cadets; commutation of quarters; for protection of the interest of the Government on the Seal Islands and the seal-otter hunting-grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and miscellaneous expenses which can not be included under special heads, $925,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the importance of what I regard as a necessary amendment in this connection, that is to enlarge the provision a little in the twelfth and thirteenth lines where the language is used:

For the protection of the interest of the Government on the Seal Islands, etc.

I suppose the object of that paragraph is to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, or rather that is one of the objects of the provision, and yet the words "the seal fisheries" are not mentioned. I simply suggest to the gentleman that he insert after the words "protection of," in the twelfth line, the words "the seal fisheries in Behring Sea and the waters of Alaska." so as to make it sure that under this appropriation it is intended to provide a certain sum for the protection of seal fisheries, and with the consent of the gentleman I will send up an amendment making the language here a little broader.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the words "protection of," in line 12, page 11, the following: "The seal fisheries in Behring Seaand other waters of Alaska and;" so that it will read: "for protection of the seal fisheries in Behring Sea and the other waters of Alaska, and of the interest of the Government on the Seal Islands," etc.

Mr. RANDALL. We have used in this paragraph the same lan-guage that has been used for many years. I do not think the language is objectionable.

Mr. DUNN. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in order that the House may understand the importance of the language used by the amendment proposed, that for the protection of the seal it is not merely necessary to protect the Pribylov Islands. The trespass upon our fisheries and seals is rarely made on these islands. The unlawful destruction of seals takes place in the Behring Sea, from 10 to lawful destruction of seals takes place in the bearing sea, from 10 to 60 miles from these islands, where the seals go during the season when they are hauled out on the islands. They go out for food during the time the females are having their young. The investigation that we have made in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries shows that the destruction of seal life in the open sea by unauthorized and unlawful hunters extends all the way from one to two and three hundred thousand seals per annum—greater, very much greater, than the take of seals authorized under the contract with the Alaska Commercial Company, and the law for their protection can not be too strong.

Mr. RANDALL. I fully concur in the object that the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Arkansas who has just taken his seat have in view, and I therefore do not feel called upon to object to the insertion of these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employés, other than plate-printers and plate-printers' assistants, $363,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired. For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each, when employed, and for royalty, at not exceeding 1 cent per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $376,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United Statas notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired: Provided further, That there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Engraving and Printing Bureau.

For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, $174,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LANDES and Mr. FARQUHAR rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES].

Mr. LANDES. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to raise the point of order against a provision in the section just read. The provision that I desire to antagonize reads as follows:

And for royalty, at not exceeding 1 cent per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that that changes existing law. Mr. FARQUHAR. It is impossible, Mr. Chairman, to hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. LANDES. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this provision is obnoxious to the last clause of the third subdivision of Rule XXI, which provides:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

And in order to simplify the presentation of the point I will state, in calling the attention of the gentleman who has this bill in charge to what I am about to state, I understand the object of this limitation to be to prevent the use of steam plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. That I understand to be the object, and that will be the effect. Under this section of the rules is not that a change of existing law in this respect? I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether I am correct in that view? Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that this provision is subject to the point of order, and I state that outside the merits of the question, and for this reason: There is no law fixing the payment of a royalty for the use of these presses at all. It is a contract under which the pat-entees are paid $1 per thousand impressions. Now, it has always been held here that the House had the power to place a limit or restriction upon the amount provided for in this bill, and as to the manner in which it should be expended, and for any work that might be proper. I say further that the practice for many years has been to place limits on apropriations, because it is claimed that there is no authority under the statutes for any officer of the United States to make a contract involving an expenditure of public money beyond twelve months.

Mr. LANDES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, has failed to answer my question.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I will try to answer it if the gentleman will repeat it.

Mr. LANDES. The question I propounded to the gentleman was: Will not the effect of this legislation be to prevent the use of the steam plate-printing presses?

Mr. RANDALL. I believe it would; and I will say why it is inserted here. At the last session of this House there was passed unanimously (at least I am so informed, as I was not here) a bill which in so many words provided for the displacement of these steam-presses. The committee did not go so far as that, however, because the committee recognized the fact that the Government of the United States had an ownership in these presses at a cost of $1,400 each, or thereabout, and they concluded that it was not desirable to remove them from the Department at all, even though the use of them might be by law prohibited.

will also say frankly that, from what I can learn from these contractors, the effect of the reduction of the royalty from $1 per thousand to 1 cent per thousand impressions will be to prevent the use of these presses in the bureau.

The Chairman desired to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES] simply on the point of order, and not upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. LANDES. The point of order is simply this, that the provision will change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the existing law to which he refers?

Mr. LANDES. It would take me a considerable time to review the history of the use of the steam printing-presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, so I will confine myself at present to the provision in the statute which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses.

Mr. LANDES. Now, Mr. Chairman, since the enactment of the law which has just been read, the Secretary of the Treasury has entered into a contract with the patentees of these presses, by the terms of which contract he has agreed to pay them the sum of $1 for every thousand perfect impressions produced by the presses. I hold that contract in my hand.

Mr. FORAN. Does it fix the term of the contract, its duration, how long it shall continue in force?

Mr. LANDES. It is to run as long as the presses are used.

Mr. TRACEY. Will the gentleman give the date of that contract? Mr. LANDES. The agreement is dated the 30th day of September, I will read a portion of it:

And the said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to and with the said parties of the first part, in consideration of the foregoing covenants, to pay the said parties of the first part or their assigns the sum of $7,500 for the construction of six of said Milligan presses; the said sum to be paid as follows, to wit: The sum of $1,250 when each of said presses shall have been delivered at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, and shall have been inspected and accepted as satisfactory, both in construction and in operation, by the proper officers of that bureau, and a royalty of $500 for each press on its delivery to and acceptance by the chief of said bureau, and a further royalty for the continuous use of said presses of $1 for each one thousand perfect impressions thereafter printed thereon, and to keep and furnish the parties of the first part a true and correct account of the number of impressions so printed.

Mr. FORAN. Does not the gentleman think that Congress has the right to terminate that contract at any time?

Mr. LANDES. I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that I hold that a contract made by an officer of the Government in pursuance of law is binding upon the Government. That is the very question that is now submitted to the Chair upon this point of order.

Mr. McADOO. Suppose the Government officer did not have the light to solve the government officer did not have the right to make the contract, do you think it would be binding in that

Mr. LANDES. No, sir; not if he had no authority to make it. Mr. FORAN. Is there any authority in law on the part of any Government officer to make a contract to pay a royalty?

Mr. LANDES. I will say to the gentleman that in 1878 the introduction of the steam plate-printing presses into the Bureau of Engraving and Printing occurred, and the contract was made by the Government with the patentees to pay $1 for each thousand perfect impressions made by those presses—

Mr. FORAN. But my question is, is there any authority of law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, or anybody else, to pay any such royalty?

Mr. LANDES. I am about to state the authority. Since that time from year to year, with the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, before the Congress of the United States, we have gone on appropriating and directing the payment of royalty to the patentees of these presses, and this particular clause which it is now proposed to inject into the appropriation bill is a novelty.

Mr. FORAN. Another question: Does an appropriation to pay a royalty extend beyond the year for which the appropriation is made?

Mr. LANDES. I will answer in the language of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. This question was suggested, I think fairly, in the last Congress to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], when an amendment was offered, in effect prohibiting the payment of royalty upon the use of these press I think that amendment was offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADoo].

The amendment was:

Amend by striking off these words, in lines 5 and 6, on page 14: "And for royalties for the use of steam plate-printing machines."

Mr. Ryan. The effect of that would be to prevent the use of the presses now owned by the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not the power to do that; the law and the contract

Mr. FORAN. I am not asking what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said last year; I am asking the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDES] himself with reference to this contract.

Mr. RANDALL. There is nothing inconsistent in my position on this question. This provision proposes to put a restriction upon the amount to be paid for royalty; it does not strike out the provision for

Mr. LANDES. But the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has stated to the House that the effect of this limitation is to prevent the payment of any royalty by striking down the use of the machines; and I take

Mr. RANDALL. The contractor so said to me.
Mr. LANDES. I take it that the gentleman can not do indirectly what he himself confesses he can not do directly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman answer another question? Is there anything in that contract which compels the Government to continue the use of the machines?

Mr. FORAN. There is nothing except authority to purchase and operate the machines.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to know whether there is in that contract one word which compels the Government to keep on using these machines.

Mr. LANDES. The language is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall buy and operate the machines, whatever that may mean.

Mr. Chairman, I have made this point of order for the reason that unless it be sustained or unless this paragraph be amended, there will be an expenditure of money to the extent of more than $100,000 for the accomplishment of a purpose which can be accomplished without such expenditure; in other words, the additional expense incurred by the Government to do the work which these machines do amounts, according to the statement of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to the sum of $102,000; and in the interest of economy I have deemed it my duty to interpose objection to this clause.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to ask my friend a question for information. If I understand his point it is to this effect—that this arrangement between the Secretary of the Treasury and the owner of these patents was not in the nature of a contract, but in the nature of the acquisition of property in a patent for which the Government stipulates to pay a certain sum, and that thus it stands upon a different footing from the case where there is a mere contract from year to year to render service.

Mr. LANDES. That is the point I was endeavoring to make to the Chair.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was not here when the gentleman first stated his point. Now, I wish to ask him another question: Does he understand the Secretary of the Treasury to be clothed with power to make such a contract; that is, to acquire an interest in a patent and the right to use a machine, and to stipulate that the payment shall be in the manner provided in this contract?

Mr. LANDES. The law which was read by the Clerk covers, I think, that ground exactly

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was out of the Hall when that law was

Mr. RANDALL. That brings us to the inquiry what law was read—whether it was the appropriation bill of last year or not? I ask that it be read again, together with the title of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1887. Proviso under the head of "Engraving and printing:" "Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and approved plate-printing presses."

Mr. LANDES. Now, I only desire to say that, in pursuance of the authority contained in that clause, the contract was made by the Secretary of the Treasury stipulating to pay $1 for every thousand im-

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend will observe, however, that the provision of the act just read—and I say this without reference to what he may propose—is that any part of the sum appropriated may be used for purchasing and operating machines, etc. Does the gentleman think that that provision authorizes a contract which would be continuous, requiring payment from year to year during the life of the patent? In other words, does the gentleman understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to buy this piece of property—that is, a patented device—for the use of the Government, and that in purchasing it he can contract in such a way as to require appropriations from year to year, for instance, for seventeen years, the life of the patent? Do we change the law when we refuse to make that appropriation and provide that the machines shall not be used hereafter

Mr. LANDES. I think so, sir.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this law, it simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use any portion of this appropriation for the purchase and operation of improved machinery. Now, it may be admitted that this contract was made; but suppose the machinery should prove inoperative and the work unsatisfactory, is it to be supposed that the contract would be binding, and that the Secretary of the Treasury would have to continue the use of these machines, though turning out defective work?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In that case there would be a failure of consideration.

Mr. FORAN. Well, take the other view of it. Is this contract to be eternal or to continue only from year to year? Have we not the right to terminate it at any time?

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the point of order involved here is whether this House has the power in this way to put a limitation or restriction upon the amount provided for in this paragraph, which is to go to the payment of royalties. I took the position before that to strike out entirely the provision for the payment of royalties would be in effect a provision for discontinuing the use of these machines. While I am on the floor I want to oppose that which seems to have got into some minds, that the officials of this Government, in the face of a direct statute to the contrary, can involve the Government for a period over one year.

Mr. LANDES. What, then, did the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean when he said in this House on June 18, 1888?

Mr. Randall. We have not the power to do what the law and contract prevent. We have tried as far as we could to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to make inquiry to see whether that royalty could not be got rid of.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he will see by the terms of the contract he has not done so.

Mr. RANDALL. They have gone beyond the realm of their power.
Mr. LANDES. They have purchased their machine and then agreed that they shall pay a dollar of royalty for it without saying a word for how long

Mr. McADOO. So far as the point of order is concerned it seems to lower the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation in overruling the point of order.

Mr. LANDES. We have no power to do that.

Mr. RANDALL. I neversaid we had not the right to say how much money should be appropriated. I am here as the representative of my

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. House, under the rules, has the right to make any limitation for the fiscal year on any appropriation it makes. As to rights under contracts, that is a matter for the courts and not for the Chair.

Mr. LANDES. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 9 and 10, page 12, strike out the words "not exceeding 1 cent per thousand impressions."

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order on that amendment.
Mr. LANDES. I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that unless this amendment prevails, according to the declaration of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Government will be prevented from using seventeen or eighteen steam printing-presses, which it now owns and is now using at a great saving to the people of this country. In 1878 the first one of these machines was purchased. It gave satisfaction, and from time to time additions have been used and for the set of the second from the set of the second from time to time additions have been used and from time to time additions have been used to the second from time to time additions have been used to the second from the second faction, and from time to time additions have been made until now the Government owns seventeen or eighteen of these presses, and is operating nineteen of them.

Mr. RANDALL. Eighteen of this particular kind.
Mr. LANDES. Eighteen the Government owns at this time. All the $1, $2, $5, and $10 silver certificates have been for many months, according to the chief of that bureau, printed on these presses.

Mr. RANDALL. Only the backs.

Mr. LANDES. The backs only. They are not intended to print the faces, as I understand.

According to the statement of our officers, if these presses are discontinued it will cost more than $102,000 per annum to do the same work by hand plate-printers, work no better in quality, no better in style, than the work now turned out by these presses.

I understand that the plate-printers of the Government are to-day making war upon these steam-presses. Because the presses them selves do as much work as three, or four, or six, or eight men there seems to be a hostility against the use of the steam-presses, and the question is, inasmuch as we have the testimony of the chief of the bureau, of the superintendent of the bureau, of experts and bankers of the country, that the work is entirely satisfactory, can we afford to drive out these presses for which the Government has paid something like $20,000, and perhaps more, and incur an expense of $100,000 in order to add to the force in that institution of 160 employés?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LANDES. I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman go on for five minutes longer.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LANDES. In order, Mr. Chairman, that there may be no doubt about the quality of work, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read copies of three letters written to the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing from gentlemen whose opinions on the subject ought to be of value, and I do this to corroborate the opinion of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, New York, October 8, 1888,

PIBST NATIONAL BANK, New York, October 8, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of 3d instant, the silver certificates of series of 1886 seem to me an improvement over all other issues of notes since the original legal-tender greenbacks, and I see nothing in them to facilitate counterfeiting more than in other series.

We have seen in the bank very few counterfeits of the certificates, and did not regard those as more dangerous than others we have seen or had.

Trusting that this gives you all the information you desire, I am,

Yours truly,

GEORGE F. BAKER, President,

E. O. GRAVES, Esq., Chief of Bureau Engraving and Printing, Washington, D. C.

THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK, 128 BROADWAY,
New York, October 4, 1888.

New York, October 4, 1888.

Dear Sir: In reply to your note of yesterday asking my opinion of the design, engraving, and printing of the United States silver certificates of series 1886, especially of the backs, I take pleasure in saying that they seem to me to be of excellent quality in every respect. The backs of them all, which I have carefully examined, are in printing, and in every particular, in the best siyle of the engraver's art, and I see nothing in them to condemn, but everything to commend their workmanship.

I have also seen a counterfeit of each of the one-dollar and five-dollar notes. They are such miserable imitations of the genuine that a glance at them by the least experienced observer would show them to be spurious. They have never caused us annoyance. The faces of them are bad and the backs are worse.

Yours, very respectfully,

GEORGE S. COE, President,

E. O. GRAVES, Esq., Chief of Bureau, Washington, D. C.

CONTINENTAL NATIONAL BANK, 5 AND 7 NASSAU STREET, New York, October 5, 1888.

DEAR SIE: Your favor of the 3d instant is received, asking for an opinion concerning the silver certificates of the series of 1886, as to the design, the engraving, and the printing—especially the printing of the backs. We have accordingly examined them anew critically, only to confirm the opinion we had already formed as to their excellent design and admirable work in every particular; and as far as there being any appearance of deterioration in any part of the work as compared with former issues, or anything which would in any way facilitate counterfeiting, we entertain quite the opposite opinion.

As to the counterfeits of the one-dollar and five-dollar certificates, those which have come under our notice have been of very poor quality, and we have been subjected to no loss by them.

Very truly, yours,

EDW'D D. RANDOLPH, President,

E. O. GRAVES, Esq., Chief of Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LANDES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read an extract from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The Clerk read as follows:

The clerk read as follows:

The steam-power plate-printing presses have continued in successful operation during the year. The quality of their work has steadily improved, and it can now be said without qualification that all of it is equal to that done on the hand-presses. All the backs of the new silver certificates of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, and $10 have for many months been printed on them. For evidence of the quality of their work it is only necessary to inspect the backs of these certificates. In clearness, sharpness, and uniformity of impression and all the qualities which tend to prevent successful counterfeiting, they are up to the highest standard.

The steam-presses are now printing much more than one-third of the work of the bureau with a great economy of room, labor, and expense. The cost of the printing done by them is less than $80,000. To print the same work by hand would cost $180,000, or $100,000 a year more. There has also been in use for many years a number of steam-power typographic presses, on which are printed, from steel dies, the tints on many varieties of internal-revenue stamps and the seals on United States notes, silver certificates, and national-bank notes. To replace all the steam-power printing-presses with hand-roller plate-printing presses would add nearly $200,000 to the annual expenses of the bureau, and would make it necessary to enlarge the building occupied by the bureau in order to provide room in which to do the work.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be, after the discussion of last year, simply thrashing over old straw to go over all of this dis-cussion again; but I think the House will be impressed, after hearing from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], who has investigated the subject as chairman of the investigating committee, and who proposes to now address the committee in regard to this question, as to the feeling on the part of the bureau in sustaining the use of these es there

Mr. FORAN. And you know why?

Mr. McADOO. Certainly I know why; I understand it perfectly.

The present chief of the bureau takes it very foolishly as a personal matter that his official capacity is to be somewhat dimmed if the Congress of the United States undertakes to set up its wisdom as against the infallibility of that gentleman. He is a good man, weighing a respectable number of pounds.

Now, sir, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Landes], I wish to state in the first place that we dispute as to the saving to which he has referred. We assert that the chief of the bureau has not made a fair comparative statement of the relative cost of work done on the steam-presses as against the hand-presses. He has omitted from his statement, as I am informed, some very important facts; first, the payment of royalty, which amounts to $500 on each press. That is omitted altogether from his statement. He has omitted the cost of wasted certificates and bills which are destroyed or rendered useless by the operation of these presses. He has omitted the cost of the steam-power.

Mr. FORAN. Also the cost of the patterns.

Mr. McADOO. Also the cost of the patterns, as my friend suggests; and we assert and will vindicate the assertion by an almost unanimous array of testimony of experts and bank presidents throughout the United States, and also by a letter from the chief of the secret service, that this mode of printing injures the fiber of the paper so as to make counterfeiting simple and easy. Why, sir, the Government securities and notes ought to be printed on the very finest paper, and should be engraved in the highest style of the art, and printed with the utmost skill and care. In order to do this the press work must be done with the most exacting care. It is impossible to get a machine to do that work with that fine and delicate touch with which the expert printer will do it by hand.

The result of printing them on a steam-press, with a powerful pressure applied, is to bake out the paper; and if any man present—for members of Congress are generally poor—is the fortunate possessor of one of these silver certificates he will find that if it has been in use for six months or a year the bill has gotten into a most disgraceful consists and the property of the present of the pres dition and is certainly not fit to be used as currency by the people. Why, Mr. Chairman, a comparison of the bills printed for the Canadian Government, which I have seen, and those printed here on our steampresses makes our currency look absolutely disgraceful. I have in my hand three silver certificates of the denomination of $1, and one of them is a counterfeit, and I might challenge every member of this House to take the three bills and select from among them the one which is a counterfeit. I do not believe any man present can do it. If you are poor, you are all honest, so that I will hand them around.

Counterfeiting is accomplished readily by reason of the work done by the presses, and it is not confined alone to the silver certificates, which, as I have said, are short-lived, and are in a disgraceful condition after a few weeks' use, but counterfeiting is also carried on in internal-revenue stamps; and I have in my hand an item from the New York Herald where reference is made to the arrest of a party in New York for having a counterfeit bill in his possession, or attempting to pass one of these bogus silver certificates, which was said to have been

We are tempting the criminal ingenuity of the whole world by the wretched manner in which our work is being done.

Mr. LANDES. Will the gentleman allow a question?

With pleasure. Mr. McADOO.

Mr. LANDES. What expert banker or Government officers have ob-iected to the quality of the work done by these presses?

Mr. McADOO. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. The chief of the secret service, Mr. Bell himself, and my friend from Alabama knows, for he has the papers, which I have not had the opportunity of examining, that a number of bank presidents and leading experts have called attention to the same fact.

Mr. LANDES. I hope the gentleman will have read the testimony of Chief Bell.

Mr. McADOO. I will do so with pleasure. I will accommodate the gentleman at once, and ask to have read now a letter which I send to the desk. I might also, if I had time, have read his startling and emphatic testimony before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Treasury Department, Secret Service Division, Office of Chief, Washington, D. C., September 22, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 21st instant, making certain inquiries regarding counterfeit internal-revenue stamps and United States silver certificates (1886 series), and in reply thereto beg leave to state:

stamps and United States silver certificates (1885 series), and in reply thereto beg leave to state:

1. Internal-revenue stamps, printed from lithograph plates made by Paul Bernon, captured July 17, 1859, in the city of New York. At the same time, July 17, 1859, one Achille Patti was arrested at Snake Hill, N. J., 6 miles from Jersey City, and on his premises were found lithograph plates for printing 10, 16, and 60 pound tobacco-stamps, 31 internal-revenue manifest-stamps, and 60-pound tobacco-stamps, printed from plates engraved by Hart L. Pierce; plates and stamps captured from Robert B. Clark, October 30, 1859, in New York City; one-cent proprietary stamps, printed from plate engraved by Hart L. Pierce; plates and stamps captured from deave the printer, October 31, 1869, at Prince's Bay, Richmond County, New York.

A plate containing fifteen transfers for one-cent proprietary stamps, made from the same die as above, was captured from one John Story March 3, 1870, at Pleasant Plains, N. J. This plate was made for G. C. & D. Howard, proprietors of a match factory in New York. The stamps were all printed by the abovenamed John Rippon.

One-fourth-barrel heer-stamps, printed from lithograph plates by N. H. Traubol, of Camden, N. J.; plate captured March 7, 1870, from one Frank Mackey, in Philadelphia, Pa.; plate contained fifteen impressions.

Four-ounce tobacco-stamps, discovered July 9, 1872; printed from copper electrotype plates (14) captured from one Joseph Beckemeyer, tobacco manufacturer, July 19, 1877, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

These counterfeits were all discovered by reason of deficient workmanship.

2. Counterfeit silver certificates, series 1885; $1, portrait of MarthaWashington; $5, portrait of Grant; two different issues.

The above have been discovered up to the present time, and up to date would estimate the number of persons arrested in connection with the above counterfeit notes to be about thirty.

I am, sir, very respectfully.

JOHN S. BELL, Chief.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK, United States Senate.

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. SAYERS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. McADOO.

Mr. McADOO. In addition I want to say that the chief of the secret service in conversation with me has had no hesitation whatever in declaring as his belief that the steam printing of these bills does lead to easy counterfeiting, and I have the personal assurance of the present superintendent of the Engraving Bureau, Mr. O'Neill, that justice is not done to the engraver's work in that bureau when the bills are printed

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of my friend from Illinois to the amount of money which this company is getting from the Government. They have struck a rich vein. In the first place, $1,250 is paid for the presses; $500 in addition for each press by way of royalty, and $1 for each 1,000 sheets or impressions by way of further royalty. Besides that, the Government has been repairing the presses, and the chief of the bureau himself last year returned to the Government an item of expenditure for repairs of the presses upon which this heavy royalty is exacted the sum of very nearly $8,000, and in addition to that it is charged by those conversant with the matters in the bureau that this sum of $8,000 does not represent the whole amount which the Government has spent in repairing the presses. For the purpose of calling the attention of the committee more clearly to the exact condition of affairs with regard to this contract, let me read a brief extract from the contract under which the presses have found their way into the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of this Government:

And it is mutually understood and agreed between the parties hereto, that this purchase of the right to make and use the preses aforesaid is for the purpose of a more thorough test of the economy of the press, and that the price paid for the same shall not be a basis for any future purchase of other like

Mr. Chairman, what does that mean? Gentlemen, it means this, that this company says, "Give us an opportunity to make a test of the powers of our presses, and for the purpose of making this we will sell you a press at $1,250, with $500 royalty, $1 per thousand impressions; and if it is a success, and if we can do the Government work satisfactorily upon these presses, we are not bound by this contract, but we will raise the price."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from New Jersey answer a ques-

Mr. McADOO. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. If all these things are true, how do you account for the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury favors the continuance of the use of these same presses?

Mr. McADOO. I never could nor attempted to account for the action of many of the officers of the Government. And I am not aware of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury had done that. I was under the impression that he rather favored the reduction of this amount of royalty, but that can not have anything to do with the facts of the ease. We have the same evidence upon which he passed and our committee favors the hand-presses. Ithink, moreover, that the Secretary takes no decided stand in this controversy.

Mr. LONG. Only one word, Mr. Chairman. I think the House should understand exactly what the question is before it. The bill proposes that the amount paid as royalty on these presses shall be cut down from a dollar a thousand to 1 cent a thousand impressions. That is a reduction from $18,000 a year, which we have been heretofore paying, to $180 a year. I trust the House will notice that enormous reduction. Instead of paying for these valuable machines $18,000 a year, according to the contract which we have made, and by which we year, according to the contract which we have made, and by which we are saving the Government $100,000 a year, we now propose to pay them the absurd sum of $180 a year. In other words, we propose to pay them nothing for the use of their property.

Mr. FORAN. Will my friend permit a question?

Mr. FORAN. Will my frie Mr. LONG. In a moment.

The necessary result of this must be that they will refuse to allow us the use of their property. It is perfectly well understood that they will refuse to allow us the use of their property. In other words, the object of this innocent-looking amendment is to prevent us from using these machines at all and from securing for the Government the economy and reduction of expenses which their use affords.

Now, why is that done? In order to answer that question you must go back to what is the real issue at stake. It is an issue between those on the one hand who believe in the invention and use of labor-saving machinery as better for the Government and in the long run better also for labor, and those men on the other hand who tend to the belief that wherever there is labor-saving machinery it should be put out of use, in order, as they say, that more manual labor may be employed.

An extension of the same principle would compel us to abolish the use of labor-saving machinery in the erection of public buildings. It use of labor-saving machinery in the erection of public buildings. The would lead us to take from the Printing Office all labor-saving machines. The real question, therefore, at issue here is whether this House will, in the matter of its engraving, permit the extended use of labor-saving machinery for the benefit of the community and of labor itself, or go back to manual labor. That question is a fair one. It is a perfectly fair question. Those who hold one side or the other of it have a right to be heard on this floor. But the proper way, and the honest and square way, to raise it is to introduce a bill directly abolishing the use of these steam plate-presses.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That has passed the House already.

Mr. LONG. Wait a moment. Such a bill as that was introduced at the last session.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It was thoroughly discussed on the floor. Mr. LONG. And passed the House, and is now pending in the Senate, and the Senate is now giving hearings respecting the abolition of the steam-presses. On that question one side has there been heardthose who were opposed to the use of the presses. The other side, which is the Government—the Secretary of the Treasury, the Superintendent of Printing and Engraving, and others-have not yet been heard, but are awaiting a hearing.

In other words, that question is in the Senate, and there it ought to be settled, and we ought not to interfere with it in this way. ing these plate-presses, and having made a contract by which we have agreed to pay for their use, if we continue this use we ought to appropriate a sufficient sum for that purpose.

But is it well to give up the use of these steam-presses? That depends upon the question whether they save the Government anything and whether they do good work. Mr. Graves, one of the best officers of this Government, thoroughly unimpeached, says upon his official honor that the use of these steam plate-presses saves the Government $102,000 a year. He says that he does reckon in this showing the cost of the repairs. He says the whole repairing of his establishment is done by five machinists, that those machinists work upon the steam platepresses and also upon the hand-presses, and that if you abolish the use of the steam plate-presses those five machinists will still have to be retained, so that there will be no saving in that respect. You have first a direct saving, as I have stated, of $102,000 a year. Second, you have a very large saving in an indirect manner. For by means of these steam plate-presses we are enabled now to bid ourselves for the printing of postage-stamps, and by bidding we compel other persons, the printers of these postage-stamps, to print them thousands of dollars less than they were doing before.

Then the next question is, is the work done as well? Of course parties interested against the machines say the work is not done as well. But who is the party interested here for the Government? The Secre-But who is the party interested here to the dovernment of the treatury and the Superintendent of Engraving and Printing. The Superintendent of Engraving and Printing says officially upon his honor that the work done by the steam plate-presses is equal to that done by the hand-presses and is up to the highest standard. I to that done by the hand-presses and is up to the highest standard. I defy any man here to go into that bureau, as I have done, and examine the back of a bill printed on the hand-press and another printed on a steam-press and tell the difference between them. Letters have been read here from presidents of banks and other parties interested in this question, who give testimony to the same effect, that the work done upon the steam plate-presses is just as good as that done on the hand-presses, and that counterfeiting is not encouraged by the use of the steam plate-printing presses. There are 197 men now employed in the engraving of these bills. The building was crowded to excess when there were 230. Even then it was overcrowded. If you do away with there were 230. Even then it was overcrowded. If you do away with the use of the steam plate-printing presses you will require 286 men to do the work that is now done by 197. You will have no room for the increase and will have to build a new building to accommodate

I undertake to say that there was never a more absurd proposition made in an enlightened age before an enlightened House representing the American people than the proposition to abandon the use of these steam plate-presses. They are the result of the inventive genius of our people. The man who invented them died in poverty. He left a wife and children. He left creditors who had aided him in procuring money to carry on the work. Some large returns have been received from the use of these presses during the last few years, I think about $45,000; but a large portion of that must have gone to repay the money which he had borrowed and which stood as a charge against his estate, how much I do not know. If the royalty for the use of these presses is too large, reduce it.

When the proper time comes I will, in order to give an opportunity for debate as to the value of the use, move to substitute in place of 1 cent, 50 cents or 75 cents per thousand impressions. This can be done, for the contract is not for the life of the patent, but is of such a nature that the Secretary of the Treasury can at any time decline to use the presses at all and so pay no royalty, or can say he will use them if he can have them at a reduced royalty. It is, therefore, a perfectly fair question for us to consider whether we can save anything upon the present price of using these presses. In other words, is the price now paid too high? Mr. Graves, the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, says that the use of these presses saves us $5 for every dollar that we pay in the way of royalty. It saves us a hundred thousand dollars a year. I believe that the royalty we have hitherto paid, therefore, was not excessive at the time. But if it is now, let us reduce it. But do not put these people off by refusing to pay anything at all for the use of their property.

If we do not want their machines let us say so, and let the Senate pass the bill for their disuse. But, as long as we use the machines, let us not refuse to pay for using them. Mr. Chairman, eighteen of these presses are the property of the Government, and if the patentees refuse to let us use them for nothing they will lie idle on our hands, and you will have eighteen steam plate-presses, the product of the inventive genius of this age, lying useless while you will be compelled to put fifty additional men into your building in order to do the work, although it will not properly contain more than are employed there now. As I have already said, I will at the proper time move to substitute for 1 cent per thousand impressions either 50 cents or 75 cents, as shall be determined upon consultation. I append to my remarks the following statement by the Superintendent of Engraving and Printing, Mr. Graves. It answers concisely the question of economy and of the character of the work done:

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING STEAM-POWER PLATE-PRINTING PRESSES,

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING STEAM-POWER PLATE-PRINTING PRESSES,

1. The printing done by the steam-power plate-printing presses now in use in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is up to the highest standard, and is fully equal to that done on the hand-presses. All of the 2 and 4 ounce tobaccostamps have been printed on them for many years. They have for many months printed all of the backs of the $1, $2, $5, and $10 silver certificates and of the $10 and $20 United States notes and a portion of the 50-cigar stamps. This work has been done to the entire satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Treasurer of the United States, and not a word of complaint concerning it has been received from any public officer, banker, or private individual. (See last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, page xli, and report of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, page 7.)

On the contrary, letters have been received by the chief of the bureau from some of the most experienced and distinguished bank officers in New York testifying to the excellent quality of the work on the silver certificates as regards both the engraving and printing. Among these are George S. Coe, president of the American Exchange National Bank; George F. Baker, president of the First National Bank, and Edward D. Randolph, president of the Continental National Bank. Their letters are as follows:

The American Exchange National Bank, 128 Broadway,

Honal Bank. Their fewers are as John Mark, 128 Broadway,
THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK, 128 BROADWAY,
New York, October 4, 1888,

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of yesterday, asking my opinion of the design, engraving, and printing of the United States silver certificates of series 1886, especially of the backs, I take pleasure in saying that they seem to me to be of excellent quality in every respect. The backs of them all, which I have carefully examined, are in printing, and in every particular, in the best style of the engraver's art, and I see nothing in them to condemn, but everything to commend their workmanship.

I have also seen a counterfeit of each of the one-dollar and five-dollar notes. They are such miserable imitations of the genuine that a glance at them by the least experienced observer would show them to be spurious. They have never caused us annoyance. The faces of them are bad and the backs are worse.

Yours, very respectfully,

GEORGE S. COE. President.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, New York, October 8, 1888.

DEAR SIE: In reply to yours of 3d instant, the silver certificates of series of 1886 seem to me an improvement over all other issues of notes since the original legal-tender greenbacks, and I see nothing in them to facilitate counterfeit-

We have seen in the bank very few counterfeits of the certificates, and did not regard those as more dangerous than others we have seen or had.

Trusting that this gives you all the information you desire, I am,
Yours truly,

GEORGE F. BAKER, President. E. O. GRAVES, Esq., Chief of Bureau Engraving and Printing, Washington, D. C.

CONTINENTAL NATIONAL BANK, 5 AND 7 NASSAU STREET, New York, October 5, 1888.

New York, October 5, 1888.

Dear Sir: Your favor of the 3d instant is received, asking for an opinion concerning the silver certificates of the series of 1886, as to the design, the engraving, and the printing—especially the printing of the backs. We have accordingly examined them anew critically, only to confirm the opinion we had already formed as to their excellent design and admirable work in every particular; and as far as there being any appearance of deterioration in any part of the work as compared with former issues, or anything which would in any way facilitate counterfeiting, we entertain quite the opposite opinion.

As to the counterfeits of the one-dollar and five-dollar certificates, those which have come under our notice have been of very poor quality, and we have been subjected to no loss by them.

Yery truly, yours,

EDW'D D. RANDOLPH, President,

EDW'D D. RANDOLPH, President.

2. The nineteen presses now in use effect a saving of $102,147.30 a year. The cost of the printing done on them, including the amount paid for royalty, is $79,316.69. To do the same work on the hand-presses would cost $181,463.99 (House Report No. 3546, on sundry civil bill). The saving is therefore 56.3 per cent. These figures are not a matter of estimate, but of exact calculation from the records of the bureau, based on the work now being done. They do not include the cost of repairs, or of the spoiled work, for the reason that the difference between those two items on the two different classes of presses is inconsiderable. The principal item in the cost of repairs is the wages of the machinists. Only five machinists are now employed upon the general work of the bureau, including the repairs to steam-presses, and it would not be possible to reduce the number even if all of the steam-presses should be replaced by hand-presses. The following statement shows the cost per thousand impressions of printing by hand and by steam the securities now printed by steam, including labor, repairs, royalty, steam-power, and spoilage:

Character of work,	Hand.	Steam.	Saving.
Certificate and note backs	$6.472 9.722 10.222 14.222	$4.146 5.349 4.337 5.549	Per cent. 38.8 44.9 57.5 60.9

3. To print by hand the work now being printed by steam would require the services of 89 additional plate-printers, increasing the number from 197 to 296, The largest number of plate-printers ever employed in the building now occupied by the bureau was 230, and the bureau was then greatly overcrowded, many of the employés being compelled to work in rooms unfit for human occupancy. The number required to do the present work by hand is 56 larger than the highest number of printers ever employed in the bureau. It would be ulterly impossible to provide accommodations for this number of printers and their assistants in the building, and the bureau would be unable to execute the work required for carrying on the various departments of the Government.

4. The question of discontinuing the use of the steam-presses is now pending before the Senate Committee on Finance. Should the bill now under consideration by that committee become a law the use of the steam-presses will be discontinued without any further action by the House. The committee thus far have heard only the persons favoring the passage of the bill. The chief of the bureau, who is opposed to the passage of the bill. The chief of the bureau, who is opposed to the passage of the bill. The chief of the bureau, who is opposed to the passage of the bill, and the witnesses whom he expects to produce have not yet been heard. He is prepared to prove by the testimony of the experts of the bureau and of other experts in engraving and printing that the work printed on the steam-presses is equal, if not superior, to that printed on the hand-printed impressors that the steam-presses effect an economy of more than 50 per cent. in the cost of the printing executed by them, and that the witnesses summoned in support of the bill were utterly unable to distinguish between the hand-printed impressions and the steam-printed impressions when specimens impartially selected from the daily work of the bureau were submitted to them. In nearly every case the hand-printed impressions spring. The stamps are now printed on steam-presses by a private company. If the bureau is forbidden to use the steam-presses, it will be unable to compete successfully with private companies for this important branch of the printing of public securities.

Mr. FORAN. I desire to say to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, in reference to what he says about the ownership of these machines, that the Government constructs the machines and pays for the construction $1,250 for each machine. Then it pays the patentee a royalty of $500 on each machine, and in addition to that $400 for the use of the patterns while it is constructing the machine—the patterns to be returned as soon as the machine is constructed.

Mr. KILGORE. Does not the Government own the machines?
Mr. FORAN. Certainly it owns them.
Mr. KILGORE. They are Government property?
Mr. FORAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. But it pays a royalty for the use of them?

Mr. FORAN. Yes. It pays $900 for the right of building and using each machine. Another thing in response to my colleague. I think his statement as to this being a fight between people who desire that machinery shall not be used and those who desire to avail themselves of improved processes is somewhat misleading. Speaking for myself, I may say that I have always been in favor, and always will be in favor, of the use of labor-saving appliances and of the most perfect labor-saving machinery that can be produced, because I believe that the use of improved labor-saving appliances is going to solve the social problem of the future. But this is not a question of that kind. This is a question as to cheapness in the end. I do not think that Mr. Grave has dealt fairly with this House in regard to these matters. He has not dealt fairly with this House in regard to these matters. He has not put in or given the real items of expense. He has not put in the cost of repairing these machines, which amounts, so far, to $8,000. He has not put in the wastage and destroyed and defective notes, and he has omitted various other items. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts also that the American Bank Note Company of New York, which prints some of the best notes and checks in the world, does not use these machines. They are not used by England; they are not used by France; they are not used by Canada; they are not used by any country that desires and intends to put in circulation a first-class cir-

There are some things that machinery can not do. One of the things it can not do is to print a first-class steel engraving. Machinery has been tried in the setting of type, but it has not proved to be a success, and perhaps never will be. Wherever machinery can be used-successfully I am in favor of it; but in this instance I think the general consensus of opinion among those who are competent to judge is against it in printing Government securities. The work is so defective that it is easily counterfeited, and the people suffer in the end from bogus currency. Besides, the notes do not wear so well or last so long, and re-issues are therefore oftener. This machinery does not save. Its use really entails a loss in the long run.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. LANDES. Before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTER-WORTH] proceeds I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I presume my colleague [Mr. FORAN] can take another occasion to answer the question, and it will not consume any more time than now.

Mr. Chairman, the real question before this House is whether these machines perform the work as well as they ought to? Has good judgment been used in utilizing these presses as labor-saving machinery? Is the work they turn out of such character that it can be easily counterfeited? The friends on my left assert that the work is so poorly done that its bad character is palpable to even the casual observer who has ordinary intelligence.

If that statement is true—if it approximates to being true—then the Secretary of the Treasury and the superintendent of this bureau have been guilty of gross dereliction of duty; they ought to be impeached; they ought to be removed from their offices. Their duty in those positions is to determine what the best interests of the Government require. If it is true that these machines do work of such a character as to encourage counterfeiting—if the work done by hand-presses is so greatly superior—then the machines ought to be put out, and that promptly. We have the evidence of the Secretary of the Treasury and the superintendent of this bureau and of experts that the work is good, and I will not do or say anything that tends to impeach the high integrity of those officials. I am myself in doubt about the merits of

But there is one phase of this question to which I wish to call the attention of the House and the country. One thing is clear—that the organization of hand plate-printing, a branch of the Knights of Labor, have declared war upon these machines and have determined that they shall "go," If the machines ought to "go" upon their merits, then amen; but if they ought not to "go" upon their merits, the fact that these gentlemen desire to have them "go" is not the least reason in my mind for putting them out.

Now, I want to ask my friends whether, when they investigated this matter, they ascertained whether men employed in the bureau were free to come up and give their testimony touching the character of this work? I am advised—and I spoke to a member of the committee who represents the Knights of Labor in this matter-that when men who work the steam-presses go to their work in that institution, when they go to attend these plate-printing presses, they are hissed and hooted; they are insulted upon the street and when they go to their meals because they work upon these presses and earn the salaries which the Government pays them. I do not know as to the truth of these charges except that men in the bureau tell me that they are true. charges are true, and there is no redress for these men, then the Secretary of the Treasury and the superintendent of that bureau ought to be removed for not vindicating the right of men in this country to earn bread where and as they can get a contract to earn it. [Applause.]

Mr. FORAN. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAN. Has not one member of the committee informed you distinctly and emphatically that that was not true?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am coming to that. I shall state this

If this is true, and if I had been superintendent of that bureau, the man who hissed would not have come into the bureau again if I could have prevented it. Probably, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Long], the superintendent did not know who the men were. But I insist that this is still America, and some of the rights of freemen linger with us still; and my boy has a right to work without asking the permission of any combination or association of men in this country; and when he can not, I am in favor of revolution.

[Applause.] I want to say to my friend that I have been assured by men who work in that establishment-constituents of minethey were hissed in the bureau and upon the street, and that the "Dead March" was whistled as they moved to their work. If that is true, it is an outrage, an unspeakable outrage. And that act is alleged to have taken place within the shadow of this Capitol, and no redress afforded!

A young man, a member of the committee, who seems to be a thoroughly fair man, called upon me, and I called his attention to this mat-ter. I said to him, "Do you gentlemen propose that we shall not use labor-saving machines in this country?" He replied, "No, sir; far from it; we are in favor of labor-saving machinery. We simply assert that in this case the labor-saving machinery does not meet the just re-quirements of the situation." "That is fair," said I. I may not give the exact language, but I give the substance fairly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] will be recognized, and as the Chair understands he yields to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I said to this young man, "I understand that when these men leave the hand-presses to go to work upon the machine-presses they are hissed; and if that is true," said I, "the men who hissed should be promptly put out of that building." To that he wordd. He said "That is no part of our purpose or policy." He told agreed. He said, "That is no part of our purpose or policy." He told me—and I want to be fair about this matter all the way through—that the hissing arose from this fact: that on the occasion of a meeting of the Knights of Labor of this union, one gentleman who was a hand plate-Anigns of Labor of this union, one gentleman who was a hand piate-printer was vociferous in denouncing every man who would go from a hand-press to a power-press—if I may use that expression—and that the first man to do this very thing was this brother who had been so vociferous in the meeting; and thereupon for the purpose of "guying" him some of the men indulged in this little demonstration, and which the young man speaking to me did not approve; and he stated that his brethren on the committee, and he believed a majority of the members of the union did not approve it. of the union, did not approve it.

Nevertheless it took place, and I am assured by others it is very un-comfortable over there for those who call in question the necessity and comfortable over there for those who call in question the necessity and propriety of putting these power-presses out of that bureau.

I wish simply to put myself in the position before this House of one protesting against this body becoming the mere passive instrument for registering the will or the bidding of any society or combination of individuals, by whatever name they may be christened. [Applause.]

I believe in standing by the blacksmith, not because he is a blacksmith, but because he is a man. I believe in standing by the carpenter, not because he is a carpenter, but because he is a man. When we have anything but moral and intelless.

pass beyond that and begin to make anything but moral and intellectual worth, true manhood, the measure of the rights and obligations of a citizen, we are entering upon a most unfortunate period of our country's history, for we will not be extending, but abridging, the area of human freedom and the range of individual opportunity.

A committee was appointed to look into the character of this work, and I have been solicitous to know, and I ask the question in all can-dor, whether all the printers in the bureau felt absolutely free to testify over there, as they would have done had it not been for a reign of terror established, if there was a reign of terror, and I do not say

Mr. FORAN. By Mr. Graves or by the Knights of Labor, which?
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, my friend—
Mr. FORAN. Who has the right to discharge over there?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We have nearly reached a condition of things in this country when nobody has the right to discharge and no individual the right to employ an American freeman without permis-

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I recommend the Knights of Labor establish a whipping-post out in front of the Capitol and whip twenty-five members of this House on the last Saturday of each month. We would hardly become more utterly abject after that ordeal than we have been at other times since I have been a member of this body. [Great laughter and applause.] I hope in God's providence the time will come when our manhood will assert itself, and our own honest judgment be our guide in the discharge of public duty, and we will not sneak like poltroons, as we have done over and over again, at the dictation of some gentlemen in the galleries. [Applause.] I have in some measure sur-rendered my manhood once or twice, and I hope the next time I do it I will be paralyzed, as a fit punishment for such self-abasement and betrayal of duty.

I have witnessed enough and more than I hope to again in this country of the vassalage of the Senate and House, the vassalage of the officers of the Government, and I hope, in the interest of American manhood and American freedom, these humiliating spectacles will

I am not against organizations for the protocolon and promotion of the interests of all, not because they belong to this class or that or the other, but because they are American citizens, my countrymen, and entitled to the full and equal protection under the law. [Applause.]

The daily papers teem this morning with suggestions that men are to be shot for being guilty of the offense of exercising the rights of American freemen in making a contract to work for a price that was satisfactory to them.

Now, that practice has become common, too common, and as a citizen of the United States I protest against such a system of barbarism as being un-American, and for that reason I speak of it now, it being whispered that a trace of that spirit had cropped out here as a result of the well-grounded belief that whenever a thing is required of this body by certain organizations of this country we are to do it or suffer political decapitation.

In what position would we put the Secretary of the Treasury and the head of this bureau? If it is true this work is as bad as it is intimated it is, if it is true that this work is not economically done, then mated it is, if it is true that this work is not economically done, then these gentlemen are not fit to occupy the positions they hold. If this work is not fit, as the committee say it is not, then put these presses out. I agree with my friend here [Mr. Long], if we intend to abandon the use of these machines let us do it in a manly way and not offer one cent, a mere mockery. I do not say we should stop their use, but agree that if it be shown that the work is not good we should stop it at once. I asked one of the gentlemen of the committee of the Knights of Labor, who seemed as smart as a whip, "How is it you Knights of Labor, who seemed as smart as a whip, "How is it you gentlemen take such an exceptional interest in the public service in the matter of saving the public money as to devote your whole time to it away from your regular employment?"

He answered me frankly and candidly that he was pressing this matter because what is assumed here as a neafest advance in a certain art ter because what is assumed here as a useful advance in a certain art is not in fact for the benefit of the Government, and is injurious to his craft. I said to him, "That is a frank and manly answer, and if it be true that this is not an advantage to the Government you are entitled to the relief you ask, not because you belong to any powerful organiza: i n, or to any organization, but because you are American citizens struggling to feed your families by honest labor, honest effort."

Now, Mr. Chairman, my own plan would be as I have suggested, that the matter be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, or that some lower rate of compensation be fixed for the present if this rate be too high; but at all events, the attention of the House and of the country having heavy all of the matter, we have resear to hone that there try having been called to the matter, we have reason to hope that there will be an investigation and determination upon which we can rely as to whether the work is, in fact, of a character which we can properly accept, or whether it is of that grade which we ought to reject. We certainly should insist upon it that the work be of high character. The Government wants and ought to have the best.

But while securing this I do want to still the apprehension that seems to fill the minds of some gentlemen that we will continue, for fear of threatened political consequences, like spaniels to put our tails be-tween our legs and run to cover whenever the order issues from those who have been assuming the right to issue it. Let us rehabilitate ourselves with a spirit of true manhood and decide upon the merits of the proposition that is before us, and not act on the high behest of any organization or any body of men, no matter who they are or the ostensible object of their creation or the dangers that threaten to cut short our public career for a refusal to betray our duty to the whole people by becoming mere pawns on the political chess-board.

I agree with my friend from New York here, that if these presses are bad they should not be retained. We should strike out the 1 cent, because that is a mere mockery; it is unfair. But I am not satisfied that the work is not fairly good. Let us determine that fact first. Nor do I want to vote for its continuance without further investigation. The young men who waited upon me were, so far as I could see, candid and fair in their statements, and they were as earnest in their position as any men could be. They went over the whole field; and I hope we will meet the question in a manner as dignified and courageous as was shown by the men who presented it, and not lurk behind any imaginary dangers or difficulties that may beset a full, fair, and honest consideration of the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman from Ohio, whether intentionally or not I do not know, has used language in the remarks he has just made which has a tendency to prejudice this case. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question as to a combination of labor against capital, nor the repression of individual freedom by the confederation of these powers. This is a practical question with which we are called to deal, and that is, as my friend has stated, whether these steam-presses now in use in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are turning out as good work as the hand-presses, and if they are not whether they should be retained. The side issues interjected would lead to questions as old as humanity and as illimitable as the unbounded heavens; the relation of man to man, and man to God, and all men to the state; of capital to labor and labor to itself. Let us pause on the shores of this unbounded ocean and consider this case on its merits.

I will not attempt to follow my friend in his earnest exceriation of the combinations of labor and in behalf of the freedom of the individual for which I contend against the savagery of monopoly, but I would like to remind my friend and the committee that these powerful organizations of labor in the United States were unknown until the capital of the country was organized. It was an organization for self-defense. There was no such powerful organization known as the Knights of Labor until after the business men in the back rooms of commercial buildings in New York and other great cities got together and fixed a scale of prices upon the necessaries of life, the price of labor, and adopted rates of carriage. Cold, cruel, unchristian, savage, and merciless combinations are these. Labor under those conditions was compelled to organize as a defense against the selfish and unchristian power of capital. The heartless and soulless power of money is a harder master than the feudal lord or the savage chief.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend does not pretend to intimate that I in the least degree have sympathized with organized capital or any other organization that uses its powers for oppression?

Mr. McADOO. Not in the slightest degree; but I have simply called the attention of the House to the fact that the organization of labor was the logical result of the organization of capital.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think so, too.

Mr. McADOO. But now, Mr. Chairman, let us get back to the ets. Let us return to the subject before us for consideration. I have serted, and I repeat, that the work done by these machines in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is not of a character that should be found upon the bills and currency and revenue-stamps of a great country like the United States. Let me read a briefextract from the testimony given in connection with this matter.

The expert here states that the paper is dried and pressed out, and that four blankets have to be used instead of two to protect from the violence of the steam-press as against the hand-machine.

Here is a delicately engraved plate. It is to be printed of necessity with the utmost nicety and delicacy of touch. If the impression is to be preserved and the paper of which the bill is composed is to present a neat appearance after the impression is made, it must go through the press with as little violence as possible; but when the bills have been subjected to the powerful pressure of the steam-presses, which work so much quicker than the hand-presses, you have burned the sap right out of the paper, rendered it dry and brittle, and, as is well known, it does not present an appearance after being in use but a brief time such as it should, but becomes ragged, defaced, and wrinkled. This is the testimony of those persons who have examined the matter and were qualified as experts to give testimeny. That is the difference between the work done by the steam-presses and the hand-presses.

The steam-presses can not give that nice delicacy of touch which can only be obtained through the agency of the human hand. This is so in innumerable branches of art. The exquisitely sensitive nerves of the mystical human organization have not yet been fully imitated in cold steel and iron and forceful steam. Man, even in an age of sham and counterfeit, has not yet quite successfully counterfeited himself. The divine secret of human intelligence and soul still rests in the bosom of God, and from the impenetrable depths of heaven makes mockery of invention and arrogating science. The highest and most cultured form of human knowledge still stands in the wave-line of an unknown ocean, questioning the dark waters and shouting its doubts or puny conclusions to the peaceful and unquestioning inhabitants of the inland.

It is the exquisite delicaey of touch and feeling centered in the human brain which no machine can give to this print. Now, my friend from Ohio touched upon the confines of a great and almost boundless subject. He says this was the battleof civilization and progress against a certain form of conservative and organized labor on the printing of these plates by steam machinery, if I understood him aright, and that these organizations were opposed to this and kindred inventions.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; they are not. They are very far

Mr. McADOO. Well, I misunderstood the gentleman, then. Well,

I say we are fighting for the cause of civilization and the cause of the whole people—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not saying whether the organization was for it or not. I do not claim that it is or that it is not, but I am listening to the gentleman from New Jersey so as to be advised. If it is to be resolved against the machine because of the enlistment of a mere organization against it, without reference to the merits of the case, then it is conclusive. I am only listening to the gentleman for information.

Mr. McADOO. The intelligent laborers of the United States, as I understand it, are in favor of all these labor-saving machines, because they cheapen the cost of production and bring the fine things of life to every man's door; and as my other friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAN] suggested, they make a final solution of the labor problem. The cost of What are you proproduction is not so much a question in this case. ducing—bread, bricks, house-making material, clothing? No. You are producing the paper currency of the country; and its safety from counterfeiting, its stability and life depend upon the finest execution in the making of it. Therefore the great, broad principle which my friend interpolates into it respecting labor is not a fair one, and can not apply to this case. Here are the certificates of the indebtedness of our Gov-The safety in holding them depends largely on their not ernment. being counterfeited.

Here are your internal-revenue stamps. They should be respectable in appearance at least, and the fine work of the engraver should be preserved by the delicate and skillful printing of their impressions.

Therefore, that question does not come into this case.

Now, my friend from Alabama, who is to follow me, and who was chairman of the committee of investigation, will show that the testimony, instead of being one-sided on the part of steam plate-printing presses coming from bank presidents and other experts, is against them. The testimony of bank presidents and experts, and of the chief of the secret service, whose letter I have read, and the superintendent of the engraving in the bureau is against them. The superintendent of engraving said to me personally, and I assert it as a member of this House, that these machines did not do justice to the engraver's work. How could they? Is a chromo as good as an oil painting? Is a print as good as an etching? Is a carefully pressed steel engraving not su-perior to an ordinary cut run off a steam machine? Is art all centered in cold mechanism? Are our present wretched postage-stamps to continue with our bad money bills?

Now, the chief of the secret service and his predecessor and many experts testify that counterfeiting has increased largely beyond question since these machines were introduced in the bureau.

Now, one word more. Gentlemen have stated that already you have expended a large sum on these machines in their purchase at a cost of $30,000, and that this will be lost if we withdraw them, or if their use be not continued. Is not this proving too much? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES], as gentlemen are aware, has stated that we are saving $100,000 a year by the use of these machines. If he is right, and if $100,000 a year have been saved, the Government has saved over and over again the amount of $30,000 which was originally paid in the purchase of these presses. So that the Government, instead of losing by relegating these machines and sending them back, will have made a large saving.

I read some time ago an extract from the contract of the party of the first part-the owners of these machines-that they are not bound by the price they were originally sold to the Government for; that if they proved a success they were not to be bound by that price. Whatdoes that mean? It means that they were to absorb the whole work of printing these plates, and after thus having taken control of the whole work of the Government the price of their machines was to be raised to an indefinite limit. After the Government shall have dispensed with its skilled hands, after having discharged its plate-printers and its whole skilled force and sent them back to the parts of the country whence they were brought to this city to execute your work, you are then at the mercy of this powerful company. If they demonstrate the fitness of these machines it would result in increasing the price of the machines to the United States and give to the company the large bounty of $1 for each thousand impressions, and leave us at their mercy.

Mr. LONG. I will now offer an amendment, which I hope will be accepted. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his amendment, and I will move to strike out "1 cent" and substitute "50 cents"

'50 cents.'

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his amendment?

Mr. LANDES. I do.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 9, strike out the words "one cent" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty cents;" so that it will read:
"And for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50a day, each one employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions."

Mr. TAULBEE. What are we paying now?
Mr. McADOO. One dollar.
Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the matter under consideration merely involves a question of plain business methods. We are simply called upon to decide whether or not it is advisable that the Government shall continue to give a large royalty for the use of certain machines for plate-printing.

After listening to the eloquent and patriotic appeal of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] I began to think I had entirely mistaken the character of the bill under discussion. The gentleman soared so high that I can hardly expect the House to immediately get itself down to consider the subject in the light of a plain business proposi-

I suppose very few of us are well informed as to the method of printing the securities of the Government. I certainly was ignorant upon the subject until last April, when a bill was referred to the committee of which I am a member, which made it necessary for that committee to give the matter a very thorough investigation. In considering the bill all persons from whom we could hope to acquire information were invited to appear before the committee.

Gentlemen say that the proposed reduction in royalty is due to arguments placed before Congress by plate-printers. But I believe that a plate-printer, or any other craftsman, has just as much right to a hearing before Congress as have the lawyers and agents of the sugar trust, the steel trust, and numerous other gigantic corporations and capitalistic combinations who throng this city, and whose arguments in behalf of the interests they represent are listened to with care and attention.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Who said they had not?

Mr. WHEELER. It has most certainly been intimated that plateprinters are in some degree responsible for the clause in the bill which as precipitated this discussion, and no doubt it is true that it has been through their efforts that some of the information we now possess regarding this question was laid before Congress.

Most probably one object these gentlemen had in view was the protection of the vocation of their fellow-craftsmen.

No doubt they looked with some degree of dissatisfaction upon the effort to substitute inferior machine-work for the superb artistic engravings produced by the skilled plate-printers from hand-roller presses, and they have contended that this inferior work ought not to be accepted and issued by the Government when the best results of the highest style of the printing art could easily have been attained.

While this was possibly their principal object, it is quite true that Congress is indebted to them for much information which will, I think, waterially assist us in determining what legislation is possess, at the side of the printing what legislation is possess, and the same property was a side of the printing what legislation is possess.

materially assist us in determining what legislation is necessary upon this subject.

I think I am correct in saying that when the bill providing that Government securities should be printed in the highest style of art, by hand roller-presses, was first presented, the majority of the committee to which it was referred was impressed with the idea that the proposed to which it was referred was impressed with the idea that the proposed legislation was not advisable, and they felt that any legislation designed to prohibit the use of machinery was a movement in the wrong direction. But the further the investigation was carried the more fully they became convinced that to maintain the high standard of excellence and integrity of Government currency it was necessary that the execution of the notes, certificates, etc., should be in a higher style of art than had been accomplished by the steam-presses.

While we were here giving our best attention to this matter some of the gentlemen who are foremost in advocating the continued use of steam-presses were off attending to campaign affairs.

So thoroughly were those who examined the subject impressed with the necessity of improving the character and quality of the Government notes and securities that the records of Congress show that when the question was voted upon 170 members were present and 167 voted the question was voted upon 170 members were present and 167 voted in favor of the proposition, and only 3 are upon the record in the negative, while upon the final vote, I believe, the House was unanimous. If the gentlemen had been here, instead of in the excitement of a great political battle, and giving this matter their consideration, we probably would not have had the speeches of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVG].

Long].

We were in States where there were contests.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion regarding the relative expense of the two methods of printing the notes, certificates, and securities of the Government.

The advocates of the continued use of the steam-presses give us the views of Mr. Graves, and I admit that the exhibit presented by him goes far to sustain the argument. But a careful investigation shows that there are many items of expense incident to steam plate-printing which are not included in Mr. Graves's estimate. The statements of Mr. Graves to which my attention has been called omit the following

First. The cost for privilege of construction is $500. Second. The cost of patterns for the different presses is $400 for each size, and it is stipulated in agreement said patterns must be returned to owners when it is stipulated in agreement said patterns must be returned to owners when press is constructed.

Third, Twelve hundred and fifty dollars is paid for the construction of each press by the Government.

Fourth. A royalty of $1 is paid on every 1,000 impressions printed on these presses while in use.

Fifth. An employé of the bureau made all the improvement that is on said presses, and claimed he was forced to surrender his drawings and plans to the patentees.

Sixth. Mr. Graves, in his testimony before Banking and Currency Committee, stated, "Among other things I have increased Mr. Harley's pay recently, simply on account of his services."

This is shown on page 84 of the stenographer's report of Mr. Graves's testimony before the Committee of the House on Banking and Currency. The Mr. Harley referred to by Mr. Graves is a machinist who has for many years been in the employ of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

In addition to this, Mr. Little, in his testimony before the Committee on Banking and Currency, said:

The work done on these presses is inferior, and a lower standard has been adopted in the examination of steam-press work.

After the bill passed the House last session it was referred by the Senate to the Finance Committee of that House, who have taken testimony on the subject, which has been printed. I read from Mr. Ralston's statement to that committee, pages $, 9, and 10:

Senate to the Finance Committee of that House, who have taken testimony on the subject, which has been printed. I read from Mr. Ralston's statement to that committee, pages 8, 9, and 10:

I started to speak on the subject of economy. There have been a great many tables submited by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing on this question of economy. I will venture to say without fear of contradiction by Mr. Graves or anybody else that no two sets of tables have agreed; that every showing submitted by them; that at one time Mr. Graves figured out a saving of $9 for $1 expended in royalty, another time he figured out a saving of $9 for $1 expended in royalty, another time he figured out a saving of $4 for $1, and if I mistake not, a third time $2.65. I may be in error upon that point, but upon the $9 and $4 I am not in error. Never have there been any reports of economy submitted that agreed with any other reports. In every attempt made to show alleged superior economy of steam-press printing there have been from one to half a dozen different items of cost actually suppressed, that did not appear in Mr. Graves's figures. I make that statement in the broadest way, and I defy successful contradiction by Mr. Graves or any one else. To refer to the items—

Senator Harris. Do you mean suppressed items?

Mr. RALSTON. I mean the suppressed items that he has suppressed time and appressed that the has suppressed the suppressed items of the steam-press and the prime cost of the hand-press. The prime cost of a hand-press I believe is about $1.25, possibly $150. The prime cost of the steam-press and the prime cost of the hand-press. The prime cost of the steam-press and the prime cost of the hand-press. I has now risen to $1,250. That difference has never been taken into consideration at all. In addition to that difference in the prime cost comes next this, the Government has paid the owners of these steam-presses $500 for the privilege of constructing each press that they wanted to construct. That was a pure bonus.

Senator Har

same time probably $600 in these two months had been expended in reconstructing a single press. The reasons why all these items have been suppressed are inexplicable to me.

Nor is this all. There have been machinists continually employed on those presses in keeping them in order; continually employed on the steam-presses; and although they were actively at work doing this very work, the repair of the steam-presses, to the extent of over $100 a month to one man and something like the same figure, I think, to a second man, during the same month that this report was submitted, they are entirely ignored, and the money paid to those men is entirely ignored. So I say for all these and other reasons it is utterly impossible to place the first item of dependence on any figures submitted by Mr. Graves to Congress or to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Senator Hiscock. Before you pass that point I want to understand it. In Mr. Graves's letter to the chairman of the committee he uses the following language:

Graves's letter to the chairman of the chief of the bureau shows that while the number of sheets of securities printed increased from 28,217,706 in the fiscal year 1885 to 32,652,207 in 1887, the cost of maintaining the bureau ran down from $965,195.47 to $794,477.90."

There is a decrease of $175,000 in running the bureau. It seems to me that you have got to show this, either that there was a large diminution in the other work which was done in the bureau in those years or else that that statement is not correct.

work which was done in the bureau in those years or else that that statement is not correct.

Mr. Ralston. I am perfectly willing to meet the statement on that point. The matter of economy, of course, it is well known, has been Mr. Graves's hobby for many years, and it is well worthy of investigation as to how this economy is effected. I think his bureau will stand investigation upon that point and the result will be not at least creditable from another point of view. The reasons for that, as I understand it, have nothing to do with this question of steamprinting. They have something to do with Mr. Graves's treatment of his employés. There are girls in that bureau who, I believe, formerly got from $2 a day to $3 a day that were reduced down to $1.25 and $1.50 per day, so that this grinding economy of Mr. Graves, who is a well-paid official, as he should be, has resulted simply to the detriment and the hardship of hundreds of employés in his bureau.

If a man deserves credit for grinding the face of the poor, Mr. Graves is entitled to it. The connection between that and the steam-press printing has not yet been demonstrated. I am prepared to admit that the bureau is conducted connenically. I am prepared to admit that the employés are paid less wages than they ever were before. I am prepared to admit that Mr. Graves has lengthened the hours of the plate-printers and of the girls. I am prepared to admit that he has put on an additional hour, or something of that sort, to the time of his employes, who certainly were wearied out with the work they had to do under the old system. I am prepared to admit all that. That is the way in which the economy has been effected. One thing more. He has effected this economy by constant deterioration of the materials employed in producing he results which he has attained. The ink which he has used in the plate-printing is not equal to what was used before. The rubber blankets which are used upon the hand-presses, as shown in the testimony taken before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, have deteriorated in quality. There has been a deterioration in the quality of the paper used in the printing of Government securities. I am prepared to admit all that.

Senator Hiscock, Mr. Graves says in this letter:

"A just and orderly system of promotion has been followed, and the employés as a rule have had more constant employment and better wages."

Mr. Ralston, I am prepared to dispute that.

Mr. JORDAN, You might add that Mr. Graves wanted, according to his language to Congress in asking the change of the system from per diem to yearly, to have an opportunity, as he states in his reports for 1855 and 1886, to get extra work out of the employés without extra compensation. As the system is now he exacts at least four days a month out of every employé outside of the plate-printers with less wages.

Senator Hiscock. So that what you claim is that the decrease of $175,000 a year, with a large increase of the work put out, is

This testimony goes far to justify the conclusion that the diminution in the cost of the present management of the bureau, as compared with its conduct in former years, is at least measurably due to lengthening the working hours of the employés of the bureau, while the pay of some of them has been decreased.

When I last addressed the House upon this question I said:

When I last addressed the House upon this question I said:

On this question of the relative cost of steam and hand work we can get some information from the report of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General of 1885. It appears that advertisements were made for bids to print postage-stamps for the year 1886. In the blank form of proposals furnished to bidders they were invited to bid upon five different classes of work.

The specifications in these five different classes were as I will read:

"Class No. 1: Price per thousand for stamps printed on hand-roller presses, Marked No. 1 in accompanying specifications.

"Class No. 2: Price per thousand for stamps printed on steam-power presses, with part hand-work. Marked No. 2 in accompanying specifications.

"Class No. 3: Price per thousand for stamps printed wholly by steam-power. Marked No. 3 in accompanying specifications.

"Class No. 4: Price per thousand for stamps printed by steam-power presses which require a portion of the work, such as wiping and polishing, to be done by hand, with the right reserved to the Postmaster-General to require the work to be done on hand-roller presses. Marked No. 4 in accompanying specifications.

which require a portion of the work, such as wiping and polishing, to be done by hand, with the right reserved to the Postmaster-General to require the work to be done on hand-roller presses. Marked No. 4 in accompanying specifications.

"Class No. 5: Price per thousand for stamps printed by presses upon which all the work is done by steam-power, with the right reserved to the Postmaster-General to require the work to be done on hand-roller presses. Marked No. 5 in accompanying specifications."

The report of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General then goes on to say:
"Upon opening the proposals, at the time appointed for the purpose, it was found that three bidders had competed for the contract, namely: The Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, and the Franklin and American Bank Note Companies, both of New York. The bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, under class No. 1 (for printing on hand-roller presses), amounted to $132,545.49; under class No. 2 (for printing partly by steam and partly by hand), to $114,123.39; and under class No. 2 (for printing partly by steam and partly by hand), to $114,123.39; and under class No. 1."

It will, I suppose, be admitted that the bid by the Secretary of the Treasury was made under the advice of the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, or at least that the Secretary relied upon the judgment and experience of that official, and this bid shows that the then Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was thoroughly of the opinion that the postage-stamps executed by the steam-presses would not be satisfactory to the Department, and therefore that the successful bidder would be required to do the work by handpress. This result was so apparent to those who prepared the bid for the Treasury Department that the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury was $132,545.49 (or testamps printed on hand-roller presses, and the bid was precisely the same, namely, $132,545.49 (or the same work done on steam

Include the omitted items of expense and add the royalty of $1 per thousand sheets, and the saving claimed for the steam-presses would be much reduced, if not, as is contended by some, wiped out altogether. More than one gentleman has insisted that the Secretary of the Treasury advocates the use of the steam-presses. I think they are mistaken in this; but if he has said anything to justify such a conclusion it was no doubt owing to the fact that he had been misled by the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

That gentleman has been very strenuous in his efforts before the committee to present all the advantages of continuing the use of the

The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department did not content itself with merely taking oral testimony. The commit-tee went in a body to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and made a thorough examination of the presses and the work turned out by them.

We were escorted by the chief of the bureau and by other gentlemen who seemed very earnest in their advocacy of the steam-presses.

I do not think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is correct in his suggestion that any advocates of steam-presses have been jeered, or that any terrorism has been exercised towards the advocates of steam plate-printing; but I can say that, unless reliable men have been very much in error, there is a system of terrorism in the bureau, but the terror is felt by the employes who, in their testimony, ventured to expose the comparative defects of steam-press printing.

Now, with regard to the object to be attained, we took the evidence of every gentleman who would come before us whether he was for or against the use of the presses. We took the evidence of the officials of the Treasury Department, of Mr. Graves, of Mr. Bell, of Mr. Brooks, and those detectives testified that it was impossible to protect the people against counterfeiting if those steam-presses were allowed to remain in operation.

Mr. LANDES. Have you reported that evidence to the House?
Mr. WHEELER. I reported the evidence in full. I made a report of fifty-seven pages, with all the evidence and the deductions of the committee, but it appears that my friend [Mr. LANDES] who makes a speech here this morning, has not taken the trouble to read it.

Mr. LANDES. I ask the gentleman's pardon.
Mr. WHEELER. I do not suppose that one gentleman who has with which was spoken in favor of retaining these presses has read this evidence which we took during three months of hard labor. One by one the members of the committee gradually changed their views until they arrived at the unanimous opinion that these steam-presses ought not to be used by the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD. Who does the gentleman say is responsible for this "reign of terror" in connection with this work?

Mr. WHEELER. I can not say positively; but I always observed that Mr. Graves seemed much more inclined to consider favorably lawyers, witnesses, and others who came before a Congressional committee to advocate use of steam-presses than those who came to urge opposite views

Mr. MACDONALD. Now, will you please state more clearly than you have done upon what ground you claim that this terrorism has

Mr. WHEELER. I can only state that men whom I regard as reliable say that it is difficult to get employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to give testimony which is unfavorable to the use of the steam-presses, because they do not wish to incur the displeasure of Mr. Graves; and, without making any special inquiry, I have been forcibly impressed with the idea that the chief of the bureau is not favorable to those who do not sustain or share his views upon the subject.

I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I will hear it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman has any official information from the Treasury Department that there is now in circulation among the people an unusual number of counterfeit bills, and whether this fact grows out of the character of this printing?

Mr. WHEELER. I have here the evidence of Mr. Bell, chief of the secret service division of the Treasury Department, who testifies that during the last year there was more counterfeit money placed upon the market than ever before, and that this was in a great measure due to the inferior printing caused by the work being done on steam-presses. I will read one paragraph from what he said:

I will read one paragraph from what he said:

The Chairman. You are of the opinion that the present style of printing of all of our securities that are printed with steam plate-presses can be easier counterfeited and the counterfeits are more difficult to detect?

Mr. Bell. I would like to say in answer to that, that the Government, with sixty millions of people and $140,000,000 of surplus, a rich Government, ought not to use inferior means of work to make Government obligations. They ought to use the best paper that can be made, and they ought to have it engraved in the highest style of the art, and from my knowledge, and from seeing bills that have been printed by steam methods of printing and by hand, there is no question at all, to my mind, that every bill should be printed by hand. I do not think they can get the depth of printing on a bill by steam, not in any of those I have seen. When a person can sit 10 feet away and discover the difference between those printed by hand and those printed by steam, as I did awhile ago, I think there is quite a difference in the bills in regard to printing. Some of the gentlemen in charge of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing might hear my statement and perhaps make one of their best kind of steam bills and a poor kind by hand, and ask me to show the difference. In that case, I want to have the privilege of going to the bureau, in the printing division, and getting one of them as they usually come out.

He states that he has been in the secret service for three years, and has had occasion to compare genuine and counterfeit bills. He then continues:

Mr. Brooks has said there were no better counterfeit bills than those shown ere. It is hard to detect them for the reason that the genuine bills are so

Then he goes on for some two pages of this report explaining that the very inferior character of the bills makes it impossible to detect counterfeits.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does Mr. Brooks hold the same view

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir. He preceded Mr. Bell in giving his idence. They both agreed that the work now done by the bureau evidence. was very inferior. Mr. Bell said that some two months ago one of his detectives, the most expert that he has, condemned nine bills in Pitts-burgh as counterfeit; that those bills were sent to the Treasury Department and were found to be good; in other words, the bills printed by the Government were so poor that the detective pronounced them counterfeit. In fact, he says that many of the counterfeits now printed by hand-presses are far superior to printing of the Government by Gentlemen have said that they have examined these bills printed by hand-presses and find them inferior to those printed by steam-press I admit that Mr. Graves shows this in some cases, but it is done by comparing bills printed by hand in an inferior manner, and these bills were compared with some bills printed as finely as possible by the steam-press. I admit that if you run a bill through the steam-press with the same care and in the same slow manner as if you were operating a hand-press you may make it as good as a bill printed by the handpress; but I contend that printing these bills in the ordinary way, as they are actually furnished to the public, they are infinitely inferior to those printed by hand-presses.

In conclusion, I wish to express the hope that as the Committee on appropriations has investigated this matter so carefully this House will not override their report, and will not vote to give one cent beyond what the committee recommends for royalty on these presses

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, this House has already settled the question whether the steam-presses shall remain in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. By an act passed at the last session—passed almost unanimously—this House declared that all this Government work in the future should be done by hand-presses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after one of the committees of this House has sat for weeks and weeks, after all its members have gone in person to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and practically examined all this work, and after the committee has come in here with a unanimous report against steam-presses and in favor of hand-presses, it is very remarkable that at this late day we find men on this floor resorting to special pleading on this question and bringing up arguments which have been settled for at least one whole year, which were turned out of the doors of the committee-room one year ago.

Now, I call attention first to the fact that this House has already declared that the steam-press shall not stay; and next I wish to refer to the condition in which the United States Government is tied up under this contract with Steele & Milligan. You will notice all through the report of Mr. Graves (this matter has been partially brought to the attention of the House in a speech of the gentleman from New Jersey) there is not one favorable word from this bureau for the hand-press. For years that man has stood there in defense of this patent and as the champion of Steele & Milligan; and this firm (Steele & Milligan) have taken $65,000 from the United States Treasury—for what? For having patterns of presses cast by the United States, assembled by the United States, repaired by the United States, and royalty paid by the Government at the rate of $1 for every thousand impressions coming

Why, let the House only think for one minute of this fact. I believe, to the best of my knowledge, while we were investigating this matter we discovered that there had been at least twelve valuable improvements made on this Milligan press since it was put in the office in 1878, made during the employment by this national Government, paid out of the Treasury, by a man hired by Mr. Graves, and these improve-ments are now owned by whom? By Steele & Milligan. And according to my last and best knowledge of that transaction, Mr. Chairman, the poor man who made these improvements had not received one cent from Steele & Milligan, but his wages only from the Government.

Men talk here of independence, of people being hissed at for being independent. There is no man employed in that office who can go into court and get his own improvements, because of the fact that he would lose his place. That is what is held over his head. That is the class of tyranny in use by the head of a department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I never knew until to-day that organized labor in this country had to come into this House and make apology to the wisdom, the prudence, and the honesty of its members. Why, what would be the difference suppose they had held a "town meeting" in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and these men had afterward come here, what is the difference whether they are Knights of Labor, or who they are? They are methodical they are skilled mechanics. come here, what is the difference whether they are Knights of Labor, or who they are? They are mechanics, they are skilled mechanics, and they speak for their rights. The committee of which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] was chairman investigated the matter fairly and gave them the rights they sought for, whether they were Knights of Labor or "scabs" or "rats."

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] spoke of the independence of dying in the last ditch for the rights of man. Why, sir, the worst things in the world can die in the ditch as well as the best. [Lapotter]

I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] in my knowledge of organized labor, reaching back over thirty years, I defy any man in this House or elsewhere to say otherwise than that the organized mechanics of this land have been the men who have kept up your wages and built up your industries. Why, if we were not organized we would be a mob subject to the caprice of capital and its ownership; but instead of that we level up in privileges as quickly as capital can and meet it face to face, as our existence depends on it.

Mr. Chairman, I say independently of this sophistry of steam machinery, this special plea put in here to save this monopoly, I say no skilled man in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing dare, under the solemnity of an oath, say the steam-press does work equal to the handpress. I put it fairly, I do not speak as an expert printer, I say you can go and ask the foremen (guarantying them their places, that they will not be turned out of employment), and from the engraver down to the wiper they will condemn these steam-presses

More than that, it only wanted the presence of that committee to go through that whole building to find out about it. I went and examined, sheet by sheet, what was turned out by the hand-press and what was turned out by the steam-press, and as a practical mechanic I con-demn the latter. I condemn it because I believe it is dangerous to put anything that is liable to be counterfeited in the hands of the poor

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. One word more. I have no interest one way or the other in this matter. I speak simply as one desiring to see the Government honestly served and fairly treated, and that its employés should not be badgered because they belong to organized labor.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the merits involved in this controversy, but simply rise to refute a single statement made by the distinguished and eloquent gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] in the presentation of his manly and fearless argument. I regretted exceedingly to hear him say that the Knights of Labor or members of this honorable and worthy organization had hissed certain employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing engaged in operating the steam-presses as they went in and out from their work in that bureau. I would like him to point out a single instance of this kind that can be authenticated.

The methods of the Knights of Labor are beyond such low practices, and as an order they are not opposed to the introduction and use of labor-saving machinery. On the contrary, it is favored. They come here in the interest of an honest contention for hand-press work in prefcrence to steam. They contend that it has been established beyond controversy that the hand-printed Government securities and United States notes are far more excellent and durable and less capable of being simulated or counterfeited than steam-press work. As stated in the beginning, I do not propose to discuss this matter. I think the House fully understands it, and I feel certain that I can add nothing to what has already been so ably said by others on this subject.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing easier than to knock down a man of straw when you set him up with direct reference to doing that particular thing. There has been no intimation here on any behalf, so far as I have heard, that it was unwise for labor to organize. Exactly the reverse is true. I take a broader view, however, on the question of labor than some gentlemen seem to take in the discussion of this question. If I do not misapprehend my country and my countrymen, this is a nation of laborers. I not only do not oppose organization in the interest of labor in all its branches, of every craft and handiwork, but I heartily approve of it. I do not approve of all their methods. I do not approve of the exercise of force or anything akin to it for the purpose of either excluding any American cit-izen from any walk of life or any calling to which he may see fit to turn his attention. Very far from it.

So far as the statement was concerned which related to the hissing of certain employés in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I stated the facts as they came to me. The gentlemen of the committee who conferred with me here about it admitted that it was true and that the occurrence took place beyond any question. I merely stated the facts as they came to me, and they are undisputed.

But, Mr. Chairman, while recognizing the importance of labor organizations it is needless for members of this House to shut their eyes to the fact that one of these organizations in New York insisted upon starving a widow and her children into compliance with their behests. We are perfectly familiar with the facts, and while I do not in anywise object to the organization of labor in the interests of men, however or wherever they may be employed, I do protest against the utilization of these organizations for the purpose of compelling obedience zation of these organizations for the purpose of compelling obedience to their high behests, except by argument, by reason, to influence the understanding of men, or by moral suasion. And, sir, I ask the committee if they can ascertain whether, in point of fact, bureau employés were free to testify touching the excellence of the work now and here called in question; or would they, if so testifying, be placed under the condemnation of their fellow-workers and hissed upon the streets and in the building where they were employed? If it was true, as had been alleged, against that I did and do inveigh.

Now, one other matter. I did not suggest that the Knights of Labor, or that intelligent men anywhere in the ranks of labor, were opposed to the introduction of labor-saving machinery. I know to the contrary. I have investigated the influence of labor-saving machinery, trary. I have investigated the influence of labor-saving macninery, and I have found, so far as I have done so, that instead of taking bread out of the mouths of the wage-workers exactly the reverse was true. It has enlarged the field of employment and increased the number of employés. It has increased the number of laborers and enhanced their wages. But I know that sometimes misguided men, nanced their wages. But I know that sometimes misguided men, under the belief that it is against their interests, have fought, even to the extent of personal violence, against an introduction of labor-saving machinery. Jacquard, the inventor of the Jacquard loom, was driven from Lyons by the infuriated weavers, who thought that his invention was robbing them of the fruits of their labor; but he was welcomed back by the same weavers in after years, and a monument was erected to his memory by the laborers whom his invention had blessed. The inventor of the hobbinet machine was driven from his because his The inventor of the bobbinet machine was driven from his home, his machine destroyed, and yet the laboring men afterward recognized him as one of their great benefactors. The inventor of the sewingmachine was driven from the ranks of labor where he had moved in the city of Paris and was trying to perfect his invention; but the populace afterwards found that in point of fact his invention and similar inventions had multiplied the quantity of bread that they were able to earn for their children.

Now, touching the Knights of Labor, another word. It is well known that petitions have been prepared here and circulated broadcast throughout the country and again presented here in volumes when important matters were under consideration. The single individual who prepares these papers for the signers seemed to regard them as a sort of political shibboleth which is to be used in this House, not to persuade but to compel members to yote for that which their judgment may not approve. A certain gentleman affects to be able to touch a button and turn loose the pent-up wrath of a million Knights of Labor on the devoted head of the member of this body who presumes to say his soul is his own and votes as he will have to answer to his constituents, his country, and his God, but in disregard of the mandate issued by the gentleman who controls all this bottled wrath.

It is well known to this House and to this committee that all I insist upon in this matter is that we should stand by our deliberate judgment, formed and founded upon the facts introduced here, and not yield to a suggestion that it will jeopardize our political lives if we do it. I called attention once before in this House to the fact that a circular was sent from this Hall to the country singling out those who were the friends of the people, and singling out those who were not; and the author of that circular proposed that he should fix for the voters the standard of American manhood, and decide what the duty of a citizen of the United States was, and that any man who dared question the honesty or soundness of his judgment was to be kicked out of the public service. Many men who were classed as enemies of the people were the worthy descendants of the men who fought the battles of the Revolution, who gave us a country and a free government and our grand Constitution, and whose children have kept and maintained them all until this hour, and are still the faithful and constant watchers on the walls of the temple of our freedom, and yet they were denounced as enemies of the people. And the man who thus denounced us has heretofore exercised a mightier influence in this body than the prayers of all the patriots that ever marched under our flag in defense of the Re-

Gentlemen, we can not shut our eyes to the fact that these influences are too potent in our midst. I say to my friend from New York that it is not in him, and the Almighty God can not put it in him, to be more the advocate of the sons of labor, wherever they are, than I am. I have three boys, to whom I can not leave much beyond the rich heritage of citizenship in the United States, and I deny the right of any association of men to say to my boys or to any one of them that they or he shall not learn the trade of his father, whatever that trade or calling may be. That is the right assumed. Against that I protest. Wise and just legislation is sure to result if we will listen to the dictates of reason and be guided by an enlightened conscience. But when we hoist our sails solely to catch the political trade winds which are controlled by organizations here and there, just so long are our free institutions in danger, not because we do not know better, but because we have not the courage to do better.

So far as these machines are concerned, I do not know whether they ought to go out or stay in. Touching that question I will pay my friend from Alabama whatever of compliment is implied in the suggestion tion that reports made from facts gathered in the midst of a wild political storm, where the report may be potent to turn the doubtful scale of a political contest, have no more weight with me than the deliberate judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury and the large number of experts whose testimony we have before us. It is this matter that leaves me a little in doubt as to whether we should utilize these machines or not.

Mr. WHEELER. Have you read the report made last August?

This that that makes Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I read part of it. It is that that makes me doubt what we ought to do. We had there a committee of honorable gentlemen of this House who could hardly wait with patience until we could put those machines out. The sworn officers of the Government assure us, after making an examination under their oath, being sworn assure us, after making an examination under their oath, being sworn to protect the interests of the United States, and who are not subjected to outside influences, that they should not be taken out.

I was assured, as my friend from New Jersey suggested, that the use of these steam-presses entails a loss on the people; if counterfeiting could be in larger measure prevented or if we could better prevent it have reason of the better work of the hand-press our course would be by reason of the better work of the hand-press, our course would be clear. We have been so accustomed to witness our judgment being warped a little as we watched the political breeze arising here and there that I am very anxious to know the facts from officers who are independent of these political trade winds before I act finally in this

My friend from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] has called attention to the fact that Government employés have invented certain improvements in this machine. I have always insisted here as a friend of the inventor, to whose genius we are indebted for our magnificent development, that we have no right to take from him the products of his genius, though in the line of his calling. I think my friend will find on the statute-book a law which I have considered unjust, that where an employé of the Government, in the line of his calling or in the line of his employment, invents any machine connected with that line of employment, it shall inure to the benefit of the Government to the extent that the United States may use it without paying royalty or other consideration for such use.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And that the royalty shall go to Steele & Milligan, as it would on this machine.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Ism talking of the interest in the inventor. I have insisted upon this floor that it is not just, in case an employé of the Government invents an improvement in the machinery he is using in the calling in which he is employed, that the Government should have the right to use it without compensation to the inventor. I have said that I deprecated that statute being in existence; but in this case it is not the fault of this House

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FARQUHAR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio to what trade he refers when he says that his son can not be entered as

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the House will indulge me, I will an-Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the House will indulge me, I will answer by giving a little experience, which is only one of many. One of my colleagues, who sat right by me, was approached by a carpenter of this city. He said, "I wish you would find employment for my two boys; they can not get anything to do, and I have nothing for them to do." The member said to him, "Why do not they learn the trade of their father?" The carpenter replied, "Because they can not under our rules." The member asked, "What are your rules?" The man replied, "We can not take apprentices against the rules of the union, which only allow a certain number, and the number is full." The member said, "Do you mean to say that your two boys can not go to the house you are building and hold one end of the plank while you The member said, "Do you mean to say that your two boys can not go to the house you are building and hold one end of the plank while you are nailing the other?" [Laughter.] "No," said the man, "they can not." "Well," said the member, "what would be the result if they did? The man replied, "They are not permitted to do anything in the trade of a carpenter in assisting me unless they are regularly entered apprentices; and the list is full. If I did permit them I would be dismissed from the union. If dismissed from the union I would be a 'scab' where I worked. If I was a 'scab' no one would employ me. If they did employ me they would be 'boycotted,' and if they were 'boycotted' they would be in a bad way." [Laughter.]

Beautiful spectacle, is it not? The father must deny his own children the right to help him earn bread. They may become tramps, but dren the right to help him earn bread. They may become tramps, but they must not learn their father's trade or they will all be called scabs and starved into obedience.

Hence it is that I say to my friend, against that policy I inveigh; that which prevents a carpenter or blacksmith or machinist from teaching his own boy the business or profession or calling of his father without the consent of these organizations. Must we have a law above the Constitution and above the statute, a law that robs every citizen of the most sacred right of a freeman, the right to earn an honest living in the calling of his choice?

I do not want to follow the gentleman into the carpenter-shops; but I want to say this, that in two great departments here you can not put in an apprentice, the Government Printing Office and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Now, the reason for the action of every trades union in making an apprenticeship limit, whatever may be the quota allowed-seven journeymen to an apprentice, or five journeymen to an apprentice, or whatever it may beson of it rests upon the best judgment of the whole trade. I will give an illustration. This man, or any other man employing labor, can, in the course of four or five years, fill his establishment with twothirders, that is, men who are not full journeymen, and with appren-tices, and he can then hire one or two skilled men to control the labor of the establishment.

Now, I appeal to the gentleman from Onio himself. Suppose he was a journeyman in that shop and a member of the union, and the question was presented, "Shall we unlimitedly bring in these unindentured apprentices?" And suppose he had his own family, his wife and four or five children, to take care of, I ask him whether he would allow either a scab proprietor, or a rat proprietor, or a two-thirds proprietor, or any other contemptible employer of such labor, to drive him from his bread and butter, and from the support of his wife and family? The gentleman appealed a while ago to my honor as a tradesman. I appeal now to his manhood to keep the man who is the head of the family at work, and let the apprentices find work elsewhere, and the two-thirders also.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is just the point.
Mr. FARQUHAR. And that is the aim and object of the efforts of organized labor for four hundred years.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But where are the three boys of the carpenter to find work? Are they to go with their father and learn his trade, or are they to go out on the highway as tramps?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No; but I do not suppose they would all want to be carpenters.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; but they have a right in a free country to be carpenters if they want to, and if they can not handle a jack-plane and saw to earn bread without the permission of some association, we have scant liberty left. Skill and pluck in this country win the goal.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Ah!

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. They do. But what is to become of the boys, I ask again, that this carpenter desired to have work with him? They go to the next shop and they find the list of apprentices full; they go to the next and it is full. What is to become of them? Shall the full-paid men keep them as paupers? Shall they become tramps? Shall they go out upon the highway as bandits?

Mr. FARQUHAR. And what is to become of your adult laborer who is walking the streets now without employment? I can show you in New Jersey and in other places establishments in which more than twothirds of the labor is made up of apprentices and two-thirders, while the heads of families walk the streets without means of getting bread for themselves or those depending upon them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly, and

Undoubtedly, and if this House would do its duty the children of the men who have kept the Republic would not be crowded out of their employment by ship-loads of the lazzaroni of Europe that land daily upon our shores. [Applause.]
Mr. FARQUHAR. That is just what the trades unions are doing, shutting out the lazzaroni and your two-thirders.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am with them if they do that; but the real trouble is here. The men and the boys from New England, from New York, from Pennsylvania, from Ohio, from Indiana, are pushed out upon the highways by reason, not of immigration-immigration brings energy, pluck, some money, the capital of labor, and what is equally important, they bring moral and intellectual worth and habits of indusry; but we are having thrown upon our shores every hour, and this House is afraid to interfere—I repeat it, afraid to interfere—beings who represent nothing on God's earth but an appetite, a stomach, and an alimentary canal. [Laughter and applause.] And yet fool philan-thropy, and, what is worse, demagogy, welcomes this voting pestilence to our shores. Who, of right, shall say that I shall not teach my boy my trade? How long has it been, how long will it continue to be, that I shall not teach him to be a blacksmith if I am a blacksmith? That he shall not learn the carpenter trade if his father is a carpenter, or that he shall not read law with his father if his father is a lawyer?

No man, no combination of men should say it. It is unjust, it is un-American, it is undemocratic, and is at war with the genius of our institutions. We all have a right to get bread. The country is broad and open, and I have a right, in defiance of the rule of any organization, to go to my friend [Mr. FARQUHAR] and say to him, "I want employment with my boy," and it is infamous if he is in fear compelled to answer, "I will hire you, but I cannot employ the boy that comes with you (although I need him and you require his help) because of the prohibition of some organization." That is un-American, and either that system of despotism will cease or the Republic itself must perish. [Applause.]

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman answer a question? Is it not unfortunately true that the average American boy is not inclined to learn a trade?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No no a thousand times no But he recom-No man, no combination of men should say it. It is unjust, it is

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, no; a thousand times no. But he recognizes that there was a time in this country when moral and intellectual worth were the measure of a man's social standing, and he has seen that standard changed and lowered by a system of immigration which has tended to dilute our moral organism, our social organism, our political organism, and degrade our business methods until the boys shun the association into which they may be thrown. not afraid of labor. They do not shun trades-far from it. have a right to shun the association of beings that are less than men. Labor is ennobling—it dignifies man—but we may bring to our shores to fill the places of worthy men those who, no matter why, are unfit to become citizens of the United States, but do none the less, and become mere voting animals. And we have refused to interfere until in the land vice holds the balance of power and we play to catch its favor.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Where does Mr. Powderly, the head of the Knights, stand on this very question you are discussing?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know where he stands. I do know that neither House of Congress up to this time has dared in the presence of political necessity to stand by the homes of my country. Congress has not done this; I hope it will do it before this session is over;

but I have no such expectation.

I protest again, as I always will, that no association in the world has a right to punish me and starve me to death because I hire this man or that. My friend from New York can not approve the course pursued or that. My friend from New York can not approve the course pursued in New York City in regard to the poor widow woman who kept a bakery, which she carried on for the support of herself and children. She hired a baker without the permission of this association, and these gentlemen who are supposed to have charge of the laboring classes of this country and their interests, tried to starve her to death; placed stalwart sentries before the door of this poor widow to starve her into starwart sentres before the door of this poor widow to starve her into surrendering the highest right an American free woman ever enjoyed, the right in an honest way to earn bread for herself and her children without the permission of the louts who masqueraded before her door. That is un-American; and against that I protest. It is in that line I am talking here to-day.

The man who denies that every man upon this floor (with no exception so far as I know) is the friend of labor in this country is a dema-I stand in the presence of men who helped to preserve the Republic, whose fathers won it, who themselves upheld it, who know that the homes of my country are the source of its strength and power, that that prosperity is not worth having which does not reach to every home in the land where intelligence, virtue, and industry abide. And there in the land where intelligence, virtue, and industry abide. And there is only one way to bring about that general prosperity—that is by means of the largest liberty to each individual to fight the battle of life as best he can, untrammeled by a system which prevents him from enjoying all the rights and privileges which ought to belong to free men.

But I beg pardon; I had not intended to go at such length into this question, though I can say that I am reasonably full of it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much edified by the discussion which has just taken place between two distinguished representatives of the laboring people of this country on the Republican side of the House. It would have been very advantageous, I doubt not, for the Democratic candidates in the late election if the gentleman from Ohio had delivered, prior to that election, the utterances to which he has given vent to-day.

he has given vent to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. He did.

Mr. CRAIN. If it be true, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, that he did express them, I am perfectly satisfied that those utterances were not greeted with that enthusiastic applause with which

The Republican party, Mr. Chairman, has posed as the advocate and the champion of the rights of the laboring men of this country. In every speech that was made by the leader of the party on the other side and by every man who followed in his wake, it was charged that the mission of the Republican party to-day, slavery having been abolished, was to emancipate the laboring men of this country from that slavery which they predicted would necessarily result if the Democratic view upon the tariff question should obtain, and the pauper labor of Europe come in competition with the laborers of this country

Last night I received a letter from a representative Knight of Labor in the city of Galveston, in which he stated that the reason why so many of the Knights of Labor who had heretofore aligned themselves with the Democratic party had voted against its nominees in the last election was that it had been started from Washington that the Democratic party was the enemy of the laboring man, and that the Republican party was his friend. He cited instances. He called attention to the fact that the Democratic leaders had refused to allow certain bills to come up in which the laboring man of this country was in-terested, and that the reply to the question why it had been done was that the Democratic party was the enemy of the laboring man and the Republican party was his friend.

And to-day what do we find? After an election in which the laboring men by casting the balance of power in behalf of the Republican candidates elected them to the high offices of President and Vice-President, we find one of the most distinguished representatives of that party on the floor of this House attacking the laboring men because, forsooth, they have done what capital has done-because they have organized themselves for their own protection. It has been asserted here repeatedly by the gentleman from Maine, by the gentleman from Ohio, and by other gentlemen who have spoken in behalf of the protective system, that the high wages in this country are attributable to that system. I venture to say that the reason the laboring men of this country have been able to maintain the rate of wages which they now receive is that they have organized themselves in trades unions and in Knights of Labor organizations, and in this way have compelled the corporations and other employers to pay them the rate of wages which they demand.

But, Mr. Chairman, when I arose it was not for the purpose of entering into this discussion. When the question of according to the Aping into this discussion. When the question of according to the Appropriations Committee the right of way for the consideration of this bill was before the House, it was stated by the chairman of that committee that any gentleman who desired to discuss, in connection with this bill, any question in which he was interested would be accorded the right to do so at length. I am interested in one item of the billthat which affects the appropriation for the securing of the reservation upon which Fort Brown is situated; and I ask that I may be accorded the right, when that item comes up, to discuss it for one hour.

I ask the unanimous consent of the House for that purpose

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous con-sent, when the item is reached for the Fort Brown reservation, he be allowed to address the committee for one hour. Is there objection?

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the pending question depends upon whether or not the Knights of Labor are in favor of steam-press printing or are against it. I do not think it is to be determined whether or not one party or the other favor this appropriation. It is a naked question of what is for the interests of the American people. It relates to the soundness of our circulating medium. If we can issue as good a bill by steam-press as by the hand-press, and we can do it at a less rate, of course, to my mind, there is nothing left in the way of difficulty in reaching the right conclusion.

I do think it is of the highest importance to the people of this coun-I do think it is of the highest importance to the people of this country that our circulating medium should be made as difficult to counterfeit as possible. I do not think there should be any question of cost in the issue of the bills at all. I do not undertake to pass upon the steam-press or hand-press methods. I do not claim to be an expert on that matter. I can only resort to the opinion of those who are of authority on this question. I find in this report, in the testimony of Mr. James J. Brooks, who was for twelve years at the head of the secret service division, and was in special charge of guarding our currency against counterfeiting, testifying before that committee and currency against counterfeiting, testifying before that committee and using the following language:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you examined notes executed by hand and by steam

The CHAIRMAN. Have you examined notes executed by hand and by steam plate-printing?

Mr. Brooks. I have seen some that were said to be executed by steam plate-printing, but of course I had to take the hearsay; I did not know; but those I saw were in my judgment inferior to the work that I had seen prior to the introduction of those machines.

The CHAIRMAN. Were those which you understood were printed by steam plate-printing, bills which could be counterfeited easier than those printed by hand?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, they were because they did not seem to have that care plate-printing, bills which could be counterfeited easier than those printed by hand?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, they were; because they did not seem to have that care taken with them. I have seen a number of blurred notes, but it may have been that these blurred notes were in consequence of the hurry of the demand for such a denomination, and the notes have gone out blurred and gone out on unsized paper. I remember during the administration of Mr. John Sherman there was a great deal of paper that was lying around. I think it was at the time they ceased printing fractional currency; and I understood the paper was cut up for various uses, for notes and for bonds, and this paper was localized fiber. I have seen notes on which, instead of the localized fiber running right across as it should, it ran the entire length of the note. About that period of time when this paper for economy's sake was being cut up, I have had a number of communications from around the country that a new counterfeit of the 20's and 50's was out, and when I sent for the notes I have found they had been printed on unsized paper and that they were genuine notes.

Now, in relation to these present issues, while I say I am not an expert, I do say I do not know where there is a greater temptation for counterfeiting than on these issues, from what cause I do not know—whether it is in the plates, whether it is lack of depth of engraving—but whatever it is, after a short season of use, the geometrical lathe-work is all blurred so that you can not tell whether they be genuine or not. There was a time when I would defy anybody to deceive me on a counterfeit note. I would look, for the difference between a counterfeit and a genuine, at the engraved work on the geometrical lathe, and if I found that perfect I should know it was genuine, for where it is done by hand I would find the lines broken and the crossing of them thick and I could readily tell it; but if you ask me to determine that now without a very close scrutiny of these notes I would respectfully dec

Again he says, referring to certain notes: At the first glance if I had given my judgment I would have been greatly deceived. If they were handed to me while new and crisp and had not suffered any extraordinary wear and tear, I should not be deceived in them. While in the Treasury on Thursday last I handled notes, genuine and counterfeit, and I tell you frankly I would not then hastily venture an opinion as to certain notes I handled, as to whether they were genuine or counterfeit.

So Mr. Brooks goes on in this way in his testimony to the effect that the present printing of these machines is more easily counterfeited.

Then Mr. Bell, who has been for some years at the head of the service, says:

The Chairman. Was that the case with those bills that were printed years back by a hand-press in the highest style of art?

Mr. Bell. I think not, because since I have been in the secret service—three years—I have had occasion to examine the old-style genuine bills and the old counterfeit bills which we have in our office. We have them in a book in the office, where we exhibit them to the public, and I have often gone to look at these bills, almost every day. Well, Mr. Brooks has said there are no better counterfeit bills than those that are shown there. It is harder to detect them now, for the reason the genuine bills are so poor—I will say that. I want to be placed on record as saying in my judgment the Government does not give the same protection to the Government securities as they should give; and this is my candid opinion, that the Government should not look to economy; they should look to the highest style of art. It is much easier for the counterfeiter to deceive the public now, in my opinion, than ever before. It ought not to be that the Government should regard a few dollars in printing their bills by steam and with cheap paper. They should buy the best paper and use the highest style of art in printing, and get the best men for engravers. They should be printed by hand, and every other means should be adopted to protect the public from counterfeiters.

Mr. Bell. Yes; I mean to say that if the genuine bill was printed on the best of paper and the highest style of art now, it would be easier to detect than it would be with these silver certificates; that is what I mean to say. I have not said this yet, which I intended to say. Chief Brooks said something about it, He meant to have said it—I know he did, for we have talked it over together—

I mean to say now it is easier and less difficult to counterfeit now than ten or twelve years ago. They do not now have to engrave the plate entirely as they used to do. They now use a photographic process, and they can get a counterfeit nearer the genuine now than they could with that older issue; and in place of the Government increasing the difficulty to counterfeit the bill, to my mind they are just opening the doors to counterfeiters. If that is plain English I want that put down.

Here is an officer at the head of the secret service who is specially charged with the matter, and who reports to the Commissioner and the House as I have read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MANSUR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Mc-Cook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3794) granting to the Big Horn and Southern Railroad Company a right of way through part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Ter-

A concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress shall meet in the Hall of Representatives on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1889, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and the laws, to count the electoral votes; in which concurrence was requested.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (8. 3116) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Wynne, asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAWYER, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. TURPIE managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TRACEY was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. BLOUNT. I will not take the time, sir, of the committee further, although I could read various extracts from the testimony of the former chief of the secret service division of the Treasury Department, and also from the testimony of the present chief of that division, bearing upon this subject.

The gentleman making this report, and I have not had time to examine it thoroughly, uses the following language:

Mr. Graves admits that steam-printing is not equal to hand-printing.

Now, sir, if that be true, and I know of no better testimony to go to than the persons who have been selected by the Government for fifteen years to watch the currency, to watch counterfeiting, and to put offi-cers, where there is any allegation or suspicion of crime, upon the track of the wrong-doer-I say I know of no better persons to whom I can resort for testimony than these very persons to ascertain the exact character of the currency of the country and whether it be true that the work of the counterfeiter is rendered easier under one process than the

To my mind, if it is not conclusive testimony it is sufficient to put me on my guard and say that I will vote no more money on this question while the matter is in doubt.

Gentlemen say, "Why, this matter is under the Treasury Department, and under the head of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; let them correct it." If it shall appear from these high sources that I have quoted that this has not been done in the past, if there is a difference of opinion between the Treasury Department and the chief of that bureau and other officials, and there shall be raised a question of doubt about it, it behooves every member on this floor to stop the use of this process until the matter shall have been determined beyond all question of doubt. I have a high respect for the head of the Treasury Department and I have a high respect for the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but that personal respect has nothing to do with the matter presented here. Like the gentleman from Ohio, I am not here to do the bidding of the Knights of Labor or of any other person, but simply to follow out the mental processes dictated by an honest effort on my part to do what is right, and taking this testimony as it appears on the report of the committee of the House, I am unwilling that this process shall be continued, not because of any dictum from the Knights of Labor, but because I believe that the interests of the people of this country and of all the people of this country are very greatly involved in the soundness of the currency which is to circulate amongst them and to be utilized in the transaction of their business.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEJOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. KERR. When did Mr. Graves, the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, admit that steam-printing was inferior? At what time was that done?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have already stated to the gentleman that I have not had the opportunity to examine all the testimony in this connection. I quoted the testimony of Mr. Brooks, formerly at the head of the secret service division of the Treasury, and also Mr. Bell, and then I read from the report of the committee, made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] a quotation to the effect—

That Mr. Graves admits himself that steam-printing is not equal to hand-

More than that I have not undertaken to say.

Mr. KERR. Then why does he recommend the other?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Because it is dirtier and cheaper.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I fail to see the justice or the logic of this amendment. The bill provides the payment of 1 cent for a thousand impressions. The contract provides that while we use these machines we shall pay $1 per thousand. The proposed amendment is that we shall use these machines in accordance with the contract, and pay only 50 cents per thousand in violation of the contract. And so, I repeat, I do not see the justice of the amendment. We should either pay that which we agreed to pay or stop using the machines. Shall we stop using the machines?

I personally know nothing of the quality of the work which they turn out, but I do know, as has been stated here so well by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], that we should be careful in the producfrom Georgia [Mr. Blount], that we should be careful in the production of our currency to take every possible precaution against its being counterfeited. I state further that a committee of this House investigated this subject, and that before them appeared, not gentlemen with eloquent speeches upon political and social economy, but men who were experts in the matter, to testify. They reported the testimony to this House and their conclusions of fact upon that testimony.

There the question of facts, from the testimony which was so taken before them, showed that these impressions made by these steam-presses were much more liable to be counterfeited than those made upon hand-presses. These are the conclusions of a committee of this House upon presses. These are the conclusions of a committee of this House upon the sworn testimony taken before it. The House took these conclusions by an almost unanimous vote, and passed a bill suspending the operations of these steam-presses.

I read that report and every word of the testimony adduced by that committee carefully months ago, and I say here and now that if I had been a juror trying that case I should have been compelled upon my oath as a juror to find the same conclusions of fact upon that testimony which the committee did that took the testimony and made the report. So it seems to me that this House must act, not upon what some member saw when he was escorted through the bureau by the head of the bureau—a member who does not pretend to be an expert in these matters; not by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is not and does not pretend to be an expert in these matters; but it seems to me the judgment of the House ought to rest upon the testimony of experts examined before that committee, found true by that committee, and indorsed by the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

Mr. RANDALL. Iask unanimous consent that all debate shall close in twenty minutes upon this paragraph and all amendments offered or

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments which have been offered or are to be offered be closed in twenty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would like to know whether the amendment offered is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York has not been read; but the gentleman can offer it.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to cut off any amendment; but all I want is to close debate on this paragraph in twenty minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New ork is not pending, but it can be offered.

Mr. FARQUHAR. May I offer that amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may offer it; but the The gentleman may offer it; but the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not affect the presentation of amendments. The request is to close debate on this paragraph—on amendments that are offered or to be offered-in twenty minutes. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I shall object unless I can be recognized to offer

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has repeatedly stated that the gentleman may offer his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman has any apprehension that his amendment will be cut off, I will state to him that I am not going to cut off any amendment. I am only desirous of closing debate on the pending paragraph.

Mr. FARQUHAR (to Mr. RANDALL). Can I be recognized to occupy part of the twenty minutes?

Mr. RANDALL. It is a matter for the Chair to decide as to whom he will recognize.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has promised to recognize four gentlemen. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that all debate on the pending paragraph shall close in twenty

Mr. ADAMS. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The request is, that all debate on this paragraph and the amendments offered and to be offered be closed in twenty min-

Mr. FARQUHAR. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LAWLER. There has been a great deal said on this question both for and against. I do not understand that the friends of labor object to the introduction of machinery. We welcome machinery, because it is the brains and the handiwork of the mechanic. Capitalists were never known to introduce an idea, much less a piece of machinery.

[Laughter.] With the number of bills that we find upon the Calendar [Laughter.] With the number of bills that we find upon the Calendar here, carried over from session to session, and very many important matters now occupying the time and attention of Congress, and with an appeal made by the press, by business men, and by the working classes of the country for the consideration of, among other bills, that known as the Chace bill, and all the appeals that have been made, I say, to this Congress show that its members have failed to accomplish what was desired.

I say, in justice to the people of the country, that too much time is consumed in the consideration of questions of this class. It would not be so noticeable if this was the first occasion when this question was presented; but in fact we have had two or three reports upon it heretofore. The whole matter in a nutshell is that these steam-presses do not produce as good work as that which is done by hand. That fact has been clearly demonstrated by the committee representing the men who are producing these bills. They have shown the product of both kinds of presses to more than a hundred members of the Fortyninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and it is evident to every one who has seen the bills that the workmanship of the steam-presses is not equal to that of the others. Hence I say this is not a fight against the introduction of improved machinery. We welcome improved machinery; we dare not set ourselves up against it. But in this matter it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of not less than two committees of this House that steam-presses do not do the work satisfactorily. However, my object in rising on this occasion was to suggest, as an hum-ble member of this House, that we should devise some way by which the business of Congress might be facilitated, and which would enable us to get more work done in a given time than we do now. Here, for instance, is a question which has occupied the whole of the working time of this day, when it might easily have been settled, and ought to have been settled, in an hour or less.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I now send to the desk, providing that hereafter the name of each person whose portraitshall be placed upon any bond, security, note, stamp, silver certificate, or fractional or postal currency of the United States shall be inscribed upon the plate under the portrait. The object of using such portraits in this way is not simply to adorn the currency, but to teach lessons of history and patriotism, to educate the people in those respects. We have thus spread abroad, and in daily circulation among the people, portraits of many of our illustrious dead. In some instances the name is below the portrait, but only in few. The name ought to accompany the likeness in every case, so that it would be shown what hero or statesman is thus honored.

Few, even of our most intelligent citizens, can tell the names of all the great men or women whose features appear upon our currency or our stamps, and to many people these portraits are meaningless pictures. The true purpose for which they are used is not subserved unless the names are there. The additional expense which would arise from the adoption of this amendment is so insignificant as to be unworthy of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], which will be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, page 12, insert the following:

"And provided further, That hereafter the name of each person whose portrait shall be placed upon any of the plates for bonds, securities, notes, stamps, or fractional or postal currency of the United States shall be inscribed below such portrait."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have an amendment at the desk which I hope will be read now

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On line 15, page 12, after the word "retired," amend as follows:
"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the repair or reconstruction of steam plate-printing presses."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I only want to call attention to the fact that when these Milligan presses were placed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the original contract, one of the paragraphs of that contract read as follows:

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will also furnish the power, heat, and other materials consumed in printing, and will charge you—

That is, the patenteewith the repairs to the machine.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find in the other three contracts following that there is no mention made of the repairs, and I do know that the United States are now paying for all the repairs and for the reconstruc-tion of these machines. I also know that it was nominated in the bond that Steele & Milligan should pay for them, and I simply want to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that these parties ought either to be required to return the money which they have taken from the Government unjustly, or, if that can not be done, that at least we should stop this expenditure.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, upon his conversion to a system of legislation which I sought to apply when the appropriation for the expenses of the Civil Service Reform Commission was before the House. Bills for the repeal of the act creating that commission were buried in committee, and the only opportunity to reach the commission was by striking out the appropria-tion for its support. The gentleman gently chided me for this indirect method of trying to reach the commission.

My distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. Cox], who is con-fessedly responsible for the civil-service excrescence, while humbly expressing his contrition, kindly informed me that the manly way to reach the commission would be to bring forward a proposition for its repeal. He did not, however, out of the immensity of his kindness and the quarter-century of his parliamentary service, vouchsafe the information how this was to be done.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania appears to be treading in my foot-

Mr. KERR. I rise to a question of order. Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not raise any point of Mr. KERR. I submit that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings] ought to discuss the question before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, let him go ahead.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am endeavoring to discuss the question before the House; and I am not responsible for the lack of appreciation and comprehension on the part of my friend from Iowa [Mr. Kerr]. [Laughter.]

Now, I say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania appears to be treading in my footsteps. He seems to be trying to accomplish by indirect legislation what has not been accomplished by direct legislation. I honor him therefor, although the necessity for his action is not so great as was mine. The House has already passed upon this question. It has already, after due and careful consideration, condemned these steam-presses

It has already condemned their work as inefficient, and, as the gentleman from New Jersey so aptly said, as "an invitation to the criminal ingenuity of the world." That bill, however, is upon exhibition in the United States Senate. It is hung up in one of its committeerooms. It has been left to the tender mercies of that convocation of millionaires who take such loving interest in measures for the industrial welfare of the workingman, and watch railroad legislation so carefully in the interests of the people. It is because there is no hope of the rescue of this bill from the clutches of these millionaires that this clause was probably inserted in this appropriation bill.

The end justifies the means. I hope the House will stand by its action heretofore by standing by the Committee on Appropriations now.

Let the millionaire body crack its whip. We who come direct from the bosom of the people have it on the hip, and we can only secure an acknowledgment of our rights and of the rights of those we were chosen to represent by keeping it there and by standing by this committee.

[Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Long], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, page 12, strike out the words "one cent" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fifty cents."

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "50 cents" and inserting "$1;" making the clause read: For royalty at not exceeding $1 per thousand impressions

Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee for a few moments upon this amendment, if I am now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been limited by order of the committee.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That, I understand, was simply upon the then pending question; not upon this.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was limited on all amendments. Three minutes of the time, however, remain.

Mr. RANDALL. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from New York should occupy five minutes, if the House will consent.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I think I can say all I desire to say in the three minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose simply of perfecting this bill. I do not understand that we are thereby to be committed in favor of voting for the continuance of these presses at all, or for the use of steam-presses. But we have had exhibited here, and But we have had exhibited here, and partly read, the contract which has been made between the patentees and the Secretary of the Treasury, acting for the Government. That contract provides for the building of certain steam-presses and permitting them to be used by the Government as the property of the Government, and for paying for them.

It further provides, not that the Government shall continue to use them, but if it shall continue to do so, it shall pay for their use $1 per thousand impressions, except in one contingency—that is to say, if the royalty shall be reduced to other parties the Government shall have the benefit of a similar reduction. That contract remains as a whole; and if you undertake to change it by making the rate of payment 99 cents per thousand impressions or 1 cent per thousand impressions, you violate the contract under which the Government has received this property from the patentees. In doing anything of that kind the Government would lay its strong hand upon these contractors and by force compel them to submit to that which as between two private individuals who had entered into a contract would not be permitted.

Mr. SOWDEN. Is it not optional on the part of the Government to rescind the contract?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I am not advocating the retention of these presses; but if the Government keeps them and undertakes to use them under the contract it must pay for such use according to the terms of the contract-$1 for each thousand impressions; and we have terms of the contract—$1 for each thousand impressions; and we have no right, simply because we have the power of the Government back of us, to say that we will pay only one-half of the contract price.

Mr. FARQUHAR. How long does the contract continue?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. During the lifetime of the patent.

If any gentleman meets me with the proposition that this contract can not be enforced without the authority of Congress, which must make the necessary appropriation, he is simply begging the question. No part of this agreement can be enforced without an appropriation on the part of Congress. These machines can not be paid for without such an appropriation. I maintain simply that when the Government has an appropriation. I maintain simply that when the Government has bought and taken possession of these machines it has done so with the right to use them according to the terms of the contract under which it took them; and good faith on the part of the Government requires that Congress should carry out this contract under which the machines were taken. We have the right to reject these presses, to throw them back upon the hands of the contractors, if we do not think it wise to continue the use of them; but if we keep them we are bound to pay the price agreed upon, unless the contractors permit other persons to use the machines for a lower price.

Mr. LONG. Can not the Secretary of the Treasury in good faith say "We can not use these machines any longer, and hereafter we will pay you nothing?"

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. May he not also say "We will not use these machines any longer unless you agree to a modification of the contract; if you will agree to accept 50 cents per thousand impressions, we will continue to use the machines; otherwise not?"

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, that may be done without any

Mr. FARQUHAR. Can not the Government stop these machines being operated any day it chooses?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And would the Government then be bound to y the royalty of $1 per thousand impressions? Is it not the fact that if the Government discontinues the use of the machines it does not pay the royalty?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I concede that.
Mr. FARQUHAR. That is just what I am contending should be done, that the Government should stop the use of these pres

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I am contending that the Government should keep its contracts with individuals, and should not, because it has the physical force, put itself in the position of extorting from an individual that which does not belong to it and that which is not right.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I thought the gentleman's proposition was that the contract was for the life of the patent.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, it is; but the payment of the royalty is dependent upon the use of the machines. If the machines are not used, nothing is to be paid. If they are used, then under the contract the Government must pay for them at the rate of $1 per thousand impressions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes

p. m.), the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, January 24, 1889.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who hast abolished death and hast brought life and immortality to light, the Prince of Life, our God and our Savior, we bow humbly, and thoughtfully, and soberly before Thee in the presence of death, and thank Thee that we may live this life with all its possibilities and hopes. We pray Thee, comfort the bereaved ones; sustain, and strengthen, and sanctify. Overrule for good all that is dark and trying and afflictive, and enable us so to live that we may serve our reperation faithfully in the foor and less a Co. 3. generation faithfully in the fear and love of God.

Grant that this great Government may be so imbued with the spirit of justice, and of truth, and of right, so baptized into the life of Him who came that He might minister to men, that it may be helpful to all who are in need, and that the interests of this great land of ours, under the guidance of these Thy servants thus exalted, may be ad-

Guide us this day. Help us so to walk in Thy fear, conscious of Thy nearness. Teach us our frailties. Teach us our dependence upon Thee. And seeking Thee, O God, we know that Thou wilt be found of us, and that Thy peace, the peace of God which passeth all under-standing, shall keep our hearts and minds. Grant that as we have served our generation faithfully we may fall asleep and be gathered to our fathers. We ask it all in the name of Christ, our Redeemer.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of privilege in connection with the report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I suppose this is the proper time, following the reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Corrections in the official record can be made by applying to the Reporter.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not a correction of my own remarks which I desire, but the remarks of some one else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed, if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. When I made allusion yesterday to my intention to call up the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election, the Senator from Louisiana replied in about half a dozen words. I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning his remarks extended so that they cover half a column.

Mr. EUSTIS. Which Senator from Louisiana does the Senator refer to? He did not mention.

Mr. CHANDLER. I refer to the Senator from Louisiana who is not now present in the Senate, not the Senator who is addressing me.
Mr. EUSTIS. He should mention his name, I suggest.

Mr. CHANDLER. I refer to the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. Gibson. I find that there is half a column of a speech in the RECORD, not ten words of which were uttered by the Senator.

I desire to enter a motion to strike out the speech as inserted, and to have inserted in the RECORD the speech as it appears upon the Reporter's notes. Having made this motion, I will wait until the Senator comes into the Senate Chamber before calling it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to submit his motion in writing

Mr. CHANDLER. I will do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator to withhold the motion until the Senator from Louisiana comes in. Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT KEY WEST, FLA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communica-tion from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department recommending that an appropriation of $3,000 be made for a sea-wall to protect public buildings at Key West, Fla., and concurring in the recommendation of that report; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the mayor and city council of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for a grant of certain mountain lands adjoining the creek which supplies the city with water for culinary and other domestic purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dakota Territory, representing 2,500 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia,

He also presented the petition of J. A. Miller and 70 others (32 voters and 39 women), citizens of Wellington, Kans., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of P. R. Stratton and 113 others (43 voters and 71 women), citizens of Oxford, Mass., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLODGETT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Salem N. J., praying for the proposal of a national prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was ordered to lie on the

He also presented a petition of citizens of Dennisville, N. J., and a petition of 600 citizens of Salem, N. J., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PASCO. I present the petition of Isaacs & Co., of New York City, E. J. Arapian, of Key West, Fla., and 71 others, merchants of New York City and fishermen of sponges residing in Florida, praying that sponges be not placed on the free-list in the bill now pending between the two Houses to reduce taxation. As this matter has not yet been disposed of by Congress, and the petition came into my hands after the passage of the bill by the Senate, I move that it lie on the #### RAILROAD BRIDGES IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11604) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee, to report it favorably with an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. As to the bridge authorized to be constructed across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, I wish to state that the road leading up to the Caney Fork is now constructed, and I am informed that the road is in operation to that point. The company are exceedingly anxious to commence the work of constructing the bridge immediately, and I therefore ask the consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read for information.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to its being considered subject to objection, as we do other bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to objection the bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole and regarded as open to amend-

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill:

Provided also. That all railroad companies desiring to use the bridges aforesaid for the passage of their trains or cars over the same shall have that privilege upon such just and reasonable terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, and in event of their failure to agree, the matter shall be finally determined by the Secretary of War, whose determination shall be final. Equal rights and privileges shall also be granted all telegraph and telephone companies in the placing wires upon said bridges, and if the construction of said bridges shall not be commenced in two years and completed within two years from the approval of this act all the provisions of the same shall be void.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the first section by adding at the end of it, on page 2, these words:

And Congress shall have the right to regulate the tolls and charges in respect of the use of said bridge.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point is, my friend evidently sees, that as this provides for a bridge for the people, wagons and horses and pas-sengers, and as the State Legislature would probably have no authority to deal with a United States corporation, or a corporation acting under an authority of this kind, I think it right that the legislative power should be reserved to prevent that bridge being turned into an instrument of excessive charge to the people there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

Mr. VEST. I have not got a copy of the bill before me—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will first be read.
The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the first section of the bill, on page 2, it is proposed to insert:

And Congress shall have the right to regulate the tolls and charges in respect of the use of said bridge.

Mr. VEST. This bill is an amendment to an act already in force, and in the original act, if I am not very much mistaken, there is the ordinary provision which we have in all the bridge bills, that the Secretary of War shall approve the rates of tolls and charges. That is the provision we always put in these bills, so as to get rid of the delay which would attend the enactment of an act of Congress

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should have no objection to its being so, but this would be a superadded provision reserving explicit legislative authority by law to make a regulation; but until that regulation of Congress should be made to supersede what the Secretary of War had done or failed to do, this authority would continue.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to it, although the other provision, the ordinary one, applies in these bills, because it is made somewhere

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to get rid of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend—probably it is not necessary, but it is always safer to do it—by adding as a new section at the end of the bill:

The right to amend or repeal this act whenever Congress shall deem that the public good requires it is hereby reserved.

I presume there will be no objection to that.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to remark to the Senator from Vermont that the original act has that provision in it, and this amendatory bill is subject to all the provisions of the original act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should not agree with my friend about that. Mr. VEST. There is a special enactment that contains a provision that the provisions of the original act shall apply to these bridges.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all true; but as I have seen so many struggles in court over that question, that might be held as not apply-ing to the repealing clause. Here is the last act which confers new ing to the repealing clause. Here is the last act which confers new rights, and I want to have the capacity preserved in Congress to repeal this identical act if it wishes to do so.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill as a new sec-

The right to amend or repeal this act whenever Congress shall deem that the public good requires it is hereby reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Vest, Mr. Sawyer, and Mr. Harris were appointed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 24, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W.

H. MILBURN, D. D., as follows:

Almighty God, since last we gathered in this place, a representative of the people has fallen at his post, doing his duty manfully and faithfully, as though he had fallen in the charge at the cannon's mouth, or in the deadly breach, and therefore entitled to worthy and honorable recognition and commemoration.

As we look at the desk draped in black, and at the empty seat, and think of our friend who only yesterday was with us and to-day is beyond the stars, grant that the solemn meaning and mysteries of life may rest upon every heart, not to unnerve and appall, but to fix in every breast the high resolve to live nobly, truly, simply, for the country's interest and honor and for the welfare of our fellow-men; and that we shall walk before Thee in all Thy commandments blameless.

Hear our devout petitions, we beseech Thee; in behalf of the wife who has been widowed, and the children orphaned, the fatherless children who have lost their best earthly friend and protector. Comfort and they there was besseen Thee; and may they find in the faith and in cheer them, we beseech Thee; and may they find in the faith and in the love and presence of Christ that only consolation which the broken heart can discover upon this earth.

We pray through His great name, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES N. BURNES.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the sad duty has been devolved upon me by the Representatives in Congress from Missouri of announcing to the House the death of Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, late a Representa-tive of the Commonwealth of Missouri. His death occurred at Willard's Hotel, in this city, at 12.46 o'clock this morning, after an illness of less than ten hours.

At some time in the near future, Mr. Speaker, the Missouri delegation will ask the House to suspend its ordinary proceedings to pay a fitting tribute to the worth of the eminent gentleman who so recently was one of our esteemed colleagues, and whose death is a calamity not only to the great State he served so long and so ably but also to the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I offer for present consideration the resolutions I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES N. BURNES, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That a select committee consisting of seven members of the House and three members of the Senate be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral, and to escort the remains of the deceased to their place of burial, and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved. That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate; and that as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 25, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I find in the RECORD of the 24th instant, in the colloquy that I had with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], some remarks that I did not make, and it was as much a surprise to me as to him perhaps that they appeared in the RECORD. In the colloquy between the Senator and myself I spoke in a very low tone of voice, having been out of my seat when he began his remarks. In going out of the Capitol I stopped at the Reporter's room for a moment and found one of the Reporters coming out with my remarks, saying he thought that he had not caught them accurately. I presumed they had no report of the remarks, and I sat down and wrote hastily what appears in the RECORD; but upon reflection I concluded not to put that in the RECORD, but something else which I supposed would reproduce as closely as possible the remarks I had actually made, finding that the remarks I had written out hastily were incorrect in several respects. I inadvertently, perhaps, handed the original paper that I wrote to the Reporter, and that appeared in the RECORD. I had assumed that the Reporters did not take down my remarks fully, as the gentleman stated to me, but I find that they have my remarks taken down more or less accurately, and I shall ask leave to insert them instead of the words that appeared in the RECORD. The remarks which appeared were manifestly incorrect, because I am made to say among other things that—

Here is a proposition to investigate the election of the Senators, their title to seat in this body.

Now, there is no proposition in the resolution offered by the Sena-tor from New Hampshire to investigate my election or the election of my colleague. The proposition, as I understand it, was to investigate the election of the members of the General Assembly before the people; that is, that the Senate should be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of members of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, and to ascertain whether the people of that State should vote for Presidential electors, and whether they had a republican form of government. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I had reduced to writing the motion which I made yesterday in the absence of the Senator from Louisiana, doing this in accordance with the suggestion of the Chair. I shall not offer the resolution which I had prepared in view of the statement made by the Senator; but I desire to have read by the Secretary the report of the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana, as taken down by the Official Reporter, which I have just handed the Senator.

Mr. GIBSON. I have not looked at them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested,

there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I handed them to the Senator a few moments

Mr. GIBSON. Here they are. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Girson. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator testing the sense of the Senate on that question whenever he desires to do so, provided I may be present. If there is any memorial here from any member of the Legislature of Louisiana or any citizen of Louisiana asking for an investigation, I should be glad, if that citizen feel aggrieved, to move that the investigation shall take place. But I am opposed to an investigation being made at the request of a citizen of New Hampshire against the wishes of the people of Louisiana.

Mr. GIBSON. I must say that is the first time I have read the paper or heard it read. I do not think that paper states accurately what I said. I forget precisely what I did state, but I intended to state, and I think I did state, that if there was any memorial here from the Legislature of the State asking for an investigation, or any body of people, I should not object to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe the report as read from the Reporter's notes to be a correct report of what the Senator said. It conforms to my own recollection of the Senator's statement at the time. In answer to the Senator's remark, as appears by the RECORD, I said:

The whole Republican party, I think, is ready for an investigation except the two colored men who, I see, were run out from Louisiana yesterday for undertaking to organize the Knights of Labor in that State.

I was willing to leave the subject with that remark as a reply to the statement of the Senator. Much to my surprise, however, and to the surprise of other Senators, there appeared in the RECORD a speech of the Senator's which occupies nearly one-half of a column of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD and contains statements which certainly never would have been passed by me without comment. For instance, the following statement is made:

And the complaint is that we should investigate, not the recent elections in his own State, the State of New Hampshire, or his neighboring States of Rhode Island and New York, for Representatives or State officers or Presidential electors, when the newspapers of the country have teemed for months with charges that the elections in these States were characterized with wholesale fraud and the open purchase of votes. The Senator turns a deaf and unwilling car to these complaints, and proposes, against all precedents, against the wishes and interests of the people of Louisiana, Republicans and Democrats, to put their State, its good name, its public order, its State government, its henored public servants, on trial before the Senate and the country.

If the Senator had made that statement I should have characterized his aspersion upon the State of New Hampshire as unjustified by any facts whatever, and certainly an opportunity would have been given to the Senators from the State of Rhode Island and the State of New York to speak as they saw fit concerning the Senator's attack upon their States. But as those remarks were not uttered, of course suitable reply was not made to them.

The Senator now says that this speech was inserted inadvertently in the RECORD. I do not quite understand the position of the Senator. Does he mean to say that he did not write out this speech exactly as it appears in the RECORD, or how did it happen? Will the Senator state more explicitly how it happens that this speech, elaborately prepared, does appear in the RECORD instead of the simple remark of ten words which the Senator made at the time?

Mr. GIBSON. I have stated to the Senator and the Senate precisely how it occurred. It is not worth while for me to repeat it. The speech as it appears in the RECORD is a repetition, more or less, of what I have said twice on the floor of the Senate, except in the one paragraph that I referred to. I have told the Senator how I had in the haste of the moment written out some remarks, not intending that they should appear in the RECORD, and withdrew them and supposed I was handing to the Reporter other remarks that conformed, when I came to reflect upon the matter, more nearly to what I had really said in the Senate. I disavowed the purpose of having those remarks appear in the RECORD. I think that frank explanation ought to be satisfactory to every Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. It may be satisfactory to the Senator; it may be satisfactory to others; but I think I have a right to ask the Senator how it happens that he had this prepared speech on this point ready to inadvertently get into the hands of the reporter when he had no knowledge that I intended to give notice that it was my purpose to call up the resolution. That is what I do not understand, Mr. President.

The Senator certainly wrote out the remarks, and they are printed in the RECORD precisely as they appear in the paper, in the handwrit-ing of the Senator, which he handed to the Official Reporter. He had no knowledge that this subject was to be taken up; and therefore it seems to me he must have prepared this speech after the colloquy had taken place between him and myself. If, having thus prepared it, the Senator says on his honor as a Senator that it inadvertently was inserted in the RECORD, I have nothing more to say.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 21, 1888, a full statement of all purchases of bonds made by the Treasury Department during the period from March 4, 1885, to date; which, on motion of Mr. Plumb, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make two reports this morning from the Committee on Appropriations, and it will greatly promote my own convenience if I can have unanimous consent for the consideration of these two bills this morning after the routine business is over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the trust bill acted upon this morning. I do not think it will take more than five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The titles of the bills reported by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; and A bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Iowa.

LIGHT-SHIPS AT SANDY HOOK AND NANTUCKET.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill (H. R. 11683) for the establishment of a light-ship with a fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, and to ask that it may receive present consideration from the fact that if it is to become a law, it is very important that it should do so before the sundry civil appropriation bill is passed.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the bill this morning reported by him may be now considered, which can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is that an amendment offered in the Senate to the bill that came from the House?

Mr. FRYE. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Maine to explain it, subject to objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it necessary to put on that amendment?
Mr. FRYE. Yes, it was deemed by the committee important.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to objection there is not. I reserve the right to object. I dare say I shall not object when the Senator from Maine has a chance to explain it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to say a word. The House bill has once passed Congress. It passed at the first session both the House and Senate, but reached the President too late for his signature. It has now passed the House of Representatives by unanimous consent, and I dislike very much to have added to it any amendment which may result in its defeat.

Mr. FRYE. I will say to the Senator from New York that I have not the slightest idea that there is any danger of its defeat. The provision for the Nantucket light-ship also passed both branches of Congress at the former session, and by mistake was not signed by the President. Both measures have been reported unanimously by the committees of both the House and Senate and recommended by the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator whether these provisions are recommended by the Light-House Board?

Mr. FRYE. They are. Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $60,000 to establish off Sandy Hook, entrance to New York Harbor, a new lightship with a steam fog-signal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

That there be constructed and established a first-class light-ship with a steam fog-signal off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Massachusetts, near Nantucket, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $60,000: Provided, That the construction of said light-ships shall be let to the highest responsible bidders after advertisement, and that they shall be built in American ship-yards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the establishment of light-ships with fog-signals at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, and off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Massachusetts."

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Palmer, Mr. Cullom, and Mr. Gorman were appointed.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3775) for the establishment of a light-ship with a steam fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor; and A bill (S. 3840) to establish a light-ship off Great Round Shoal, near Nantucket, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL MONEY-ORDERS.

Mr. SAWYER. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from $50 to $100, and I ask unanimous consent, as it is a short bill, that it be passed at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4028 of the Revised Statutes so as to read:

SEC. 4028. The Postmaster-General may conclude arrangements with the post departments of foreign governments with which postal conventions have been or may be concluded for the exchange, by means of postal orders, of small sums of money, not exceeding $100 in amount, at such rates of exchange and compensation to postmasters and under such rules and regulations as he may deem expedient; and the expenses of establishing and conducting such systems of exchange may be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved. That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, either by full committee or such subcommittee as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to continue during the recess of Congress the investigation authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolution, and also to visit any reservations, bands, or bodies of Indians under the jurisdiction of the United States to which, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

Mr. GORMAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent at this time for a reprint of Senate bill 3401 and the report. Mr. Smith informs me that the document-room is entirely out of both bills and reports.
Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill?
Mr. FRYE. The Pacific railroad funding bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and report will be ordered printed if there be no objection.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and request a conference on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate insist on its amendment to House bill 9051, being the tariff bill, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay or allowances due such officers, known as the longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over under the

The PRESIDENT pro-tempore. It is so ordered.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask consent to call up the two appropriation bills I named. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not think it will interfere with his bill, as I believe these bills will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. SHERMAN. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Iowa I shall interpose no objection, although the trust bill is really the unfinished business of the morning hour.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to interfere with that bill. I will allow it to stand as unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 11658

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Iowa asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. STATE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3445, in relation to trusts and combinations. Mr. HOAR. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, formerly Louisiana State Bank, was passed by the Senate on Wednesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill named by him was passed. The motion will be formally entered.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the vote passing that bill be reconsidered, and that the bill be referred again to the Committee on Claims. Since the vote of the Senate, which I favored very earnestly, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], has made an examination at the Treasury Deportment and has learned some facts which, without stating them now, may not affect the result of the matter as it seems to me, but he thinks they ought to be examined and considered by the committee, and by the Senate before the bill finally passes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 3715) for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, formerly Louisiana State Bank, was passed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voor-HEES], who seemed to take considerable interest in this bill, is not

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Indiana understands the motion and assents to it. I stated it to him.

Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator moves that the action of the Senate in the passage of the bill be reconsidered. The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the pension appropriation bill was passed to-day. I simply want the motion entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was passed. The motion will be entered.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. While I am on the floor I will make another motion, and that is, when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday

Mr. SHERMAN. In the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] I object to that motion being put, and hope the Senate will not allow that to be pressed because the Senator from Maine wishes to call up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion for the present.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew my motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3445.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. SHER-MAN, in lines 9 and 10 of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, to strike out the words "competes with any similar articles upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in due course of trade;" so as to read:

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend, in line 11 of the substitute, by inserting after the word "another," the words "or to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Territory." The District is omitted in the enumeration of the political bodies to or from which the transportation is to be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, section 1, after the word "another," it is proposed to insert:

Or to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Territory.

So as to read:

Or which shall be transported from one State or Territory to another or to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Ter-

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I now move an amendment, to come in as a second section, not as a substitute for the present second section, but preceding that, making that present second section the third section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. If one of the purposes of any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination shall be to compel any person, partnership, or corporation to become a party thereto, or to cease from doing any lawful business, or to sell and dispose of any lawful business, or if acts shall be done under any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination which have for their purpose or which shall tend to compel the giving up or sale of any lawful business, the person, partnership, or corporation injured thereby may sue for and recover in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction the damages sustained thereby of any person or corporation a party to any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination, or of all or any number less than all of such parties, and if any purchaser of articles specified in the preceding section shall be put to additional cost by the advancing of the price of such articles by means or because of any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination, he may in like manner sue for and recover the damages sustained, which shall in such case be estimated at the full consideration or sum paid by him for the articles so advanced in price as aforesaid.

Mr. HOAR. I think on reflection that the suggestion and they the

Mr. HOAR. I think, on reflection, that the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio is a wise one, that this proposed section had better come in after the second section as section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be considered as a proposed amendment to come in after section 2, and to be, if adopted, section 3.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read once more.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before it is read I wish to say that I have read the section very carefully, and although I am not authorized, as a matter of course in recording this bill for the Course in recording the bill for the b accept it, yet I believe it does amplify and make clearer and stronger the provisions of the second section. As far as I am concerned, I shall vote for it with pleasure. It has evidently been very carefully drawn by persons who understand the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire it this bill has been reported by a committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been reported twice by the Committee on Finance with a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. BUTLER. This amendment, it seems to me from a casual reading of it, is a very important one.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been very carefully considered.

Mr. BUTLER. I would suggest that it be printed, and that the matter go over until we can examine it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill was introduced at the last session, and it has been printed two or three times. It has been up before, and, after being carefully considered, went over at the request of Senators. There is not a single thing, I am satisfied, but what the Senator will heartily approve. There are three sections of the measure as reported. The first declares the principle of the common law against combinations, trusts, etc., to affect the value of articles necessary to human life. The second section authorizes any person injured by such a combination to sue for the recovery of damages, etc. The section now offered simply emphasizes that by providing for cases where the combination extends to preventing a man from carrying on his business. The third section as reported, but which will be the fourth section now, is simply a penal clause declaring that any one who violates the preceding sections shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I understood the reading of the section proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts aright, one of its provisions was that any persons compelling another to give up his business and join with them should be liable to the provisions of the act. I inquire whether that is sufficient, whether you ought not to go so far as to say "or shall induce by offers of stock?" The object, I suppose, is to break up these combinations, and if you limit the prohibition simply to cases of compelling persons to give up their business you do not cover proceedings by which persons are brought into combinations by being induced to give up their business. Why not after the word "compel" insert "or who shall induce?"

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that language would apply not only to a harmful but to a meritorious arrangement. That was the difficulty with the bill of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], which would prevent lawful partnerships from uniting for a proper purpose. there be a railroad from Wilmington toward Dover and a separate railroad leading from Dover southward, it could transact business for the public in Delaware more cheaply by having one president and one treasurer, one salaried officer instead of two. It would be for the public convenience that such companies should unite. So a mere agreement to induce them to unite, putting no constraint or compulsion on them, should not be prohibited.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This applies to trusts, so that parties engaged in the same business shall not absorb the whole business by some means. Now, I understand that sometimes by use of force men are compelled by threats to give up their own business and become parts of the combination.

Mr. HOAR. That may be. The Senator, as I understand, asks why in my amendment—I do not undertake to speak for the Senator from Ohio in regard to the general bill—I did not put in the word "induce?" It was because I supposed the mere inducing such things as I suggested is strictly lawful and may be proper and meritorious.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But if they come to offer a share—
Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will read the first section he will find that it provides-

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view, or which tend, to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that competes with any similar article upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which shall be transported from one State or Territory to another, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance the cost to the consumer of any of such articles, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

In other words, it sets out in the most specific language the rule of the common law which prevails in England and this country, especially declared by the supreme court of the State of New York in a very clear and able opinion, which I have here on my desk. That section makes such agreements and combinations unlawful, and it goes as far as the Constitution permits Congress to go, because it only deals with two classes of matters: contracts which affect the importation of goods into the United States, which is foreign commerce, and contracts which affect the transportation and passage of goods from one State to another. The Congress of the United States can go no farther than that. It is not claimed by anybody it can. So that covers the whole thing.

The second section provides that any person or corporation injured Mr. SHERMAN. Before it is read I wish to say that I have read the section very carefully, and although I am not authorized, as a matter of course, in reporting this bill from the Committee on Finance to be made to strike down any particular person or corporation, if that person or corporation should be injured by the combination, he or it can sue in the courts and recover according to the language of the bill.

Then the section now offered simply provides for cases where a corporation seeks to compel other corporations or persons to enter into combinations, etc. If they enter into them willingly by persuasion or inducement, as the Senator from Delaware suggests, the case is covered fully by the first section, and the section now offered simply aims to protect a weak person from being compelled by surrounding circumstances, by force or violence, or by threats or intimidation against being forced into a combination of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PLATT. I asked some little time ago that the amendment might be again reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read. Mr. REAGAN. Is this an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PLATT. A new section after section 2.
Mr. REAGAN. But as an amendment to the sections of the bill as reported by the committee. I have not heard the committee amendment read yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was read a day or two ago, the Chair will inform the Senator. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be again reported.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. HOAR.
Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to be out of order, but I desire to call attention, if it is in order, to the section. Was the amendment reported by the committee adopted as part of the bill? Is it incorporated, or is this an amendment preparatory to the incorporation of the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance is now pending, being a substitute for the original bill, and this is an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio and the Senate to the language of the first section of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will not the Senator wait until the pending amendment is disposed of? That is a separate section.

Mr. REAGAN. I will wait until action is taken upon the amend-Mr. REAGAN. I will wait until action is taken upon the ment, and then I desire to call attention to the first section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HARRIS. I should like the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts.

sachusetts. I suppose the power that Congress has over the subject-matter of this bill is derived chiefly, if not entirely, from the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. On listening to the amendment as read, I do not see any provision in it that applies it especially to such commerce as either foreign or interstate.

Mr. HOAR. It does. It is there. Mr. HARRIS. I have only heard it read, and it may be that my ear did not catch the description; but if it is not there, it seems to me it ought to be there.

It refers to the arrangements, contracts, agree-Mr. SHERMAN.

ments, etc., described in the first section of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. That may correct the defect which had occurred to

Mr. HOAR. "If one of the purposes of such arrangement"—the arrangement being an arrangement previously described in the foregoing section of the bill-

Mr. HARRIS. And that previous description applies to foreign and interstate commerce?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, section 3 will be changed to section 4.

Mr. EUSTIS. I would ask the Senater from Ohio whether this proposed law is to apply, as I understand it, only to future trusts, or whether he desires that it shall be applied to existing trusts? The reason I ask the question is this: A great many of these trusts are already in exist-ence. That is the evil which, as I understand, is to be reached by this new legislation. I do not think the provisions of the bill as it stands apply to existing trusts. They are combinations or agreements, it is true, but the first section says "made," of course meaning "made after the passage" of the act. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the first section contains no sanction—that is, there is no penalty attached. It simply is a declaration that these trusts are void. In the other section, where a penalty is provided, that applies only to future trusts. Therefore in order that this proposed law shall cover existing trusts as well as future trusts, I shall offer the following amendment:

That any person who thirty days after the passage of this law shall act as a manager, officer, trustee, or agent of any trust or combination as described in the first section, shall be liable to the penalties prescribed in the fourth section.

That is, the fourth section as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Eustis].

Mr. SHERMAN. As far as I can perceive, I think that the continuing agreement, arrangement, combination, etc., such as described in the first section will become illegal on the passage of this act and not before. Our laws can not be made retroactive. But I do not see myself any objection to making the continuance of a combination like this after proper days' notice an offense. I think, however, thirty days' notice is too short because a law of this kind ought to have a broad circulation before it becomes operative.

Mr. EUSTIS. I will accept any reasonable change in regard to the number of days

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not at liberty to accept any amendment on behalf of the committee, but I should be inclined to vote for it if the Senator should say six months or a year.

Mr. EUSTIS. Say "ninety days."

Mr. SHERMAN. I would say six months or a year, because I do not think anybody ought to be charged with an offense of this kind with such severe consequences until he has had ample notice. A year would answer just as well.

Mr. HARRIS. Ninety days is certainly sufficient for every man to be informed as to the state of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. And the shorter the time that immunity is given to offenders such as these, the better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Eustis] as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment will be section 5, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment which has just been agreed to be read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any person who ninety days after the passage of this law shall act as manager, officer, trustee, or agent of any trust or combination as described in the first section, shall be liable to the penalties of the fourth section.

Mr. PLATT. I ask whether there is any distinction between these several words "arrangement," "contract," "agreement," "trust, or combination," and if there is, to suggest that section 2 only applies to what may be done under a combination and not to what may be done under an arrangement, agreement, or trust; and the amendment which has just been adopted only applies to what may be done under a combination or a trust, and has no reference to the other words which are used in section 1, "arrangement," "contract," "agreement," I do not know that there is anything in the suggestion, but if not, why are all those words used in the first section? The second section is this:

SEC. 2. That any person or corporation injured or damnified by such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination may sue for and recover in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction of any person or corporation a party to a combination described in the first section of this act, the full consideration or price paid by him for any goods, wares, and merchandise included in or advanced in price by said combination.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is not part of the section I offered.
Mr. PLATT. I know, but that uses only the word "combination."
The Senator's amendment uses one other word, "combination or trust."
Mr. EUSTIS. "As described in the first section," where there is a full description. Mr. PLATT.

The second section does not even refer to the first section.

Mr. EUSTIS. I have not referred to the second section at all.

Mr. PLATT. I merely make this suggestion: If there is any difference between the legal definition of those words as used in the first section, they ought all to be employed in the second section and also in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. EUSTIS. My amendment does not refer to the second section at all. It refers to the first section.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be again read.

Mr. EUSTIS. It refers to the first section. I have no objection to the insertion of the words, but the first section defines specifically what this act prohibits. It was not necessary to insert the other words in my amendment. I am perfectly willing to have them inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment last adopted will

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. Eustis.
Mr. PLATT. Now let me say—
Mr. EUSTIS. I will amend the amendment, with the Senate's permission, by including the other words, "arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination," as described.

Mr. PLATT. If there is any legal difference, the subsequent sections ought to include all the words in the first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the modification suggested by the Senator from Louisiana? The amendment already voted on will be considered not agreed to, and the Senator from Louisiana modifies it as indicated, by the insertion of the words reported. His amendment will now be read as amended.

Mr. EUSTIS. Put in the words "arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modi-

Mr. PLATT. While the change is being made, I want to make my point clear, if I can, to the Senator from Ohio, because it seems to me that the act ought to be perfected, and my suggestion applies as well to the second section as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The first section describes several different things, I suppose—if it does not, then the superfluous words ought to be stricken out—"arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination." If it means trust and combination simply, and is not intended to go any further, then the words "arrangement, contract, agreement" ought to be stricken out; but if it is intended to go further than reaching what are technically known as trusts and combinations, then those words, as it seems to me, ought to be inserted in line 5 and line 8 of section 2, which

SEC. 2. That any person or corporation injured or damnified by such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination may sue for and recover, in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, of any person or corporation a party to a combination described in the first section of this act, the full consideration or sum paid by him for any goods, wares, and merchandise included in or advanced in price by said combination.

If there is any technical distinction between these words, the second section does not permit a party injured to recover damages from anybody except a party to a combination. If he is a party to an agreement, an arrangement, a contract, or a trust which does not amount in legal definition as it shall be determined by the court to be a combination, then there is no liability.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will now be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That any person who, ninety days after the passage of this law, shall not as a manager, officer, trustee, or agent of any arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination as described in the first section, shall be liable to the penalties prescribed in the fourth section.

penalties prescribed in the fourth section.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—
Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Texas will yield to me a moment I simply want to renew a motion which I made half an hour ago and withdrew, and that is that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that will not be put now when there are so very few Senators present. Let us have the judgment of the Senate upon that matter and not the judgment of half a dozen.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that will be better. There are some reasons why there ought to be a session to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know of any.
Mr. HOAR. There is a great deal of undisposed-of public business.
Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better wait until the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] comes in.
Mr. HARRIS. I saw the Senator from Maine a moment since and he has no objection to, but he favors, the adjournment over.

he has no objection to, but he favors, the adjournment over.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I can convenience the Senator from Tennessee when I have an opportunity of seeing the Senator from Maine, I will agree to it. I shall leave it to him. agree to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion on the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. REAGAN. I think it is to be regretted that a measure of this reat importance should come up as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It is unquestionably a subject-matter that deserves the earliest and most careful consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator to say it comes up on an appropriation bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I understand so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is mistaken. This is an independent bill reported by the Committee on Finance. It is the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well. I misunderstood it, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will look at the head of the bill

Mr. REAGAN. I see; but I was misled by our considering an appropriation bill, and I had not noticed that it was disposed of.
Mr. SHERMAN. This bill has been here now for almost a year.
Mr. REAGAN. I understand. I desire to call attention to the language contained in the first section because it is a matter of very great moment. There are some things which we have the power to do and some things, I take it, that we have not the power to do. The first section provides—

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view, or which tend, to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States—

That is all right; then it proceeds-

tion over this question by virtue of the revenue policy of the United States, which it seems to me is a great mistake. If we have the power to deal with this subject, it seems to me it must be under the clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries. If I am right as to that, then the language which I last read and which I will reread seems to me to be unwarranted and I fear it would be inoperative; that is:

Or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that competes with any similar article upon which a duty is levied by the United States.

That would extend the jurisdiction of Congress, if it could be made effective, to all such combinations, arrangements, agreements, or trusts made wholly within a State and made with reference to commerce wholly within a State. I do not think the courts would give effect to such a provision, nor do I think it would be safe for the Senate to attempt to do what it appears to me is clearly not within the power of Congress. If the language were changed so as to read (I do not know that this precise language is the proper phraseology, but I suggest it as an improvement):

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations, made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States—

Then these new words I would suggest-

Or for transportation from State to State, or to or from a foreign country, or within the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States.

And then I would proceed with the language of the bill: And all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Texas will permit, the Chair will suggest that amendments have already been adopted probably covering the same ground about which he is speak-The Chair will have the amendments read for his information.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall be obliged to the Chair for having that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendments agreed to.

In section 1, line 9, after the word "that," the The SECRETARY. words "competes with any similar article upon which a duty is levied by the United States, or which" have been stricken out, and the words "in due course of trade" inserted; and after the word "another," in line 11, the words "or to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Territory" have been inserted; so as to make the section read:

That all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles imported into the United States, or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material that in due course of trade shall be transported from one State or Territory to another, or to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Territory, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed or which tend to advance the cost to the consumer of any of such articles, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

Mr. REAGAN. I think it likely that that covers the idea I had in view, but I am not entirely certain of it. Not having been present when that action was taken is my apology for presenting the amendment which I intended to suggest to cover the difficulty. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] thinks that covers the difficulty, I am satis-

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is mistaken about my supposing that the amendment covers the difficulty. I called his attention to the amendment so that he might discuss the bill as it stood. I do not think it removes the difficulty by any means.

Mr. REAGAN. I misunderstood the Senator, then. That would leave in the bill the words "or in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or domestic raw material" that are transported. Ido not feel able to determine at this time whether the language there covers the idea that I have presented or not. I have not had an opportunity to consider the subject, was not present when it was up before, and did not know it would be up this morning, or I should have been prepared for it.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose at 2 o'clock another matter comes up, and if this bill is to go over I should like to suggest and have printed the following amendments to it: After the word "into," in line 1 of section 2.

tion 3

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the special order for this hour, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government and the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government and other purposes." approved the use of the same for postal, military, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to on which a duty is levied by the United States.

That language evidently rests upon the idea that we obtain jurisdictive of the Companies therein mentioned.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senate will allow me to suggest some amendments to the bill which has been under consideration, which I desire to have printed.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will allow me to make my motion, I shall then take into account the convenience of himself and the Senator from Ohio. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11651, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other

Mr. PLUMB. Now, I want to say about the bill which was under consideration that I do not desire to interpose the appropriation bill so as to prevent that from being considered if the appropriation bill can be disposed of this afternoon; but I feel that it having been considered on a previous day and for reasons which occur to every Senator, it ought to be disposed of to-day without any doubt.

Mr. PLATT. What I was asking was that I might now submit some proposed amendments to the trust bill to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB. I will consent to the appropriation bill being temporarily laid aside in order to allow the Senator to propose his amend-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to amend the trust bill which has been under consideration.

Mr. PLATT. With the idea of having the amendments printed. In section 3, line 1, after the word "into," I move to insert "or engaged in the execution of," and after the word "under," in line 4, to insert "whether the principal is an inhabitant of or established in the United States, or is an inhabitant of or established in a foreign country."
I should like to have that printed if the bill is going over

Mr. STEWART. I should like to offer an amendment to be printed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest as the bill is going over that as it now stands it had better be reprinted and then the amendments be printed as proposals to be offered to it.

Mr. STEWART. I will read the amendment I propose. It is as

That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States either gold or silver bullion, or both, in quantities of not less than 5 ounces of gold or 80 ounces of silver, and demand and receive coin certificates therefor at the rate of $1 in certificates for 25.8 grains Troy weight of standard gold, nine-tenths fine; and at the rate of $1 in certificates for 412\frac{1}{2} grains Troy weight of standard gold, nine-tenths fine; and at the rate of $1 in certificates for 412\frac{1}{2} grains Troy weight of standard silver, nine-tenths fine.

The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this section shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That they shall not be of less denomination than $1 or more than $1,000, and that one-half of the amount issued shall be in denominations less than $50, and shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time such portions of the bullion deposited under the provisions of this section as may be necessary to enable him to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates.

The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this section shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made, and when such certificates shall be received for public dues they shall be reissued. And a sufficient sum to carry out the foregoing provisions of this section is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And the provision in section 1 of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at the market price thereof not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month of such bullion, is

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The trust bill as it has now been agreed to will be reprinted, and the amendments will be printed as proposed by the respective Senators who offered them.

Mr. SHERMAN. That being done, I wish to give notice that when this bill is taken up the next time, I do not care whether it is against the Lord's Prayer or the Ten Commandments, I shall move and insist upon it that it shall only be displaced by the will of a majority of the Senate, and with all due deference not to be defeated by counter-propositions in no way relating to the subject-matter, but that it shall be fairly tested if possible. I do think this bill is absolutely necessary in the present condition of the business of this country, and I intend, if possible, to get a vote of the Senate upon it. I can not object, of course, to its going over now, as an appropriation bill is pending.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill now, as I am a member of a conference committee which is waiting my presence in the committee room. I desire to offer the amendment so that it may be taken up at the proper time as an amendment to the bill. It is on page 8, line 25, to insert:

To pave C street northeast, from Eighth street eastward, $5,000.

I should like to have that amendment inserted. I desire to state that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is called away upon a mournful occasion, left this with me and asked me to offer it as an amendment to the bill under consideration. I hope it will be adopted, although I shall not be able to remain here till it is considered, unless it is disposed of at this time.

NEBRASKA LAND DISTRICTS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for about five minutes to call up a most important local bill for my State, which I desire to have acted upon.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield if it does not take over five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us know what bill it is.
Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2524, being the bill (S. 3810) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be taken up subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to objection, the bill will be

The bill was read, and, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PADDOCK. In line 12, section 2, I move to strike out the word Territory " and insert "State."

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same amendment will be made in line 4 of the section.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir; that should be done.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska if this scheme of these two land districts is recommended by the Department of the Interior?

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill was drawn in the Department of the Interior, and the boundaries fixed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. There was a bill presented by myself, considered by the committee, and referred to the Land Office for its opinion, and it was reported back by the Land Office with the recommendation that the boundaries be fixed as described in this bill. To meet this view of the Department this bill was reported as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I understand the Interior Department think that this legislation ought to occur?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir; I think so.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes,
Mr. PLUMB. The amendment pending is that offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] be acted upon now?

Mr. PLUMB. It might as well be, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment already adopted, after line 25, on page 8, it is proposed to add:

To pave C street northeast, from Eighth street eastward, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following amendment to follow the one

To pave T street northwest, from Ninth to Vermont avenue, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] is now pending, and will be read.

The Secretary. On page 12, line 2, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

All street-railway companies or persons operating or having tracks or roadbeds on the streets of the city of Washington shall cause said rails and road-beds to be relaid with the fiat grooved rail and made level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said tracks or road-beds, so that no obstruction shall be presented to vehicles passing over said tracks.

The cost of making the changes herein required shall be paid by the corporations or persons owning or operating said street railroads, and if, after being notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing to comply with the terms of this act, the said corporations shall not within thirty days thereafter begin the work required and complete the same within a reasonable time, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and road-beds to be made, and the cost thereof shall be collected from the corporations or persons, respectively, owning or operating said street railroads, by suit in the name of the United States, to be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia,

Mr. EDMUNDS. While the Senator from Massachusetts is examining this amendment with a view to seeing whether an amendment he offered to it has or has not been adopted, I wish to say for my friend from Missouri [Mr. Vest] who is now absent that he asked me to look after this matter in his necessary absence, for him. He is of opinion, and I concur entirely, that the provision about collecting the cost of this change of rails and road-beds had better be changed to the provisions of the act creating the present government of the District of Columbia, the substance of which is that the commissioners may have such work done and issue certificates of indebtedness against the owners of the lines, which shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent., and if at the end of a year they are not paid the commissioners shall then cause the property to be sold to reimburse the people who did the work.

I think there would be a better way still, and that is as we do in the State of Vermont, to have the commissioners either issue a warrant of distress and sale for the collection of these assessments or apply in a summary way to the supreme court of the District, where the company, if it thought the matter was illegal or irregular, might resist and have the question passed upon at once, and then issue a court warrant for whatever ought to be paid. But as this matter will, of course, go into a conference, and as it is desirable to save time, I think it is just as well, after calling attention to it and the propriety of some change in the modus of reimbursement, to let the amendment be adopted as it stands, and then the Senate conferees can arrange with the House gentlemen, if the House agree to it at all, to make the machinery what it ought to be.

Mr. FAULKNER. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to offer the amendment he suggested?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I only suggested as a more convenient way of getting the phraseology as to the method of reimbursement correct for the information of the Senate, without having time to prepare it myself now, in the hope that the Senate conferees, if the House will agree to the proposition at all, will put the machinery into proper shape for accomplishing the end.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was going to say that I had proposed to offer the same amendment, and have drawn it, taken from the organic act of the District. I have called upon the commissioners for any informathe District. I have called upon the commissioners for any informa-tion in reference to the operation of that original act, and I have learned from them that it has been perfectly satisfactory in its opera-tions and exceedingly effective, so much so that they have had occa-sion only in five instances to issue certificates, and in every instance they were paid at once by the company. If the Senator from Vermont has not prepared the amendment and that is the reason for his not offering it, I will offer an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "made," in the fifteenth line of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "made," in line 15, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the amendment, as follows:

And the cost thereof shall be collected from the corporations or persons, respectively, owning or operating said street railroads, by suit in the name of the United States, to be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia against said corporations or persons in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property, real or personal, of such railway company, which certificates shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid, and which, until they are paid, shall remain and be a lien upon the property on or against which they are issued to gether with the franchise of said company; and if the said certificates are not paid within one year the said commissioners of the District of Columbia may proceed to sell the property against which they are issued, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due, such sale to be first duly advertised daily for one week in some newspaper published in the city of Washington, and to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right; that is according to the existing law

, The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to offer another amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. After the word "tracks," in line 6, I move to insert:

To be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

There are five different patents now issued by the Government under which grooved rails are being made, and this amendment simply provides that grooved rails shall be laid level with the surface of the street, etc. It is just both to the companies and to the public that some one shall decide which patent shall be used in the laying of rails to correspond with the provisions of this amendment. One company may assume that one patent is all right and another company another, and the public of course will be benefited by either perhaps over the roads as at present constructed, although there should be a uniform rail laid upon all the streets of the city. I do not know in whom to vest the authority but in the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator any personal knowledge of the difference in character of these five different styles?

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no personal knowledge on the subject, but have received two communications in reference to it in which the persons who are interested urge upon Congress or at least urge upon me to suggest to Congress to fix the particular rail under the patents that shall be used. That Congress can not do, but—

Mr. DAWES. My only apprehension is this: there may not be such a wide difference between them that some rail may approximate so closely to the present rail that we should not make much by a change.

If the Senator has any such knowledge of them as to form an opinion of his own, I would take that rather than run any risk.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no personal knowledge, but with the direction contained in this amendment to the commissioners as to the character of the rails, and the object and purpose of the action of Congress in the adoption of this amendment, certainly they will carry out that view which is expressed by the language used.

Mr. DAWES. I have great confidence in the commissioners, and it is increasing daily, and so far as possible I would commit absolutely the interests of this District to the board of commissioners. But on the whole I have arrived at that state from experience that I would rather have some limitation upon these five patents, because I am afraid, not that the commissioners would intend any such result, but I am afraid that if there is any one of the five poorer than the rest, somehow, accidentally, and without the intention of the commissioners, we shall have at one. That is all I can say about it. That is my apprehension.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is on the whole right. The contingency which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests is one that constantly arises when we devolve duties on subordinates. There is, as I think, a fair consensus of opinion now to the effect that the street railways of Washington are a disgrace to the capital of the the street railways of Washington are a disgrace to the capital of the nation; a disgrace which is, of course, more to the discredit of the Government, perhaps, than it is to the discredit of the railway companies. The facilities are inadequate; they are antiquated, obstructive, offensive to health, to life, to sight. They ought to be removed at the earliest possible moment. This great and magnificent avenue, Pennsylvania avenue, which is said to be the finest street of its kind in the world, has down its center a gash which mars it, which is an eye-sore, and which contributes neither to the public comfort nor to the public welfare, and to nothing in fact except the profits of the railway company. When we come to consider the method of getting rid of this trouble we shall be confronted with different ideas about rails, motors, and so on. We have got to have in fact the co-operation of the Government and the railway companies. They have got to be made to see that it is to their have got to have in fact the co-operation of the Government and the railway companies. They have got to be made to see that it is to their interest to do that which is fair and right.

The Senator from Vermont at a previous session spoke of the great success he had in getting a repair of their track out of them, when of course he had not any success in getting it out of the commissioners as a matter of right. That only illustrates what I said a moment ago, that course he had not any success in getting it out of the commissioners as a matter of right. That only illustrates what I said a moment ago, that we have got to have the co-operation of the railway companies. Whenever they have got to do something to take these rails out and put other rails in their place, I have no doubt they will, as a matter of wise financial prudence, agree to put in that which is best, so far as they believe it to be best for them at all events, upon the idea that that which is best will be most permanent, rather than to put in that which is indifferent and which will subject them to further adverse legislation on the part of Congress.

the part of Congre

Therefore I believe we shall find the railroad companies, when we have got to the point of doing something, co-operating with us in doing the best thing, and that then we may perhaps with safety leave the remainder of it, that supervision which somebody must have representing the public, to the commissioners themselves, whether they be the present commissioners or some other body of men—they are at all events the men whom the President of the United States appoints upon the theory that they are the proper representatives of the public-having no personal interests to subserve, but keenly alive to the public interests. In that view of it of course they are the persons who ought to be able to assist the railroad companies in conference with them, or as a matter of final authority in defiance of the railroad companies to require the placing upon the streets of the very best possible rails to accomplish the double purpose of securing the safe and speedy transmission of the public in the cars of the railroad companies and of conerving that other portion of the public who are obliged to travel on foot and those who travel in private vehicles, and at the same time to relieve the streets from that which is a blemish to the sight.

Of course it may happen, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. ED-MUNDS] suggested a moment ago, that some details may be overlooked. There may be some very radical adjustment of this matter in fact to be made when we come to consider the subject in connection with the conferees of the House of Representatives. If we find them willing, then of course the question of language, of detail, and so on, will be very easily settled. In the mean time, as a suggestion at least, if nothing further, I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is exceedingly timely. I have no doubt it will furnish a very much better method, in the first place, of collecting the money which the Government may expend in carrying out this very necessary reform than that provided for in the original amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. It constitutes a lien under which the railroads may be sold, and there can not be the dilatory proceedings which would probably result from the operation of the original provision; and whether that be the best or not, or whether in connection with what remains of the original text the very best thing has been provided, it is at all events a valuable suggestion which will enable the conferees to take the subject up with a more intelligent considble the conferees to take the subject up with a more intelligent consideration than they could without it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be read. The Chair suggests that the Senator place the amendment at the end of line 6, or after the word "road-beds," in line 5.

Mr. FAULKNER. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so reported.

The Secretary. After the word "road-beds," in line 5, it is proposed to insert "to be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia."

of Columbia."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we depart from this railroad subject I think it right to say, first, on the point referred to by my friend from Kansas, that these changes necessarily involve a very considerable expense. They ought not the less to be done; but it may happen in regard to two or three of the weaker roads (none of whose agents, or attorneys, or officers, or stockholders, I am glad to say for their sake, and mine, too, as to my temper, have said a word to me on the subject) that they may not be able financially to do this thing immediately; and in the end the matter as it regards perhaps some of the roads, as compared with others who are strong and whose stock is far above par, ought to be given a longer time in regard to making these changes than the strong roads should be allowed. I merely make that suggestion for consideration when the matter comes into conference between the two Houses; and in the same connection, on the subject of the wretched condition of the tracks and road-beds, and particularly at crossings, to one of which I referred yesterday, I wish to read to the Senate the positive

When street railways cross any street or avenue, the pavement between the tracks of such railway shall conform to the pavement used upon such street or avenue, and the companies owning these intersecting railroads shall pay for such pavements in the same manner, etc.

Here is a positive law which is ten years old that at all these intersecting crossings and running across streets that are paved one way, etc., the pavement between the tracks and on the sides shall conform to the street pavement in order to make the passage across the tracks practical and uniform; and yet I venture to say from my own personal observation, without stopping to count them up, that there are scores of these intersections of railways as well as the railways crossing streets and avenues where the pavement of the railway is entirely different from the pavement of the street and is absolutely atrocious in respect of one's being able to get across it all. And yet for some reason or without any reason the executive authority of this District has failed to secure action (although in one very prominent instance their attention has been called to it for nearly a year and they have called upon the company to do it), and vast rocks still are there and everywhere else; and why it is I can not possibly understand.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to inquire of the Senator why they were required by law to make the points at the crossing uniform with the pavement of the street and to let the continuous line in the street be supplemented by Belgian blocks in an uncomfortable way, as on Pennsylvania avenue

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know, except that in the organic act for creating this government those who drew it may have thought—I am not defending it—that at the crossings and intersections there would be double if not four times the amount of traffic that there would be where the street and railway line were continuous and parallel.

Mr. DAWES. One of the most serious inconveniences to travel is the fact that not only the space between the two tracks but the space between the tracks themselves and 18 inches on each side outside of the rail there is a different pavement, generally Belgian blocks, rising up above the rest of the street and making still more inconvenient the use of wheel carriages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true; but it might be said in favor of these horse-railway operations that in the long line following one street or avenue asphalt could not be used between the tracks, as the horses are subjected to a heavy strain every time the car has to be started again when it stops, as it is necessary to have something that the shoes can take hold of better than they can asphalt. That might have suggested it.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that is a good reason for having Belgian blocks between the two tracks on each continuous line, but that is no reason why 18 inches on the outside and all the space between two separate tracks should be so constructed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is no reason at all, Mr. President. Probably the object in doing that was to keep people from getting on there as far as they possibly could. But I think the matter is now in a condition where, if the House of Representatives shall be willing to enter upon it at all, the representatives of the Senate will be able to put it in practical and workable shape to do justice and to manage this im-

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator from West Virginia would consent to further improve the amendment so that the railroad companies shall find it necessary to follow out the spirit of the law which has just been read by the Senator from Vermont, and extend it to everything except the space between the tracks where the horses travel. It is very apparent that they could not travel upon an asphalt pavement, but as to all the rest of it there is no occasion for any Belgian pavement any all the rest of it there is no occasion for any Belgian pavement any more than there is in the rest of the street.

Mr. FAULKNER. That may be done in the conference committee when the conferees come to consider the whole subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. In line 12 of the amendment it is provided that within thirty days after notice by the commissioners this improvement shall be begun by the railroad companies. I suggest that that is not a sufficient time. It would be impossible for the companies to comply with that condition. I therefore move to strike out "thirty" and insert "ninety," so that they shall be required to commence the improvement within ninety days after notice by the commissioners.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is fair.

Mr. GORMAN. It would be impossible for them to get the new rails in the time specified.

in the time specified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They could not get the materials, probably, in thirty days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri

The SECRETARY. At the beginning of line 12 in the amendment it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "ninety;" so as to read: The said corporations shall not within ninety days thereafter begin the work,

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. In line 13 of the amendment I move to strike out the words "within a reasonable time" and to insert "on or before November 1, 1890," so as to require this work, after the notice has been given, to be completed by the 1st day of November, 1890. For one I am not prepared to put this power in the hands of the commissioners and let them determine when it shall be done. I think probably it never would be done unless we fixed the time for its completion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "within a reasonable time" and to insert "on or before November 1, 1890."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble about that is that if the companies think they can have the same luck that they have had hitherto, they will not raise a hand or buy a rail until the 1st of November, 1890, and then they will see what they can do with Congress and the commissioners, and so on.

The suggestion of my friend from Maryland, that it gives too much power to the commissioners, I do not think is well founded, because the commissioners are not the persons to decide what is a reasonable time. If the commissioners after these ninety days, the companies having started within the ninety days to do this thing, think that they are not carrying it on with reasonable expedition they can then issue their certificates, and when those certificates come to be collected a court of law will have to determine whether the commissioners were acting within their authority in taking this work out of the hands of the company, and that will be for a court of law to determine upon the question whether the company had a reasonable time to complete the improvement. So I think it is better on principle to let the clause stand as it is.

There is only one argument that I can think of in favor of the suggestion of my friend, which fixes an absolute time, and that is, according to our previous experience in the last twenty years here, if the commissioners are to act in the first instance, when they think the company has been unreasonable in de'ay, they are likely never to act at all. I hope they will do better hereafter, and I am willing to trust them on that as the better chance of the two.

Mr. GORMAN. My experience with all these corporations here (and I had some little experience while I was on the District of Columbia Committee) is that we have not accomplished anything in the way of reform with any of these railroad companies when the matter was left specially to the commissioners. I offered the amendment with a view of requiring this improvement to be made within some specified time. I know the Senator from Vermont is very anxious, as I am, to have this improvement made. After giving it some thought and conferring, not with anybody interested in these matters, but with practical men, it was thought that by November, 1890, they could procure these rails, which are all to be made and can only be made after the order is given; that it would give ample time to complete the work; and that probably to fix a less time would be a very great hardship upon the companies. Believing that and having that object in view, I offered the amend-

Mr. PLUMB. Might not the Senator carry out the very idea he has Mr. PLUMB. Might not the Senator carry out the very idea he has in mind in another way? He wants to give more time. A reasonable time may be more than the 1st day of November, 1890. It is a question of circumstance to be settled from time to time. They might not be able to get the rails. I want, so far as I am concerned, to give them all the time that is necessary, making it perfectly sure that they shall do not only the thing which we have generally in mind, but the very best thing. It may take two or three years to do it. I should feel reasonably well satisfied if I could see the work in process of being done upon the wisest suggestion that could be made. There might be a condition of thingsin which the railroad companies might have a few months before they determined as to what was best to be done, and then some delay growing out of a strike or something of that kind might occur. delay growing out of a strike or something of that kind might occur, and they might see no reason to do anything at all because they could not do it all by that time.

I rather think that the words "within a reasonable time" are more likely to be beneficial to them and at the same time perhaps more beneficial to the public than the limitation of a specific date, as the Senator from Maryland proposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we were to have a specific day in order to get this thing wound up, the 1st of November, 1890, would be two years, lacking three months, in round numbers. If the Senator from Maryland would modify his amendment so as to have the limitation on or before November 1, 1890, to come in after the word "made," at the end of what would be, if the figures went down, line 15, at the end of the print of this amendment, it would read in this way:

The said corporation shall not within ninety days thereafter begin the work required to complete the same within a reasonable time, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and road-beds to be made on or before the 1st of November, 1890.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt that will accomplish the purpose

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would put a terminus then. As the Senator from Kansas suggests, it might be found impracticable really to com-plete it all by that time. As there is no forfeiture it will be perfectly easy for Congress to be applied to to extend that time if it is found

Mr. PLUMB and Mr. GORMAN. No objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that will do, to transpose the clause and put it after "made."

Mr. GORMAN. I will so modify the amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amend-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Leave the "reasonable time" to stand and put in the limitation.

The SECRETARY. After the word "made," in line 15 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert:

On or before November 1, 1890.

So as to read:

The cost of making the changes herein required shall be paid by the corporations or persons owning or operating said street railroads, and if, after being notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia in writing to comply with the terms of this act, the said corporations shall not within ninety days thereafter begin the work required and complete the same within a reasonable time, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the necessary changes in said rails and road-beds to be made on or before November 1, 1890.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer an amendment to come in as an additional section at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

The Secretary. It is proposed to add to the bill:

Mr. HOAR. I desire to raise the question of order on that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will modify my amendment first, if the Senator will pardon me for a moment. Instead of "$1,300,000" I wish it to read "$500,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pro-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Everybody understands it. I propose to appropriate "$500,000" instead of "$1,300,000."

The Secretary. In line 2 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out "one million three" and to insert "five;" so as to read: "$500,000."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if there is any provision made for an appeal in case of condemnation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment provides that if this commission

Mr. HOAR. I desire to raise the question that the amendment is not competent under Rule XVI. Mr. EDMUNDS. It is, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the clause of the rule?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I think.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question that the amendment is irrelevant to the matter of the bill, and also the question that it proposes general legislation.

I should like to inquire whether it has been reported by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations more than twenty-four hours before being offered here?

Mr. MORRILL. I have reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an amendment for a zoological park, not the amendment for a general park.

Mr. HOAR. This is a separate amendment, and has not been referred before being offered in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While the question of order is not strictly debatable, as an appeal would lie the Chair will hear the Senate.

ator from Vermont on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was under the impression that my colleague had reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the amendment for a general park, but he says he only reported the one for a zoological park at $200,000. Therefore I think myself that the amendment would be subject to the point of order that it proposes a new item of appropriation which had not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. think are well founded. The other parts of the point of order I do not

Mr. HOAR. If it would be out of order for any purpose, I suppose it is not necessary to pass on the other points at present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Chair may differ with my friend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be compelled to hold that under the second paragraph of Rule XVI, technically the amendment is open to the point of order suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ends that. Now, I offer an amendment which has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following addi-

That, in order to establish a zoological park in the District of Columbia, for the advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people, a commission shall be constituted, composed of three persons, namely: The Secretary of the Interior, the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, which shall be known and designated as the commission for the establishment of a zoological park.

retary of the Interior, the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, which shall be known and designated as the commission for the establishment of a zoological park.

That the said commission is hereby authorized and directed to make an inspection of the country along Rock Creek, between Massachusetts are now extended and where said creek is crossed by the road leading west from Brightwood crosses said creek, and to select from that district of country such a tract of land, of not less than 100 acres, which shall include a section of the creek, as said commission shall deem to be suitable and appropriate for a zoological park. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. MORRILL. It is a matter of very great importance, involving the question as to whether we shall preserve the animals that pecu-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that the Senate decides that the amendment is relevant. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. ED-MUNDS

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I was observing merely that it was important to have early action if it was intended to preserve the animals peculiar to this continent. I understand that the Smithsonian Institution have had quite a number already donated to them, and although they are not seeking the employment of taking care of this zoological park or of these animals, yet if the duty is devolved upon them by Congress they will undertake it.

So far as the park is concerned it is absolutely indispensable that action shall be taken at an early day if it is intended to have this park, which is said to be the most desirable spot perhaps in the whole countrp and which has already been surveyed. Unless it is taken hold of immediately it is very likely to be grabbed by a syndicate of speculators, and when it shall be undertaken to improve it with streets and with city lots it would be entirely ruined as a zoological park.

Therefore the earliest action possible is necessary if we would be sure to locate the park where it is supposed to be very desirable to have it located.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had my attention called to this scheme some time since, and have always very earnestly favored it. I think the establishment of such a place of wholesome recreation and instruction for the youth, for the children, and for the poorer people of a large city is eminently wise, and that it is entirely fitting that it should be procured here at the national capital at the national expense.

The purpose in raising the question has not been to defeat or to attempt to defeat the proposition, but only to have the Senate decide as a precedent for other cases the question of order, which has been raised sometimes in like cases where I thought it could not be fairly sustained; and having accomplished that purpose I am content.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had my attention called to this scheme ator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Plumb, Mr. Dawes, and Mr. Cockrell were appointed.

Mr. Plumb. I wish to have inserted as a part of the proceedings in connection with the bill a statement prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, which shows the amount of the appropriations in connection with the estimates and the action of the House of Representatives.

I wish to say very briefly that the committee in considering the bill proceeded upon the assumption, warranted as they think by their own observation and by the observation of all others who have given to this subject any consideration, that there should be appropriated for the expenses of the District of Columbia, including the improvement and maintenance of streets, country roads, and schools, all the money which has been levied upon the property of the District plus the amount which under the agreement made by law in 1878 the United States was to pay as its contribution towards those expenses.

In pursuance of this idea, the committee in nearly every case have appropriated an amount equal to the estimate made by the District appropriated an amount equal to the estimate made by the District commissioners. In some cases those estimates have been exceeded. The total of the bill as finally passed, leaving out the Rock Creek park, is $104,333 in excess of those estimates. Notwithstanding this excess there will be a surplus of exclusively District revenues in the Treasury of the United States at the close of the period covered by the appropriations of the bill equal to or exceeding half a million dollars.

So far as I am concerned, I only regret that the estimates were not sufficient to warrant the committee in providing for the appropriation of this sum in addition to the sums already appropriated in the bill. Certainly during the next three or four years, while the streets of the city of Washington are in their present condition and while the schools are needing the ample appropriations called for by the increasing population, there should be a complete expenditure of all the money resulting from the present expenditure of all the money resulting from the present expenditure of all the money resulting from the present expenditure. ing from the present system of taxation. It is not only necessary be-cause it provides for improvements that are needed from the ordinary municipal standpoint, but because it distributes, in a comparatively equitable way, the benefits among the people who have borne the burdens of taxation.

For many years the people of the District who have had no benefit from these appropriations have paid taxes for the improvement of the streets opposite the property of their more fortunate neighbors, and have paid for school-houses for which they have had no use, and the time has come when the Government is under an obligation to these people which can only be met, and even then only inadequately, by the expenditure of all the sums of money which are the result of the present system of assessment and taxation.

In another sense these appropriations are desirable because they add to the gross amount of taxable valuation of the property of the District. There is no expenditure which has been so judicious with reference to future sources of revenue as the improvements of the streets, avenues, and alleys. Both within and without the boundary every street opened and alleys. Both within and without the boundary every street opened and improved doubles, quadruples, and sometimes increases in a still greater degree the taxable valuation of the property abutting upon it, and the sources of revenue are being constantly enlarged in such a way that these expenditures judiciously and economically carried on, as they are, will result in bringing increasing revenue into the Treasury of the United States. of the United States.

of the United States.

Within a very few years, if this system shall be judiciously carried on, by reason of the operations of the sinking fund, which is constantly diminishing the debt of the District, and by reason of the increase of the valuation of property of which I have spoken, I have no doubt that the rate of taxation may be reduced within the District, and therefore a reduction of the burdens upon the tax-payers of the District and the tax-payers of the United States will occur.

It is upon this principle and with these ideas in view that the committee have addressed themselves to the consideration of the bill, and have been induced to report it in the shape in which it came before the Senate, and I think these considerations would have induced them to add to its appropriations if the estimates had warranted them in doing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a privileged question.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire

rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the record of the proceedings of the Senate on the 23d of January contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 24th of January be amended by striking out the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Grison] concerning the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election, as they appear according to the report furnished by the Senator, and by inserting his remarks as they appear in the notes of the Official Reporter of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Schaol from Louisian Land GIBSON] this morning to request that his remarks as they appeared in the RECORD yesterday be stricken out and that the remarks as re-ported by the Official Reporter be inserted. Under those circumstances I was willing that the subject should be dropped. However, I underthat he made that request; and therefore, recurring to my original motion, I have put it in writing, as suggested by the President of the Senate. I desire to say that I shall ask for its consideration whenever the Senator from Louisiana happens to be in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table to be called up hereafter.

FORLORN HOPE STORMING PARTY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1140) authorizing the Secretary of War to secure and present suitable medals to the survivors of the "forlorn hope storming party" of Port Hudson.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSIT OF SAVINGS OF SEAMEN.

There are two bills relating to the Navy to which I think there will be no objection. Both the bills have already been passed by the Senate in a preceding Congress. I ask the Senate first to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOME FOR DISCHARGED SEAMEN.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the next bill on the Calendar, which is on the same subject, considered.

Mr. CULLOM. I think two bills in one day are enough for one Senator. The Senator had better let some of the rest of us have a chance.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to trespass upon the Senate, but it would only take a minute.

VIEGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 515) for the relief of the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School, in Virginia.

Heintzelman; and

R. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4470) to regulate the jurisdiction of the United States district judges, and of the courts over which they preside, in the State of

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire that bill to go over for the present. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. PUGH. The bill received the unanimous support of the Judiciary Committee, and I was authorized by that committee to report it. It is a local bill, and I should like to have it passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I prefer not to have it considered to-day.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT LA CROSSE.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole,

proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, line 15, after the word "War" to insert "after an examination and report by a board of three United States engineers, and appointed by him;" so as to make the provise read:

Provided, That it shall not be lawful to construct said bridge or bridges until the Secretary of War, after an examination and report by a board of three United States engineers, and appointed by him, shall certify that the same will not materially obstruct the navigation of said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURGEON-GENERAL OF MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution S. R. 124) relating to the salary of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that hereafter the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service shall receive the same salary and allowances as are now allowed by law to the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know what the salary and allowances of the Surgeon-General of the Army are.

Mr. CULLOM. The total would be about $6,200 a year.
Mr. SHERMAN. I know the officer in charge of this service, Dr. Hamilton. He is a very worthy man, but I know this measure would create great confusion in the Treasury Department if this office should be put higher than the First Comptroller of the Treasury, or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or the Comptroller of the Currency. I simply suggest to the Senator that it would create trouble and a very great inequality. There is no similitude between the office of the Surgeon-General of the Army and the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service. The Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is at the head of a bureau in the Treasury Department, where there are nineteen or twenty bureaus, the heads of some of which are the most important officers of the Government. I think it would be better to fix the salary at what the Senator thinks is a reasonable rate, within the limit provided for these other officers.

Mr. CULLOM. My impression is that the actual service of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is superior to that of almost any army officer. Everybody in this country knows the vast amount of work and of valuable service that this officer has rendered in trying to check and control the yellow fever and other diseases. It has become a very important office to this country, involving the safety of the lives of very many people. While it might be as well that the salary should be fixed specifically, so far as I am concerned I think the salary that he would receive under the proposed law is not too much. I have a statement from the Paymaster-General of the Army himself as to exactly what the amount would be.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the sum?

Mr. CULLOM. Five thousand five hundred dollars, with $720 added for commutation, which makes $6,220.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the pay of the Surgeon-General of the

Mr. CULLOM. It is the pay of the Surgeon-General of the Army. This statement is from General Rochester himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service is not an officer of the Army. He is liable to be displaced at any time. The salary of the First Comptroller of the Treasury is $6,000. The salary of the Comptroller of the Currency regulating the national banks is, I think, about $5,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing so far as I am concerned to insert

"$6,000" instead of the salary proposed in the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it would place him far beyond the rank of the various Assistant Secretaries. There are two or three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. It will only create confusion. This officer reports to one of the Assistant Secretaries. It makes the subordinate officer much higher than his chief.

Mr. CULLOM. But this office is becoming more and more important to this country every year, as we have seen within the last two or three years; and this officer is recognized, I think, by everybody who knows him in his profession, as one of the ablest men in the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know him very well, and I can speak very highly of his position and his character and his qualifications; but I know the disturbance that such an increase of his salary would make. I do not object to the joint resolution on any other ground than that. It would create very serious difficulties in the Treasury Department, I know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio object to the further consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not object to the consideration of the joint resolution. I shall vote against it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and

WILLIAM KNOWLAND.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2686) for the relief of William Knowland, reported without amendment from the Committee on Claims. It provides for the payment of only $193. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William Knowland, of New York City, $193.17, being balance due for services as messenger to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, in the Forty-eighth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as is Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. There are one or two amendments to the preamble. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Indian Affairs report to amend the preamble in the second line by striking out the word "northwest" before "quarter," and inserting "northeast;" and in line 11 by striking out "Whiteside" and inserting "Whitestone;" so as to make the preamble read:

make the preamble read:

Whereas the following-described tracts of land, namely, the east half of the northeast quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, of section 29, in township 12, range 23 east; and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 5, and the south half of the southwest quarter, and the north half of the southwest quarter, and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 8, in township 13, range 22 east, in Johnson County, Kansas, and known as Absentee Shawnee Indian lands, were erroneously set apart and patents therefor improperly issued to Nancy Whitestone, George Silcambus, and Lewis Hayes, Shawnee Indians, who had previously received by patent from the United States the quantity of lands to which they were lawfully entitled; and

JAMES R. BERRY.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2441) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of James R. Berry, as late auditor of the State of Arkansas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "the," to insert "sum of $200 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being for;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to James R. ## WASHINGTON AND WESTERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of individual pension bills under Rule VIII.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator will let us go on for a few minutes Mr. SAWYER. I will yield for the present. It will take but ten minutes to dispose of the pension bills.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9418) to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That particular bill was called to my attention by the Senator from South Carolina not now in his seat, who sits nearest me [Mr. BUTLER], with the suggestion of sundry amendments which he thought were indispensable, and I think it ought to go over until his return

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish it to lose its place on the Calendar. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to object to the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do for the time being, because the Senator from South Carolina, not now here, called my attention to sundry points in the bill that needed important amendments, and I think the papers will show that those amendments were already drawn out. I do not think the bill ought to be disposed of until the Senator from South Carolina shall have the opportunity to be heard upon the subject.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course if the Senator from South Carolina desires to make any amendment, I have no objection to his having an opportunity of doing so, but I want to say to the Senator from Vermont that I understand this bill has been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia and recommitted and then reported again. It has been twice considered by the District Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know, but still I think it fair to the Senator from South Carolina that he should have an opportunity to be here when the bill is considered. The bill need not lose its place.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Vermont is aware of the fact that the Senator from South Carolina desires to amend the bill, of course I have no objection to its going over, but I do not wish it to lose its

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will allow us to have a short executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for pension bills.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for a

Mr. SAWYER. The Senator from Vermont will not yield for anything but pension bills. I understand the Senator from Florida merely wishes to move to recommit a bill. I give way for that purpose, but can not yield further.

RECOMMITMENT OF A BILL.

Mr. SAWYER. That bill has been objected to, and it can be passed over and we may come back to it. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objected to it before.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was only a question of an amendment. I have the amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length. The bill was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to restore Mrs. R. S. Horton, widow of Capt. William H. Seaton, late of Company D, Twentysixth Ohio Volunteers, to the pension-rolls.
